Many weeks later, the girl rides off alone on a little hunting trip among the snow-topped mountains. Her horse goes lame, stumbles and throws her. She is stunned and lies prostrate in the snow. Along comes the good half-breed with a sled drawn by a pack of dogs. The half-breed comes across the girl. He puts her on his sled and wraps her froz form in his own furs. He is almost naked. I runs on for miles, urging his dog pack. The chi cold is too much for him. His frozen sinews b come stiffened. At last his legs give way and l tumbles, frozen, into the snow, while the dogs car the sled to safety. A rescuing party later fin the Indian frozen on love's trail.

THANHOUSER.

AS IT WAS IN THE BEGINNING (Jan. 30). A society girl, admired and courted by many me is still indifferent to one and all. At a dance o evening there is introduced to her a man w shows that he is attracted by the girl, but unli the other suitors, he does not flatter her.

With her thoughts all of the stranger, she si alone, musing. It seems to her that she is carri backward many centuries to a time when by her su posed magic arts, she reigned over a tribe of ca men. But in her rude court one day there appear a stranger who derided her powers. The othe would have attacked him, but she stayed the hands the stranger walked off.

The stranger stirred up her heretofore loyal su jects to rebellion. They stormed her cave, b her magic was still potent and she drove them o But the stranger remained and finally took h prisoner, dragging her back to the village of t men who had once held her as a queen, whe they decided to put her to death. The strange however, balked their plans and told them that s belonged to him, and ordered them out of his wa When they tried to bar his progress, he fought h way through them and to safety in the wilderne outside, with her in his arms.

She comes back to a realization of the prese with a start. The stranger stands before her, a asks for the next dance. In a daze she rises a takes his arm, and walks with him toward t ballroom. And all the way the one thought running through her head: "I wonder if he is t man?"

For the stranger at the dance looked exact like the man who in the prehistoric past subjugat the goddess and fought the timid cave men, w first worshipped her and then wanted to put her death.

ON PROBATION (Feb. 2).—An old widower h a little granddaughter, and he earnestly desir that she should grow up to be a wealthy woma His only other near relatives were his sister a his son. His sister was maried, and with a b of her own, while his son was not naturally vicio but was lazy and shiftless.

It was destined that one of them should be t guardian of the tiny girl, and it seemed an ea matter to settle. The sister lavished affecti upon her little niece. So the old man made h will, just before starting on his yacht to lo after some business affairs.

The captain of the vessel broke the news to t family that the millionaire had been washed ov board and drowned at sea. His will was open and read. It made the sister the executrix of t estate, which was to be held in trust for five yea At the end of that time, the son, "if he had co mitted no dishonest act," was to receive one-ha the sister the other. Should the boy miscondu himself, everything went to the sister, who w also to bring up the little girl as her own. Un the estate was finally divided, the sister was provide a home for the boy and the girl.

Had the old man's spirit been able to revi the world, it would have been shocked at wh went on after his death was announced. For t sister discarded her sweet hypocritical ways, a made a drudge of the little girl. The child's t were taken away, she was banished from her be tifully furnished nursery, and sent to an at room, where night after night she sobbed hers to sleep. Her only friend was the son, who d veloped manly traits in time of trouble. T two were badly treated, but there seemed no esca for them.

Not content with half the fortune, the graspi sister plotted to get all of it. One dishonest on the boy's part would win the fortune for h He declined to commit it, so she artfully contri by a chain of evidence to make it out that was a thief.

The plot was successful, and when a policem put his hand on the young man's shoulders, realized that great wealth was hers. The n second she found that she had lost all.

For this particular lonely rich old man had fou a way to correct a vital error. He had reaso out how it could be done, and there were no fla in his plans.

The sister he had trusted failed him, but was not permitted to enjoy the fruits of her trea ery. The son, who had developed into a man, un the stress of misfortune, came into a fortune. time, and the little girl did grow up to be happy woman.

pl[illegible] the intervention of the pretty da[illegible] a ranchman. Several months elapse, and [illegible] work Jim is promoted to the position of [illegible] The boss goes away and directs Jim to deliver a check to a neighboring ranchman as commission on a cattle sale. The neighbor refuses to accept the check, stating there is a run on the bank. Jim verifies this, and gallops home, and finds from the account and check books that the boss has nearly $10,000—his entire fortune—in the tottering institution. A wild idea seizes him, and a tremendous conflict of emotion is depicted, including a dissolving scene of Jim in convict's garb, manacled in his cell. The sight of the tearful girl whom he loves decides him, and he forges a check for the entire amount of the deposit. By hard riding, he gets to the bank at five minutes to three. The mad mob, fighting for preference, tries to keep him out, but he tears through them with the fury of a maniac, gets to the paying teller's window, forces payment of the check and goes to the ranch, where he secrets the money on the mantel. With breaking heart he writes a farewell letter to the ranchman, telling him the story and that he must know no one but an expert forger could have turned the trick. A pathetic scene takes place as the rancher returns, believing himself bankrupt, and is met by his daughter. The film closes with a magnificent scenic view at break of day, showing clearly the rising sun illuminating the sparkling water and casting its warm rays upon Jim's bent figure as he moodily plods along seeking a place of abode to which the curse of his past career will not follow.

THE HONOR OF THE TRIBE (Jan.16).—The Crow chief makes a friendly visit to the Cheyenne village, and is received with pomp and ceremony. Blue Feather, the squaw of the Cheyenne chief, falls in love with the Crow and coquets with him, but he spurns her advances. A Cheyenne brave, who has spied upon her, reports her actions, and to uphold the honor of the tribe she is condemned to death. She manages to release herself from her bonds and in a sensational scene destroys herself.

RELIANCE.

THE DECEPTION (Jan. 24).—Walter secretly marries a sweet little girl beneath his station in life, against his father's commands. Walter is injured in his father's factory, and his pleadings to have his wife brought to him discloses the secret. The father finds an envelope addressed to the girl in his son's handwriting, and schemes to break the attachment. He writes a check for $5,000, which he seals in the envelope and delivers to the girl with the statement that his son does not wish to see her any more and wants to make a cash settlement. The girl indignantly throws the check on the floor and declines to accept the propositon. Walter is told that his wife has refused to come to him, and in his helpless condition is unable to find out the truth. The boy's health does not improve, and the doctor tells the father that it is owing to his having lost all interest in life. The check comes back, having been cashed, and the father believes the girl is really mercenary and has accepted the settlement. However, to save his son's life he seeks her out. He finds that her father has compelled her to endorse the check and has taken the money, and recognizing her true worth he humbly apologizes for his deception and brings her to his home, to minister to her husband.

THE LITTLE DARKIES (Jan. 27).—This is a pictorial dramatization of the well-known nursery rhyme, "Ten Little Niggers," which is faithfully followed. The adventures of the ten little darkies are depicted in a most laughable manner, making a unique and entertaining subject.

ROSANNA'S DREAM (Jan. 27).—Little Rosanna falls asleep while playing with the toy animals in the ark, and dreams that a fairy appears and endows them with life. Many peculiar and interesting little animals are shown, and Rosanna plays with them fearlessly. This is the second subject of the Natural History series.

GREAT NORTHERN.

A FRIEND TO CHILDREN (Jan. 27).—An eccentric character passing by a residence in which an Amazon is beating the dust from the drawing-room furniture, assumes that some little child is being punished, and mounting the stairs, he bounds into the room, finds the woman with the beater in her hand, and a child uttering plaintive wails. A struggle ensues in which our friend comes off second best. Going into the street, he next befriends a man who has imbibed too well. A melee ensues, and eventually Smith finds himself hauled off to the police station, where he is fined $5 before he is a free man again. A woman who is doing her washing attracts his attention, and his well-meant interference brings upon his head a bucket of soap-suds. Outside, a circus in which a boxing contest is in progress, the sound of blows falls upon Smith's ears, and his further investigations once more have disastrous results. We now see him at home, a sorrowful sight. Yet even now his kindness is not exhausted, for seeing a howling mob of youngsters outside his window, he prepares a treat for them. The commissariat is exhausted, and when his friends turn upon him, he comes to the conclusion that ungratefulness is the world's compensation for charity.

There's good news for you on page 266

THE MAN WITH THE PUPPETS (Jan. 27).—The proprietor of a puppet show arrives with his properties and proceeds to rehearse the performance. Whilst he plays the violin the puppets gyrate gracefully and pirouette. But suddenly they take flight. The man pursues them, and when he comes up to them finds only their clothes. These he puts into his taxi, but as fast as he throws the clothes in at one door, the owners again inhabit them and walk out at the other. Distracted, he returns home and is seized with a grand idea. Opening the window he plays the violin when the puppets all come back and jump into their basket again. He slams down the lid and thus is again in possession of his own.

GAUMONT.

HEAVEN'S MESSENGER (Feb. 3).—The Miller's daughter, quite against his approval, expresses her determination to marry the swain of her choice. The mother's leniency and the daughter's entreatries all prove in vain, and the daughter is driven from the parental roof. With her scanty pack on her back, she resorts to the house of her lover, Julian, where she finds sympathy and open hospitality. The two marry and live at the husban's home. The wife's mother steals secret visits to the house where her daughter lives so happily, and when a child is born, tries to devise schemes to effect a reconciliation with the inexorable Miller. She proposes placing the child in its cradle and floating it down the stream to the mill. Like the Moses of the Bible, the infant is set afloat and drifts to the dam which supplies the even flow of water that runs the mill. The stern father discovers the child, brings it to his home, all touched with sympathy. The art of the mother reveals the identity of the child with all grand motherly tact, and the heart of the man is touched. He mitigates, and forgives his daughter with the willingness that assures her the happy relations that she so sorely sought.

MAJESTIC.

A MOTHER'S SACRIFICE (Jan. 6).—Elizabeth Morton is called upon by Herbert Harman, the executor of her late husband's will, saying it states that, Betty, her daughter, is to be educated at the Sacred Heart Convent, in France. After Betty has been a year abroad, moved more by passion for the widow's loneliness than love, Harman proposes to Mrs. Morton. She requests him to wait a year until Betty returns from school, and if their feelings are then the same, she will consent to marry him.

In the meantime, Betty has blossomed into a beautiful bud of womanhood and the three years prescribed by her father's will having passed, she returns to her home and mother.

Her mother has prepared a surprise for her in the shape of her first long dress. Betty goes into girlish raptures over its beauty. While the girl is admiring her own reflection in the hall mirror, her mother allows Harman to place the engagement ring upon her finger, and tells him that for the first time since her husband's death, she will put on a light dress, and discard her mourning.

Betty bursts upon Harman and tries to captivate this tall, rather mature man.

As the days go on, Harman realizes that on the very day he engaged himself to the mother, he lost his heart to the daughter. The girl is never told of the engagement, and the moment of decision comes to the mother, when her daughter kneels beside her, telling that she not only admires Harman, but feels that she has grown to love him. The mother knows well Harman's fineness of character, and that he will fulfill to the letter his engagement promise.

The mother frees Harman from the engagement and places her daughter's hand in his, and leaves them building their "air castles" together.

POWERS

BILLY'S SURRENDER (Jan. 30).—This film was scheduled for an earlier date but the special split reel crowded it out so that the release date was postponed. The story is a gripping tale of the regeneration of men who the police say have no hearts but this is one time where the patience and earnestness of a girl won out and the best the game could give her in return was a grand collection of pistols, bludgeons, knives, blackjacks and other such persuaders.

THE EXPLORER (Feb. 3).—Little old Cupid is the champion globe-trotter of the world. Although his subjects may travel thousands of miles away from one another, he is king of every domain and the universe is his chariot. One of those little incidents which happen in everyday life makes two people believe that they are lost to one anothe and the girl gives the young explorer up for los but he attains fame and at an Embassy ball h comes face to face with her. The explanation make the path clear to both, but he is too late to clai his love from the Grim Reaper, for while the musi is playing and the dancers are swaying, he look into her eyes for the last time.

FILM STORIES.

THE LONESOME TRAIL (Plantation, Jan. 15).—In Nevada, there lived John Billings, a miner, and his daughter Bessie. One day John fell into the well and was killed. Jack Rawlins and Bill Snyder took the body to the little orphaned child. Two years later Jack and Bill fell in love with her, but she preferred Jack. Then the mine gave out and the boys decided to go prospecting. On their way across the desert Bill fell from exhaustion. Jack took him home where they met Bessie. She kissed them both, one for Bill as a farewell, for he had decided to go back over the trail after the gold they found there.

ONE GOOD TURN DESERVES ANOTHER (Rose, Jan. 16).—Mabel was very fond of feeding the chickens. One day her papa gave her a pet dove and told her not to let it out of its cage. But Mabel did not obey and away it flew. A tramp came and begged for food. Mabel gave him some. Mabel started out to find the bird, which was caught by the tramp who followed. He put it back into the cage and thus saved Mabel from a scolding.

FROM TRIESTE TO MIRA MARA (Camerio, Jan. 16).—This subject gives graphic views of sunsets, sunrises, sunrays, fleecy clouds, etc. Also views of Mira Mara to Trieste which are very picturesque and will hold the attention of any audience.

AN EXPEDITION TO GREENLAND (Federal, Jan. 17).—First we see the coast line for a distance of about three to five miles. Then we see our Esquimaux pilot pacing the deck. Nearer shore we watch Esquimaux seal hunters in their native Kajaks or canoes. Then they indulge in some aquatic pastimes. Sitting upright in their tiny cockle shell boats they give a swift turn and in a second revolve over and under the water and bob up serenely once more, all dripping with the icy HELEN DOES HER WASHING (Federal, Jan. 17).—Mary has been doing the Monday's wash while Helen imitates her with her doll's tub and clothes. Mary is called out by her lover. The temptation is too strong for Helen and she meddles with everything in sight, causing a great deal of trouble. Helen's mother returns home in time to punish the wrong doer, when Mary's fond lover lies off.

THE WISDOM OF BROTHER AMBROSE (Hepwix, Jan. 18).—Brother Ambrose, who is sent out upon his mule for some money, falls asleep on the way back and is held up by highwaymen. He begs them to shoot holes in his cloak so that he may tell a valiant story on his return home. They do so, and when their pistols are unloaded, Brother Ambrose draws his pistol and drives the miscreants to the monestary where they are dealt with accordingly.

BERLIN'S FIRE DEPARTMENT IN ACTION (Deutsches Biograph—Jan. 28).—We see a Berlin fire battalion rush into action, all of which is motor-driven. They rush to the training station, where the firemen scale a building, built for such practice. We see a company ascend the extensive ladders, play their hoses, and descend. We see a water-tower raised and ladders placed in position. Then arrives the Chief. He carries a sword, as he is also an army officer.

IN THE TIME OF SERFDOM (Deutsches Biograph—Jan. 28).—We see the wooing and marriage of a pair of peasant folk. After their wedding the son of the reigning prince decides to take the bride. He breaks into her house and captures her. In defense he slays her assailant. His father is warned and he comes with help and discovers the dead body of his son. The bride rushes off in fear, caused by her awful experience.

THE VAMPIRE (Messter—Jan. 28).—A young millionaire, after his meeting with a vampire woman, dreams that she comes to him at his apartment and scorns the riches he throws at her feet. He writhes in agony until, falling to the floor, he awakens to realize it is all a dream. Then he passes her picture out of his mind and becomes a sensible man again.

MAD THROUGH LOVE (Savoy—Jan. 27).—Signora Rampello looks out over the waves. A fisherlad passes, at whom she smiles. Piedro has a sweetheart, but he forgets her. One evening Signor Rampello walks along the beach, his wife by his side. Piedro rushes to her, but is pushed aside. He plunges into the sea. His mother sees him make the plunge, but his father rushes forth and rescues him.

BALKED (Deutsches Bioscope—Jan. 27).—Marie Glatz is the wife of a libertine, who deserts her for another. In her distraction she attempts suicide and fails, for Doctor Steller happens to be passing and takes her to his sanitarium, where she recovers her health. Then one night Marie's husband comes. She goes with him and robs the doctor's house, who is led to believe that she is his accomplice. Marie loses the friendship of the Doctor and is forced to return to the man she so hated.

DUSTY GETS A SHOCK (Cricks & Martin—Jan. 26).—Dusty, a hobo, lies down for a nap right in the middle of the sidewalk and Constable Jones has to rap him pretty hard to waken him. Then he gets into trouble with an electrician, and the many other amusing incidents that he goes through make this film an excellent comedy.

SAVED BY A CHILD (Cricks & Martin—Jan. 26).—Madeline's papa is a doctor, and one night Mr. Jenks calls with his jewels, which are entrusted to the doctor's care. Madeline's nurse is a thief, and she plans with her sweetheart to steal the jewels. They decoy the doctor from home. Then they overpower his wife and try to force her to tell where the jewels are hidden. She refuses. Madeline is awakened, and seizing a gun forces both to sit on the sofa until papa returns. He does, and both nurse and her friend are arrested.

A TRAIL OF SAND (Hepwix—Jan. 25).—A workman succeeds in getting the money bag and making off with it. He jumps on the back of a cart laden with bags of sand. A pursuer runs after it and cuts the last bag, so that a trail of sand is left in its wake. By this means the cart is traced to its journey's end and here a company of Boy Scouts surround the thief and make him prisoner.

TRACKED BY TIGER (Hepwix—Jan. 25).—Tiger is a big St. Bernard dog. Bunny is a little chap. Bunny is taken from home in the absence of his mistress. Tiger follows the robber to the railroad station and there he makes his intentions known to the guards and is permitted to occupy a compartment all to himself. He rides on to the town, where the thief got off and again takes up the trail. After many experiences, he rescues his little pal and carries him back home.

THE LITTLE FARMER (Mondia—Jan. 24).—Weenie Gretchen's mamma is taken sick. She feels sorely the neglect of the farm and the household and starts in to set things right. Weenie, who is only four years old, drives to the village and gets the doctor. Then she mixes the prescription and orders the help about, thus keeping the household in good order while her mamma is sick.

QUEEN OF HEARTS (Washington—Jan. 25).—Paul lives in the West with his sister Mary. Mary managed to save enough money to send for mother to come on and she writes her mother that the money will soon follow. Paul gets into a game of cards and is "trimmed" of his all, so he steals sister's savings. He loses it and kills himself. Mary learns of the death from the gambler. Mary falls in love with the gambler and they are about to wed. Then the sheriff is told to be on the watchout for a crook with a queen of hearts tattooed on his arm. In a card game he catches the gambler, but is worsted in the fight. Mary meets the man who goes to her home and here it is that the sheriff and he have their fight. When she learns how her brother had met his death, she drives the gambler from the house.

DIDUM'S BATHING MACHINE (Clarendon—Jan. 24).—Didum's papa goes in bathing. The nurse goes off for a stroll and Didum steals papa's clothes, and after hitching a donkey to the bathhouse, with papa inside, he drives to the County Fair. Before any trouble starts the nurse arrives and takes Didum home, where he is given a good spanking.

GETTING DAD'S CONSENT (Clarendon—Jan. 24).—Myrtle and Philip were in love. Myrtle had a daddy who did not favor Philip. When daddy locked her in her room and told her she would have to wed Sir Percy, Myrtle rebelled and tossed a note to Phil to rescue her, which he did.

On the day of her wedding, Phil rushed her from the coach and placed her in his motor boat. They reached the clergyman, but he would not wed them for lack of a certificate and daddy caught up. Then Philip bored a hole in daddy's rowboat and when the old gentleman and Myrtle put out to the church, the boat filled rapidly and sunk. Philip rescued Myrtle, but left dad in the water to drown, with the alternative of giving his consent to their marriage, which he did.

THE STRIKE BREAKER (Deutsches Biograph—Jan. 23).—The daughter of a strike breaker became the sweetheart of the rich factory owner's son. The fellow workers of the girl's father thought the young man was wronging her and told him so. In rage he fought his way through the mob about the works, got to the boss and told his tale. The financier called his son and together they went to the workman's home, where the matter was adjusted. The poor father knew that the love of the pair was an honest love and thus did this love end the conflict, and the strike came to an ending.

HER SACRIFICE WAS HER SALVATION (Rose—Jan. 23).—Sarah Joyce was a widow who had saved a little money. John Bellows had long been out of work. His wife lay at death's door and his child was starving. John was tempted and he robbed poor Mrs. Joyce. He was caught in the act, but he gave back the money. Then Sarah told him how twenty years before she had gone through just such an experience. John returned to his wife, secured the services of a doctor and fed his little one. Time passed on, he worked on a farm, won the farm as his own and on the anniversary of his being aided by Mrs. Joyce he sent her a nice snug allowance, with a promise to continue the remittance to her death, which he did.

HAWKEYE LEARNS TO PUNT (Hepwix—Jan. 22).—Hawkeye observes a party of girls and chaps going on a picnic party, being conveyed in a punt to a flat-bottomed boat, and he decides to follow them. But as he has never punted before, he meets with catastrophies galore. He gets thoroughly drenched, aside from wetting many others whom he knocks into, and at last his boat sinks and he is left amid stream in a sorry plight.

THE FOREIGN SPY (Hepwix—Jan. 22).—Sailor Jack's sweetheart is a bit of a flirt and her attentions to Mr. Beauxcour are not pleasing him. Jack, however, discovers that Mr. Beauxcour is a spy and has been drawing plans of the British fortifications. Jack and Monsieur fight it out, and Jack is overpowered and bound and left for the tide to wash him out to sea. Then the Frenchman decoys Mabel, and she, too, is overpowered and placed in a rowboat and taken from the shore. She puts up a wonderful fight and knocks Monsieur and his companion into the water, rows back to land and rescues her lover.

THE COWARD (Clarendon—Jan. 22).—Major George Bulwark, of His Majesty's Grenadiers, called at the home of Henry Clay Gillwater just after his father had decided to place the youth in the army. The Major told a thrilling story of a hazardous encounter with Zulus, in which he had recently engaged. The story worked upon the nerves of young Henry so that he cringed in mortal fear of what would come to him should he be forced into such a skirmish, and he shot his foot in order to disable himself.

He was seen by the Major and his sweetheart, and the Major refused to tell his father how the accident happened, and the girl upbraided him and told him to buck up and pull himself together. He went to the front and saved the life of the wounded Major.

I INVITED SOME FRIENDS TO DINNER

RECENTLY, WHICH WAS TO BE READY AT 6.30 P.M. OWING TO AN INFERIOR GAS RANGE WHICH WAS IN THE APARTMENT WHEN I MOVED IN, WE WERE TWO HOURS LATE IN SITTING DOWN TO THE TABLE. IMAGINE MY WIFE'S FEELINGS, MY EMBARRASSMENT, AND MY GUESTS' UNSATisfied HUNGER.

YOU CAN BET I THREW OUT "THE DEAD ONE" THE NEXT DAY, BOUGHT A NEW UP-TO-DATE GAS RANGE, AND NOW NOT ONLY ARE MY MEALS COOKED ON TIME, BUT MY GAS BILLS ARE ONE-THIRD LESS, AND I HAVE NO APOLOGIES TO MAKE TO MY FRIENDS FOR DELAYS.

THE SAME ARGUMENT APPLIES TO YOUR SO-CALLED CURRENT SAVER OR RHEOSTAT. IT MAY AFTER A FASHION SERVE THE PURPOSE, BUT WHY PAY MORE MONEY for YOUR ELECTRIC BILLS THAN IS NECESSARY, AND PUT UP WITH INFERIOR LIGHT, WHEN "THE HALLBERG ECONOMIZER" IS AT YOUR COMMAND NOT ONLY TO SAVE THE MOST MONEY ON ELECTRIC BILLS, BUT AT THE SAME TIME PRODUCE THE BEST LIGHT ON YOUR SCREEN THAT CAN BE HAD? INSTALL "THE HALLBERG," PLEASE YOUR PATRONS AND PUT YOUR COMPETITORS IN THE SHADE.

in a picture thrown upon a

"Perfection Concave Screen"

It is impossible as every ray of light is taken care of in such a manner that they all reach the surface of the screen at exactly the same distance from the lens.

This desirable result is impossible to obtain from a flat surface regardless of what kind of material it is made.

Does the difference between a distorted picture and one that cannot be otherwise than ABSOLUTELY UNIFORM, DISTINCT and TRUE as to outline and perspective appeal to you?

INTRODUCING DICK TO THE DAWSON FAMILY

COWBOY vs. TENDERFOOT

Dick is but newly arrived in the West. He and Jose both love Triss Dawson madly. It is not known which of the two Triss and her father favor. Soon Mr. Dawson is found dead, clasping part of a note of warning signed by Dick. Logically all eyes turn to Dick as a murderer, and Jose, even knowing certain facts, allows them to believe so. But neither rival is a murderer, and therein lies a story brimming with thrill and unexpected situations from start to finish.

"PUT MONEY IN THY PURSE"

SHAKESPEARE DIDN'T SAY THIS WITH REGARD TO POWER'S CAMERAGRAPH No. 6
THO' HE COULD HAVE, WERE HE ALIVE TODAY

And we might add that as Shakespeare produced the best plays of his or any other age, so the best product today in the Moving Picture Machine Industry is POWER'S CAMERAGRAPH No. 6.

The best is the only thing you can afford; competition is keen and if you don't get it the other fellow will, with the result that he will play to full houses; for the public is wise to POWER'S No. 6, and knows it to be the only Moving Picture Machine which gives perfect results.

We are the pioneers in this industry, and our fourteen years' experience and skill have enabled us to produce this machine, which is built for wear and tear, is guaranteed for a year and projects a picture absolutely without flicker.

OUR REPUTATION IS BEHIND THIS MACHINE; and we repeat that a POWER'S No. 6 in your house will surely "put money in thy purse,"

4 FEATURES YOU MUSTN'T MISS—CHECK 'EM AS YOU GET 'EM

RELEASED TUESDAY, FEB. 6
"Getting-Rich-Quick" as it is.

THE TROUBLE-MAKER

Another "Make-You-Think" film! We're getting a reputation on THESE ALONE. And this last one is the most powerful and pointed in the whole series. It takes up the question of sudden wealth—shows that it doesn't ALWAYS bring happiness. The story is very interesting—it is very EVERYDAY, very TRUE-TO-LIFE. You've heard of many like it and you've often wished they were filmed.

RELEASED FRIDAY, FEB. 9
In which a Warship Fleet was used.

THE SIGNAL CODE

This, you know, is the first of our features "In February." Many a manufacturer who could grab a squadron of battleships to use in a picture would issue that picture as a special release. But WE put it out as a "regular"—a Friday "regular"—so that YOU can book it easily and TO-DAY! Don't get in line when the crowd stretches clear around the block.

Is your Exchange out of Three-Sheet Posters for "DR. JEKYLL AND MR. HYDE" and "EAST LYNNE"?

For a small sum you can secure from your exchange three-sheet posters for "Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde," and "East Lynne." The supply of these posters is limited and it is requested that you give your exchange NOW an idea of how many you will require. But if your exchange's supply is exhausted, write us direct and we will take care of you from here.

A Comedy on the Same Reel "Mr. PIDDIE REBELS" VERY FUNNY

This Fowler release is a very sensational feature and shows something that has never been attempted before in the history of filmdom. It's distinctly a startling novelty when you can see the country from the same angle as an aviator can, and all for the price of five or ten cents. It's a luxury to see such marvels at the price of a nickel; but stop and think of the cost to us—aye, the enormous cost—to successfully carry out such an unusual venture.

BIGGEST FRONTIER PICTURE EVER PRODUCED

Perfect Photography

Wonderful Fire Scene

One and Three Sheet Posters in Four Colors

THE BATTLE

is sensational. The emigrants are seen fighting the hordes of redskins in wonderfully staged scenes. The hero rides to the settlement for help and engages in a thrilling duel with pursuing Indians. The settlers swoop down on the unprotected Indian village and burn it up. The savages seeing the flames hurry back and fall into an ambush. They are attacked from the rear by the emigrants and from the front by the settlers. In a wild scene of carnage the surprised Indians are mowed down by the hail of bullets, horses and riders falling in tangled masses.

THE PLOT

has been constructed to bring out dramatic rendition. From the standpoint of spectacularism alone, with the tremendous cost, the army of Indians and the great number of horses and cattle, as well as the stirring battle scenes, this subject would be recorded in the annals of motographic history as one of the greatest films the world has ever seen. When the splendid dramatic rendition is also taken into consideration "WAR ON THE PLAINS" will be considered by many the most magnificent production ever conceived. It simply overwhelms with its grandeur.

LOVE VS. STRATEGY

A vigorous story of the contest between two persevering young men who contest for the love of a charming girl and also for a big business deal which will assist their fortune. The one fights fairly and wins out, the other resorts to tricks and is beaten in the game. The proverb that "All is fair in love and war" is shown to be a mistake.

Released, Saturday, February 3d, 1912
Length about 1000 feet

THE IMPOSTOR

Young Lord Crowley is on a liner bound for America to marry his cousin, Rose Conway, who has never seen him. He falls in with George West, an adventurer. On arrival, they put up at the same hotel. In the night West tries to rob the young nobleman, but is discovered, and in the encounter Crowley is struck on the head, and for a while loses his reason. West impersonates the young Lord, and is about to marry Rose when the real Lord appears with health restored.

Released, Thursday, February 1st, 1912
Length about 1000 feet

A PHYSICIAN'S HONOR

Dr. Henry Cole is engaged to Emily Ives, a rich society girl. He is about to take his fiancee to a ball when a hasty call is made for him to attend the sick child of a poor family. Realizing his duty, he tells the young lady they must give up the function, to which she strenuously objects. The doctor, however, does his duty, and the young lady finally admits she was wrong.

Released, Monday, February 5th, 1912

A CURE FOR JEALOUSY

Bob was insanely jealous of his beautiful wife; he thought everybody wanted to steal her. Jack Nevin and his young wife visits the Pettibones, and Bob's wife sets up a desperate flirtation with the guest, just to cure her husband; there is war for a few minutes and then everybody has the laugh on Pettibone, who is fairly cured of his foolishness.

INDIAN ROMEO AND JULIET.

TUESDAY JANUARY 30th.

Miss Turner

Shakespeare's Romeo and Juliet is great; the Indian version of it makes a superb picture of sublime art and dramatic finish—exquisitely impressive in majestic scenery and tableaux.

A TIMELY RESCUE.

WEDNESDAY JANUARY 31th.

In the nick of time, a soldier in the Boer War, on the field of battle, saves the life of a young man he wronged. He loses his life in the daring deed; before he dies he confesses the injustice done the man he rescued, and asks his forgiveness, hoping he has made amends for the wrong.

Facts and Comments

WE observe with pleasure that the Educational Department of the General Film Company has just issued a catalogue of educational motion pictures. Madame Dolese, who is the guiding spirit of the Educational Department, has made good use of her talents and experience as a teacher in the compilation of this catalogue, and we would like to see a copy of it in the hands of every exhibitor. Of course, the catalogue is not primarily intended for the exhibitor, but we know of no agency in the business better calculated to make it of immediate and practical value than the exhibitor, to whom, especially in the smaller communities, teachers would be most apt to turn for information as to possible educational programs. Not only is the catalogue well put together, but it is an attractive looking little booklet in a neat and original typographical dress. The illustrations are well chosen and add to the merits of the book.

It seems to us that the booklet is the best argument for Sunday exhibitions of moving pictures. There are six distinct programs suggested, but more could easily be made up from the pictures contained in the catalogue, of which there are about four hundred. There is no reason whatever why exhibitors could not show such programs on Sundays and be sure of the best kind of an audience, winning by such exhibitions the most desirable elements in the community. These new Sunday programs offer especial facilities for good and effective advertising, of which the Advertising Suggestions in the MOVING PICTURE WORLD will no doubt take notice in due time. In support of proposed legislation allowing Sunday shows, nothing more persuasive could be imagined than this booklet. A free distribution of them among legislators would bring about a better and truer view of the beneficent possibilities of the motion picture than a lengthy argument of words. The compilation and printing of the catalogue is a distinct achievement, and the first practical and tangible step in furtherance of the educational movement.

THE severe losses of gallery patronage has often been the subject of lamentation by theatrical managers. Reading the signs of the times and looking their dangers full in the face, which, by the way, is always the best course, some managers, in order to prevent further inroads by the motion picture of quality, have reduced the price of balcony and family circle seats from seventy-five to fifty cents. It is said that in all instances where such a reduction was made an increase of patronage resulted immediately. The step having proved so wise and popular, other managers are preparing to follow suit. This concession to the public is the first manifestation shown by managers in some months. It is a direct result of the improved motion picture. It is likewise a notice and warning to film-makers to maintain the highest possible standard in the quality of their pictures. The theatre with a lower scale of prices is a very formidable rival indeed.

Just now, however, the picture as a popular attraction is very much in the ascendant, and is causing the most radical changes in theatres all over the country. As an instance we cite two cases that are quite typical. Th Park Theatre in Bridgeport, Conn., devoted for man years to high-class drama and legitimate attractions the best kind, has within the last few days been change into a moving picture house, and the Grand Opera Hous in New Haven, Conn., is to play its last big attractio within a few days to become a photoplay theatre. A other case is well known in the recent history of amus ments in the city of Boston. In the city named one the largest theatres, and one of the best located one had been meeting with uninterrupted financial disaste until it was changed into a picture theatre, and in th very first month showed a balance on the right side the ledger. Objections by the owners of the buildin forced the management afterwards to go back into legi imate attractions.

Of course, we wish nothing more ardently than a co tinuation of this prosperity and progress; but it is we to remember that in the world of amusements nothing more permanent than constant change, and it would sheer folly on the part of the manufacturers to presum on the growing power of the picture over the popula mind and deteriorate in quality. We know that many a striving to improve a standard which is quite high, b others are lagging sadly in the procession.

OUR recent animadversions about the inferiority the European film, when compared to the Amer can product, have aroused a storm of protest all our esteemed European contemporaries. We have ha in mind, when we published our opinions, the averag quality, and it was the average which we used as th basis of comparison. We distinctly stated that both Ital and, especially, France produced films of superior mer Reading our article again we find we were well within th facts in expressing preference for the American averag quality, and feel we must stand by every word we utter We may, however, say in this connection that every one our European contemporaries has steadily and conscie tiously worked for the uplift and the moral and mater betterment of the industry, and that the inferiority of th European film is surely not due to the motion pictu journals. On the contrary, it may justly be said that a of our contemporaries in Europe are most ably edite and it is always a pleasure to read them. The movin picture art has struck its roots into every part of th world and is indeed a distinctly international amusemen

FOR the first time in the history of the motion pictu the governor of a sovereign State has appeare before a moving picture audience and lectured a picture. The governor of Oregon, Oswald West, d livered a lecture on the reel, showing the trip the gover ors of Western States made recently to the East. The mo important incidents of this memorable journey were r corded in films by an enterprising and prominent man facturer. Governor West spoke on these films before crowded house at the People's Theater at Portlan It is said that his lecture was thoroughly appreciated the audience and the governor himself was well please with his new task. The proceeds of the entertainme e devoted to charitable ends. THE MOVING PICTURE RLD has always insisted that the lecture is an essential important part of the right kind of moving picture rtainment and Governor West showed himself to be an of keen perception to realize its possibilities so pletely and to carry them into practise so quickly. ly but surely the importance of the lecture is being gnized and we do not wonder at this present emphatic gnition in the West, which is the home of progress. xhibitors were as quick-witted as Governor West a ly of capable men would not be lacking to meet the and in a short time.

"Sumurun," The Wordless Play.

As Viewed by a M. P. Man.

ROFESSOR Max Reinhardt, the author of the wordless play with music, assuredly has a message for the moving picture fraternity and all of us; ufacturers, exhibitors and even critics may read the sage with profit. A man capable of holding a big ence, above the average in point of culture and re- nent, for a space of more than two hours without g one single spoken word, is worth analyzing.

Sumurun" is nothing more than a pantomime, and the ent revival of pantomime is undoubtedly due to the ence the motion picture has had upon the public in ast ten years. Consciously or unconsciously the pub- vere prepared for such a revival by the vogue of the oplay. If we are willing to look at the photographs pantomime with the added element of motion, we even more willing to look at the originals of the ographs and at the very source of the motion. In g this I fully realize that the photoplay is not in the test technical sense of the word a pantomime, but it is ntomime for the purposes of this comparison. The dless play of "Sumurun" is essentially guided by the e principles and governed by the same technique as lay, which is enacted before the camera in the studio he film-maker. "What, then," you will ask, "would the result if a camera-man were to photograph urun' just as it is played and the films would be bited as motion pictures before the general public?" many reasons the result would be a horrible failure. e first place "Sumurun" depends in no small measure ight effects, which cannot very well be reproduced in ographs, and in the second place the Board of Cen- hip or the police would step in with an edict of pro- ion. On the night of its first presentation in New k there were scenes, especially some scenes toward the that left very little to the imagination. Pantomime much more eloquent than mere words. The chief ction, however, would have to be raised against the rio. No scenario editor now living would ever get nd the synopsis. It takes about twenty thousand ls to describe the "plot" or "plots," and no living n could possibly understand one-tenth of the stuff first or second reading.

umurun" is a subject that does not lend itself well lucidation by gestures and looks. It is involved, as "Arabian Tales" or their imitations are, and the ntal taste, the Oriental imagination, the Oriental eye, radically different from the taste, the imagination and eye of the Western world. The people of the Far (please do not understand me as speaking of Bos- require far less in a plot than we do. They do not t on clearness or conciseness; on the contrary, they k a good story is spoiled if the denouement is too and logical, and like it better as long as things con- e in a haze. Why a producer of pantomime should ntarily assume the handicap of an Oriental subject it is hard to understand. Opportunities for splendid pantomime lie scattered all through the fields of classic literature, including modern plays in abundance. "Sumurun" is a play indeed without words, and with but very few ideas.

The most valuable lesson to be drawn from the success of "Sumurun" is in the music. The music supplied the need of words in a most acceptable manner. It was written for that very purpose. Without music the play would have been unendurable; the few brief moments when the music was suspended were almost oppressive.

The motion picture, after all, has nothing to fear from the wordless play with music. The latter will make converts to the former; it will create a taste for the silent play wherever shown. We could name a dozen feature films in less than a dozen minutes that are the equals in every respect of "Sumurun."

What a splendid director Max Reinhardt would make for a first-class moving picture studio—with all due deference to the many capable and industrious directors at present actually pursuing their arduous vocation.

Special Censorship for Children's Pictures.

By W. STEPHEN BUSH.

OUR national habits and characteristics are strongly reflected in the conduct and control of the motion picture industry. We rarely grapple with an evil until it threatens to escape from all control. In theory we believe in the wisdom of spending the penny for prevention rather than the pound for the cure, but in practise we spend the pounds. We let the fine, valuable picture exist together with the vile and degrading, and our efforts to separate the wheat from the tares are uncertain, sporadic and as a rule ineffective.

No more burning problem confronts the friends of the motion picture to-day than the question of the admission of children under sixteen years. In some States the law forbids the admission of minors without proper guardianship; in others it absolutely prohibits the attendance of minors. Neither method of regulation is or ever can be effective. To exclude children absolutely is a hardship and a manifest injustice; to insist on their being accompanied by parents or guardians does not go to the root of the matter.

Here is what seems to be the only sensible, practical solution of the problem: Admit children only at certain times, whether they are alone or with older persons, and subject every picture shown during the hours for children to a special and more severe scrutiny. We cannot get away from the fact that most of the enemies of the moving pictures dwell on the tremendous influence the picture has on the young mind. While the mind is in its formative state the senses are most readily and profoundly affected, and that is the reason why the picture makes a far deeper impression on the child than on the adult. All censorship should be guided by this principle. There must be one kind of censorship to pass on pictures to be shown to audiences consisting of grown-up spectators and another kind of censorship to pass on pictures which are to be seen by children as well as by adults. This important principle and difference is recognized in almost every European country, and the effects are found to be all that could be desired. It is a splendid tribute to the tact and intelligence of the exhibiting branch of the industry that many exhibitors in this country have within the limits of their power adopted some plan of this kind. They refuse to admit children after a certain hour at night and often eliminate certain pictures from the matinee program, because they are not suitable for the eyes of children.

Let us see how this plan has worked in practise in the German Empire, where this twofold censorship is and has been maintained for some time: Among the releases passed upon by the police censors between the first and twenty-second of December, 1911, 15 out of about 250 were ordered suppressed entirely, while 60 were put under the ban for exhibitions attended by children. The edicts of the censors are published in the official journal of the police department, and the objectionable scenes are mentioned in detail, with the grounds of the objection.

It goes without saying that we do not approve of the police censorship in any form. Censorship should be entrusted to a high order of intelligence only. The illustration we have given does, however, plainly show the advantages of a double censorship, one for children's performances and one for pictures that may be seen by grown-up persons only.

Incidentally it is a tribute to the splendid work of our censors here that out of the 15 films put on the index purgatorius by the German police only two are American reels, and out of the 60 interdicted during the hours for children, only 15 are of American make. All the rest of the forbidden pictures are of European manufacture. This showing makes it plain how well justified was our recent remark that the picture was on a much higher level here than in Europe. It must be remembered in this connection that more than 60 per cent. of the Eureopean market is supplied by American film producers.

Exchange and Theater Owncrship.

In the evolution of the moving picture industry, thus far, experience has shown that the renting and exhibiting departments should be kept separate, so far as the ownership of exchanges and theaters is concerned. In other words, it is better for the progress and success of the industry that the man who owns or manages an exchange should not own nor control nor be interested in picture theaters, in his territory.

The rental department is one of service and not of domination; the exhibiting department, as the consumer of the product, is always on the lookout for a square deal, and is often so exacting that it will not recognize the square deal when offered.

If A owns an exchange, it matters not how honest or fair-dealing he may be, exhibitors whom he furnishes with service will grow skeptical of his honesty and fairness as soon as they find out that he owns theaters which compete with theirs. The very fact that A has it in his power to discriminate, in furnishing service, gives him an undue advantage in the minds of C, D and E, who are competing exhibitors, and this impression governs their minds, even when A is actuated by right impulses and conducts his business on righteous principles.

In such a case it might well be asked, "Where is the evil?" Ethically, one must reply, "There is none;" but practically, one must also confess that the dissension resulting makes hearty co-operation impossible between A and his patrons, and without such co-operation the interests of all will suffer. Imaginary grievances sometimes cause as much evil as the real, by depriving men of the ambition to succeed and excel. The greater the success of C, D and E, the better it is for A and the business generally.

In the reasoning thus far there has been assumed for A an Utopian attitude. Let him now be considered on the common-sense plane of business competition. He enters the exhibiting field for gain, and he does it with the full knowledge that he has an advantage over his fellow exhibitors. If he be what the world calls square, he will be expected, under the circumstances, to give himself a little the best of it; if he be unscrupulous and avaricious, will give himself a great deal the best of it, and may ove look the rights of the other fellows altogether. Indee under the dollar mark as his banner, he may assume tyrannous control over C, D and E, and their ilk, w cannot well afford to get out of his clutches, and go accumulating his spoils by unfair trade warfare, un deposed by the powers above him. By that time, in likelihood, he may have feathered his nest so well that can snap his fingers and say, as he is kicked out, "W I have got mine." Yes, he has got his, at the exper of the manufacturer, the exhibitor and the moving pict industry!

This picture of an unscrupulous exchange is not together vague. At hand there are data concerning c tain men, at present in the renting business, which, if together, would come near realizing the picture. So day the real picture may be drawn, with names and da

Let the exchange man keep to his renting business, a the exhibitor to his show.

TO THE RESCUE OF THE VILLAGE.

From the New York Evening World.

Some of the men in the moving picture business are f mer race-track men, some ex-saloon keepers. Yet they their more conventional comrades of the films are doin work of moral regeneration. They embody a beneficial re tion of city upon country. They are bringing wholeso distractions to towns too small to support a theatrical st company or even be visited by shows that do one-ni stands.

Much of the cussedness of country life is the product sheer ennui. Why are lynchings and feuds, and tar-a feather parties, and fence-rail rides and disorderly chariv rural rather than urban phenomena? For the same rea that quilting parties and husking and spelling bees and ceum lectures and amateur theatricals and wet-and-dry c paigns are. Country people must be amused. In a nei borhood which has no theaters, no professional entertain no great white way, people must make their own entert ment. Therefore they gossip and lynch and pester e other and break loose in ways eccentric or horrifying.

Man is a social animal. In primitive times he found diversion in fighting, gambling and drunken, glutton feasts. In rural places abroad with an older tradition t ours he gets his diversion through a multitude of holid saints' days and carnivals. But take an ordinary Ameri village, deprive it of holidays, inure it to hard, monoton work, immerse it in the Puritan tradition, make it "d blow out all the lights at 9 P. M., and you may set the st for a lynching, a ducking-bee, a choir-fight. Thus are Coatesvilles and Shady Bends "put on the map."

The so-called "berseker madness' of the early Nor what was it but the frenzied reaction of disordered ne against the monotonies of the long Norway winters. Mo Arctic explorers report the Eskimo as goaded by the nesses of boreal existence to fits of fury in which they off their garments and rush naked across the snow. dering these things, one can understand village misbeha —and glimpse the service of the moving picture.

Mr. Roscoe C. Cuneo, proprietor and manager of the Theater, Upper Sandusky, Ohio, is making great impr ments in his theater. What The People Want

By Louis Reeves Harrison.

I MAY be wrong in regarding the photoplay as a great possible factor in human enlightenment, especially in this country, where general intelligence has been ar is being illuminated to a wide and ever-widening exent, but when all restrictions are removed, it seems to m that we can present the living truth as powerfully on th screen as on the stage or printed page. The range is we, no really living issue is now excluded, and the art ispen to an infinite variety of treatment—it may disclose exstence as it could not be elsewhere adequately portryed. By restrictions I do not mean any particular one, bu all that can be classed under cupidity or stupidity and nov interfering with the natural evolution of what is relly a fine art.

Proof positive that many photoplays are well worth seeng lies in the enormous attendance at the picture shws. Even when the low price of admission is consiered, it is plain that some remarkably good productions ar in constant supply, otherwise there would be a decided faing off in attendance at the exhibitions. It is the ppe, however, of all interested in bettering present condions to so elevate the quality of present releases as to rech out for the very best class of patronage obtainable. Inorder to bring about this desirable result, producers shuld go oftener to all kinds of theaters exhibiting photoramas on the screen, and not study what the other feows are doing, but the people.

know of no audience more generous than the average o attending picture shows. It is composed of people wo go to be entertained, but they are not exacting. They eer the little theaters in a good-natured, receptive mood, ppared to excuse whatever falls below the average in qlity and enjoy in a quiet way what is meritorious. Oe of the distinguishing traits of the crowd is a sense o justice that is not at all regulated by our present code o laws, a demand for the reward of vicarious virtue, a cracter performing a kind act, or suffering for another, mst be rewarded in the end. A really good play seems to ift the audience out of humdrum reality and carry it aay on the strong wings of imagination; the natural hnan sympathies of common people seem to be ever rdy for the expected quickening. On this account I he advocated intense characterization wherever possibl At least one personality should be so well and favoraly introduced that we can follow the course it pursues inhe story from sympathetic interest in a creature akin tourselves.

noticed the other night, in an audience numbering or a thousand people, a tendency to guy certain pictues, and I turned to see what the people were ridiculing. Amaiden was captured by the Indians as usual, but there ws a slight innovation in the piece. The hero went to th Indian encampment, assumed a slap-you-on-the-wrist atude and declared that he would put out the light of th sun unless they released the fair maiden. Then there ws an eclipse, and the horrid Indians were so scared that thy knelt down in prayer while the hero and the miden beat it. What the gallery gods said is unprintable, b all around me people sniffed and sneered in disgust. Sme laughed with good-natured toleration, but no respct was shown to pictures thereafter. In the next one th unwashed shepherd wanted to marry the nicely-dssed princess, but her pa objected—pa was made up wh a King-Georgian beard and twirled his sceptre with al the importance of a moving-picture orchestra leader. When the guards brought the shepherd before him he summoned a big man with an obviously wooden sword and was going to chop the prisoner's head off there and then. It was so thrilling that the audience laughed. Now the court jester came to the rescue of the young couple in whom the audience manifested no interest with the old theatrical clap-trap of rope ladder for the princess and a diversion for the court of seven supers. He brought on a modern dog who could put his paws on the back of a chair and say his prayers. The court of seven supers laughed heartily and the prisoner escaped—it was so easy that the audience laughed derisively and the kids in the gallery whistled through their fingers. The place was in an uproar when the jester ran to get horses for the escaping couple. He jogged along from the camera to a far-distant stable for the space of a hundred feet of film, while advised from the auditorium to hurry up, mingled with other suggestions like those heard at a variety entertainment on amateur nights. There was another play of a superior character, but it fell flat because the audience was disgusted with moving pictures in general by the time it arrived.

I have recently noticed some very low comedies from a very high source, and they do not serve to interest the general public in motion-picture exhibitions. Some of them depict wise guys doing up good-natured and unsuspecting people, stories of the kind that the bragging commercial traveler tells when he comes in from the road; but where human kindness is victimized in the photoplay the theme has a tragic as well as a comic side, especially in presentations given for the edification of those whose natural sympathies are with the under dog. Plays that antagonize the finer element in an audience had better never be shown at all. There is nothing funny in what is cruel, though vulgar brutality in a play may get a laugh from a few who have not yet emerged from primitive egotism.

The standard of right and wrong in the great audience, stretching from ocean to ocean in this country of ours, is not that laid down by ancient authority, but that of present intelligent sympathy. We all feel an abiding affection for writers of days gone by, some of them never will lose their endearing charm, but we are most thrilled by the fresh and buoyant pulse of our own times, and producers will find it hard to make old skeletons run red blood for people whose distinguishing peculiarity is a tendency to look forward rather than backward. To most of us who read the papers nothing is impossible for a race that has made giant strides in the new century, our passionate love of justice has been proven in past struggles for mental and moral emancipation; we are on our way to better things, and we should keep the pictures up to the spirit of the people.

Whether we are producers, directors, actors or playwrights, we must delve deep into what does not yield itself readily to superficial study—life as it is, as we are living it—regarding nothing that is human as alien. That does not mean the elimination of what is beautiful or romantic in the past, but in our getting away from antique obsession. We cannot fool the people by using a venerable masquerade to cover a jointless skeleton of decayed ideas. Any apprehension we may feel about the future of moving pictures does not arise from lack of faith in the art, but from the false uses being made of it. Every fine play presented may not receive distinct, individual appreciation, but it constitutes a step towards an end we all desire.

The Pleasing and the Unpleasing.

By C. H. Claudy.

BIOGRAPH'S "The Failure" is a new treatment of an old theme, redeemed from sordidness by the character of the acting, and the daintiness of some of the titles, together with its happy ending. Yet it is a question if any picture which deals with vice in any form, to the extent of showing it on the screen, is really necessary or advisable in the making of films for public entertainment.

The "Failure" is a man who fails—his first beloved tells him he must succeed before she can marry him, and he does try, but fails again. Meanwhile "The woman down the Sorrowful Hill" (my compliments to the maker of that title) has been deserted by her lover, and has recourse only to the dance hall—not to mince words, becomes a prostitute.

The "Failure," in a brave attempt to make good, either sings or recites in the dance hall, to the applause of the half-drunken multitude, and what he says or sings attracts the attention of "The Woman Down the Sorrowful Hill," who, too short a time in a life of shame to have become hardened, is sorry for his depth of misery, and is very prettily and artistically shown comforting him; indeed, he finally falls asleep in her arms, sitting by a table in a private room in the dance-hall house, and she holds him the night through.

His good fortune comes in a letter from a relative who offers him management and part ownership of a farm, if he will come and bring a wife. He is impoverished, but the girl pawns her jewels and offers him the money. This he spurns, so she gets the dance-hall keeper to give it to him by a ruse. How she knew just where he lived and could get there so quickly is not well shown—indeed, the action is a bit jerky in several places, but one forgives it for the sake of the interest, which is well sustained. Meanwhile, with the money which he, inconsistently enough, would take from the keeper of a house of very questionable repute, though he scorned it from an inmate of that house, he prepares to go to the farm. He goes to the house of the girl he loves, sees her through the window in the arms of another man, returns and takes "The Woman Down the Sorrowful Hill" as his wife, and the final scene shows them both following the plough in honest labor, he at work, she cheering him on.

Pope Innocent III at the beginning of the 13th century pronounced it a praiseworthy act to marry a prostitute, and Gregory the Ninth urged bachelors to marry repentant girls, so perhaps there is some classic reason for a drama of this kind. Nevertheless, well done as it is, and gripping of the attention, one cannot help wishing that some more cheerful form of entertainment might be offered, and that Biograph, which we look to for the very best in photoplays, would not be original at the expense of the innocence of the very young who attend motion picture houses. One hardly wishes for the reputation of being a prude, but one is willing to risk the suggestion that such themes are better off the film-stage than on it, for the sake of the young and susceptible patrons of the shows.

If Biograph has a new treatment of an old theme, Selig has an old treatment of an old theme in "The Chief's Daughter." One expects more originality from the producers of some of the most stunning pictures ever made—"Lost in the Jungle," for instance, and "Back to the Primitive." But here we have something which is so old it can't stand without a crutch—captured maidens, Indian maiden rescues, escape under the back of the teppe, well guarded in front. I suppose if I have seen that same idea once, I have gaped at it twenty times—yet, like the clown of blessed memory "Here we are again!"

Vitagraph's "One Touch of Nature" failed, as far as I was concerned, because of the fatal departure from truth in the appearance of the caste. You can't make Miss Turner look like a Jewess by giving her a Jewish name, and you can't get conviction by over-make up, as in the case of the Jewish girl's father. There seems to be somewhat of a tendency to over-make up among the Vitagraph men—notice the hypnotist in "Hypnotizing the Hypnotist" who was a caricature even for a burlesque—that would have been a stronger face without so much hair!

However, long whiskers on the Jew's face wouldn't spoil the play—but Miss Turner does not look like a Jewess, and to have her play a part in which the matter of race is the basic fact is to start out with lack of success a preconceived condition. And not all her faithful acting nor the capital strength of the other characters could convince the audience that it was life they looked at—it was Gentile playing at Jew and you couldn't make anything else out of it—so that a very pretty idea for a play was spoiled in the telling.

I wish I had some way of handing the Gaumont producer a small bunch of flowers. But I commend his effort in "Heroism" to many an American producer as to the proper way to get realism by juggling films. I have been a picture "fan" for a long time, and I believe I know a good juggle when I see it—and I never saw a better than this, in which pictures of a fire—a real, sure-enough fire, with real crowds and real engines, are so cleverly mixed and blended with the "pretend" fire in the studio where the pictures are made, that the effect is all that of reality. The artistic way in which hair-raising scenes are cut short and a new thriller substituted, too, instead of working each scene to the limit, is very pleasing. Incidentally, while a man dying is not a pleasant thing to watch either in reality or on the stage, if one could always watch a realistic and true-to-life death scene as that given by the heroic rescuer, one would object less to such portraits when they are necessary.

"If this be comedy, then let me cry!"

I forgot who said it, but he might have been looking at Essanay's "The First Man," which is 1,000 feet long because 1,000 feet makes a full reel—and for no other reason. If it had been 400 feet it would have been, probably, funny. As it is, it's so far between laughs, and so little is made of the one really laughable possibility—that of a girl eighteen years old in the presence of the first man she ever saw or spoke to—that the whole thing falls flat. Never having seen such a young woman, one hardly knows how she would act, but it seems reasonably certain she wouldn't act as if she saw a man every day!

And I am not crazy about "A Frontier Doctor" either, for the simple reason that I don't like his methods! If I ever had the bad luck to be a producer, I think I should hire a medical man to tell me what I shouldn't do in a film. Doctors who operate on damaged heads don't sit on the bed and lean over their patient—they get behind them or so they can move around them. And they don't operate alone, when a loving wife is crazy with anxiety in the next room—nor they don't go to work in two minutes after being called as if they were about to shave their patient, either. But Miss Fisher is worth seeing here, as elsewhere; she grows on you the more you see her.

Edison's "Buckskin Jack, the Earl of Glenmore," rides ruthlessly through improbabilities and arrives on the scene of action willy nilly. And to thunder with the impossibilities, anyway! For Buckskin Jack is restrained in his actions, capable in his repression and a rather fine figure of a man in his work, and we like him much, and we don't mind saying so, either—any more than his wards did in the little play. The scene between Jack and the butler, who shows Jack wherein he has offened, and why his manners were out of gear, is excellent, indeed, and the club room scene, where Jack uncovers a cheat is so well played that the melodrama is forgotten in the apparent reality.

C. G. P. C. has something in Eva's Faithful Furniture which is seldom attempted on this side of the ocean—a trick film which is designed to show it wasn't a trick. We are all more or less familiar with that class of picture in which inanimate objects suddenly come to life, tables set themselves, pianos move from room to room without the aid of human hands, etc., and it must be confessed, such films usually get more of a laugh from the audience than the average "comedy" which is so seldom really funny! In this particular example, Eva, dispossessed, prays to her furniture not to desert her, whereupon it promptly follows her back through the streets of the town madly chased by the astonished bailiffs.

The film shows the furniture moving, and at the same time, people chasing it and being chased by it, which is very ingeniously accomplished. The effect is very surprising; the comments of some "wise" picture fans who see it and are unable to explain it being almost as funny as the antics of the furniture itself.

WANTS THREE POSTERS WITH 3-REEL SUBJECTS.

Editor Moving Picture World:

Dear Sir:—Just a line or two about two and three-reel pictures. Have recently run some of them and find that many people refuse to come in because there is only one poster for the two or three-reeled pictures. They seem to think because there is only on poster, that you are not giving them as long a show as usual.

Don't you think it would be an improvement to have a poster for each reel? Can't something be done about this, as I, for one, will not run any more three-reel subjects unless there is a poster for each reel, and I imagine that other managers find it the same, that is, in regard to people thinking you are giving them "short weight."

Your paper is invaluable, but seems to be always improving, though each one seems perfect, to me, at least. E. L. TEWSLEY, Empress Theater, Redlands, Cal.

LCOHOL, THE POISON OF HUMANITY" (Eclair).

THIS latest addition to the pictures intended to expose alcoholic dangers is most extraordinary in character.

Instead of dealing with the drinker or the immediate ects and attendant miseries of alcohol, it passes on to the sond generation in its purpose to show alcohol "as the pson of humanity."

n this drama of life the father is a drinker and the son is n; nowhere in the entire story is the son ever known to tch the poisonous drink; yet his life is beclouded with a tgedy the cause of which is traced to him, the victim of h father's sin.

Visiting the sins of the father on the children" would be a ruthful title to this sad story, but it is better only as a s-title, otherwise the value of the teaching of the heredity evils of excessive drinking would be lost.

eginning in his boyhood days the son is a victim of headaes and dizziness not common to the average healthy boy. Ken of intellect and capable in his business as a young man, h becomes the inventor of an important machine, which bgs him to the notice of his employer, whose daughter h ultimately marries. Living in evident prosperity with walth and luxury he becomes suspicious of his wife, seemily more from a disordered brain than from real cause. Fding a gentleman caller at his home his distemper develops into a mania, and he shoots and wounds his young wife. The lawyer engaged to defend him naturally seeks for some cause for this mental and physical disorder and so visits the young man's parents. The old father is a driveling drinker—a mental and physical wreck; here is the solution of the problem: the young man is a victim—not of drink—but of the poison and depreciation of the human faculties through parental sin.

The trial is held. The lawyer draws vivid word pictures of the fits of brutality, even wife beating, in which the drinking father was accustomed to indulge. The old man is in court, a picture of idiotic, senile debility.

The lawyer then draws another picture of the son repeating in similar form his father's viciousness, claiming the poison of alcohol had made an unwilling victim of the young man. The court accepts this view and acquits the young man of culpability. The scientific teaching of the story will arouse much comment in educational circles. It is not the teaching of hereditary tendencies being repeated, but the results of those tendencies prejudicially affecting the next generation. The story and the claim is a wonderful one and will both do much good and arouse much interest. The crowds may not understand it and so it may not please them. However, if accompanied by an explanatory talk, it will make one of the most helpful pictures of the day.

THE CARROT CATERPILLAR (Pathe).

This most beautifully colored film is perhaps the best of its kind yet produced; intensely interesting, it is a source of admiration to all who see it.

As an educational film it is unique, tracing the caterpillar through its chrysalis stage to the butterfly, while every detail of growth, change and development is fully noticeable.

The sub-titles to this film are such that a complete lesson is learned at one showing, proving the great advantage so often claimed for the cinematograph as a teacher.

The habits and nature of this wonderful insect are described by the following heads, each of which in turn is most beautifully illustrated:

1. This caterpillar lives only in the carrot field and its color is such that it is easily hidden among the leaves.

2. It propels itself with six feet and twelve "suction cups." The feet are situated near the head and the twelve "suckers" behind them.

3. For its defense against its enemies, this kind of caterpillar has a pair of collapsible horns which it can project at will.

4. The horns secrete a liquid which smells like valerian, which bad odor keeps the caterpillar's foes at a respectful distance.

5. It feeds only upon the leaves of the carrot, but is not a parasite harmful to vegetation.

Perhaps the most interesting picture in the series, and one which affords information unknown to the casual observer or amateur naturalist, is that showing the change from the caterpillar to the chrysalis; the violent convulsions which accompany this change is wonderful and must be seen to be realized. Some idea of the same may be found from the following descriptions:

6. When the caterpillar has attained its full growth, it affixes itself to some surface by means of a glutinous substance for its transformation into a chrysalis.

7. Forty-eight hours later, in a violent convulsion, the chrysalis breaks the shell of the primitive caterpillar and appears in the form which it will retain throughout the winter.

8. It is one of the most mysterious problems of nature, that though this chrysalis turns entirely into a liquid state inside of its skin, life does not become extinct.

9. Finally it becomes immovable and throughout the winter the mysterious transformation is accomplished. In the chrysalis are being formed the body and wings of the machaon butterfly.

The third change to the butterfly is the beautiful one and commands the closest attention of the observer:

10. When the springtime comes to awaken the earth, the butterfly is formed. One morning it laboriously disengages itself from the chrysalis shell and lives perfectly formed, but unable to fly.

11. The new-born wings are as yet but stumps; in order that they may properly develop, the butterfly must bathe for a quarter of an hour in the spring dew.

12. Rising superbly above its prison, it basks in the caresses of the sunshine and offers to the morning breeze its variegated wings.

13. Its first hopeful steps carry it about its entire domain, but it is still afraid to fly.

14. Its first flower.

The fully developed beautiful butterfly is now seen struggling on the petals of its first flower, ere it realizes the strength of its wings to carry it away in the sunlight.

If ever there was a picture which should be shown in all the schools this is the one, as nowhere has nature unfolded more beautiful secrets than in the metamorphosis of the butterfly, hence our reason for giving so much detail and space to this most worthy film.

ADVANCES.

Further to the "Zionist Movement Pictures" exhibition recorded last week, the New York section of the "Council of Jewish Women" gave an exhibition of Bible stories in the Republic Theater on January the 21st. While this is another commendable advance, the council is in error in announcing themselves as "the first to teach religion by moving pictures"; if they read the Moving Picture World they would know that they are worthily following an already well-established lead, and in doing so are very properly encouraging the educational work which is here being continuously advocated and recorded.

This "Council of Jewish Women" will no doubt find their efforts appreciated and their example followed in many parts of the country; it is for this purpose we make this mention of their timely exhibition.

It is pleasant to read the healthy opinion of "The Lad Home Journal" and to add its name to the list described this page last week of those who are now giving the edu- tional picture unqualified praise.

THE VOCATIONAL PICTURE.

The vocational school is now a certainty; vocational e ca- tion has long been an anticipated necessity among educa rs; its accomplishment was, however, difficult. Nothing as helped to solve the problems and bring nearer the actual os- sible school than the cinematograph. Herein is anothe in- stance of a great development towards a deliverance w ch proved difficult for lack of that which the cinematog ph gives. Nowhere is the moving picture more useful th in this particular; technical and demonstrative examples re out of the question in the vocational school; neither coul the ideal school be taken to witness the practical workin so necessary for that instruction which intimate acquain ace and experience could alone impart. The cinematograp has overcome the difficulty, and, bridging the gulf, brough the two together. Thus the vocational school is now not nly possible but actualized. Within the room of practical dy the living artisans can be seen upon the screen in genera and in detail, so that the education which is knowledge is su ple- mented with that education which is practical, causing gin and hand to be alike trained in that which is of material lue and profit. Around Madeira with the O'Kalems

t 8:30 A. M., December 9th, the log registered 2,752 miles frm New York as we skirted along the coast of Madeira. Rht ahead of us lay the "Desertas," as the smaller islands o he group are called, and the sun playing over their ridges a hills, flashing here and there on a solitary house, gave u some idea of what they were like. These islands were dcovered by the Portuguese in 1419 and are still in their psession. The largest of the group, Madeira, is an importat coaling station for steamers bound down the west coast o Africa and South America. It has the appearance of volcic origin, huge walls of red stone rising sheer from the wer's edge to almost six thousand feet, broken up, he and there by deep ravines, at the foot of which tiny csters of thatched roofed hamlets proclaim the residence o fisher folk. Great banks of clouds had settled down on t tops of the peaks, their snowy whiteness and regularity fming a natural table-cloth. The sun was slowly dissolvi it, but as the shafts of light shot through the clouds they we beautiful indeed.

lowly we turned into the Bay of Funchal and had our fit glimpse of the capital of the island. It is located quite cse to the water's edge, stretching back and rising as the hs slope up. The houses with their gaily colored red tiled rfing stood out in bold relief against the more sombre bacgund of green and brown, while here and there gardens in f bloom added another touch of color.

We came to anchor and were immediately surrounded by hdes of small skiffs, the occupants of which, with fierce gstures and shrill shrieks, begged for a "sixpence" to be town into the water. Some of them were mere boys not a day cer eight or nine years of age, but all were perfectly at hme in the water, which was blue and clear, and it was dite easy to watch a diver as he went down ten or twenty ft. A coin was thrown; there was a flash, and quick as an cer the boy had dived. Straight down he went, following t coin, which could be readily seen; then he wavered as his hds went out; back like a shot, the money thrown to the bottom of the boat, and he was pleading once more. Launches had arrived at the "Adriatic's" side and we went ashore.

The tourist traffic has become part of Madeira's life, and the "old primitive methods have been turned into commercial enterprises." The bullock cart of long ago, drawn on sled runners, is practically the only means of conveyance," and sleds are used for all manner of transportation and invariably drawn by oxen. The streets are very elaborately built with beach cobble stones laid on edge and arranged in patterns. It is rather difficult walking, but reduces the friction surface to a minimum on the runners of the sleds. It is surprising how comfortable these sleds are to ride in, although they are not fast. We engaged three, each of which seats four people; a boy leads the oxen and a man with a long bamboo pole with a spike on the end, as a persuader, drives. They have a great deal of patience with their animals and can drive through seemingly impossible openings. We went around the town for an hour or so and could not but admire the cleanliness of the people, the stores and the city itself.

There was an atmosphere of industry that is frequently absent in places deriving a good portion of their revenue from tourists. Everybody was busy, and some of the stores would have done credit to many of our towns of equal size in the United States. Leaving the bullock cart, we entered the small Funicular Railway station and boarded a small open car for the trip to the top of the hill. The engine is of peculiar construction and has a large cog-wheel in the center. This is operated through a set of cogs that are laid between the rails, and naturally the ride was a slow one. Through vineyards, beautiful gardens, on past an avenue of pine trees, that were strangely reminiscent of California, and out through a banana plantation until we reached the top. Below us, thousands of feet, lay the city, the harbor with the ships lying peacefully at anchor, and, away as far as the eye could reach, stretched the Atlantic, as calm as a mill pond, blending in so perfectly with the sky that the horizon was hardly distinguishable. For some moments we stood in silence drinking in the beauty of the scene; everything seemed so quiet and peaceful.

Going on past a large Catholic church, we entered sleds. These hold three people and are built of wicker-work. Ropes run from the front end of the runners and are used by the two attendants to keep the sled on its course. We started off quietly and smoothly, running about five or six miles an hour. The attendants ran alongside, pushing when necessary and holding back the sled as occasion demanded. Then we were on a clear course, standing with one foot on the back board the two men propelled the sled with the other, and gradually we picked up speed. Faster and faster we flew, and with a whiz we rounded a sharp corner in first-class style. On and on, past low thatched roof cottages; a glimpse of the interior—flash—and we were by; another quick swerve and off we went again. It seemed nothing short of marvelous the way the men handled the sled. A smell of burnt wood crept up from under the runners, and a puff of blue smoke now and then demonstrated the fact that the speed was only at the protest of the sled itself. One or two more bends, then away down a straight stretch between two walls, and we careened to the bottom, slowly coming to a stop in front of the railway station from whence we began our ascent. The attendants were perspiring freely and appreciated the end of the run, while we very reluctantly left out seats as exhilarated as from a real long toboggan slide.

A Madeira Taxicab.

A small open street car, with three mules harnessed to it next claimed our attention, and we boarded it for our final run into the center of town. Past the square with its display of native products—"botas" or boots, laces, embroideries, mantillas, and wicker-work; a casual glance at the old prison —around the sentry box the guard lounged—on through the narrow streets and into a restaurant where we had lunch.

A Scene in Madeira—Bob Vignola Making a Bargain.

Tables and chairs were set out on the sidewalk and under the trees; everything denoted comfort. In front stood three automobiles, probably the only modern things in Madeira. They, in themselves, were hardly new, and it required the united efforts of the three chauffeurs to get the one machine under way. Its approach was heralded three blocks off, and the rattle and bang as it went on its way gave evidence that the original model was long since obsolete.

Strolling down to the quay we boarded a launch and in a few minutes were safely back on our temporary home with nothing but the most pleasant memories of our trip ashore, a pretty, isolated spot with its natural beauties, its kind but curious population, and, strangest of all, its kind and intelligent police, who did all they could to make our stay pleasant.

ETHEL ELDER WITH POWERS.

The latest addition to the Powers Picture Play forces Miss Ethel Elder, whose portrait appears herewith. Mi Elder has for the past two years been with the Lubin Co pany and her experience there has made it possible for h to emerge into a broader field and assume lead parts f which she is well endowed with the natural gifts of beau personality and mentality, besides possessing the charms health and youth. If Miss Elder can manage to live up the Powers standard she will prove herself to be a wond indeed.

ANOTHER PICTURE THEATER ORDINANCE.

The New York Aldermanic Committee on Laws and Leg lation held a public hearing on Saturday, January 27th, the Aldermanic Chamber, City Hall, Manhattan, on an or nance introduced by Alderman Fink, affecting moti pictures and motion picture theaters. The Fink or nance is practically the same as that got up Michael Furst, James P. Warbasse, Maurice Werthei John Collier and William B. Crowell, at the sugg tion of Mayor W. J. Gaynor. It was introduced at t last session of the expiring Board of Aldermen in Decemb but was shelved for the time being. The White ordinan which had been introduced at about the same time, was a buried. It will be recalled that the White ordinance arous considerable discussion in the trade on account of many its drastic features, among which was the provision to all the police commissioner of New York to act as a censor films. That ordinance is practically dead, and the only c that seems to have any life is the Fink ordinance, which v come up for discussion on Saturday.

A NEW PHOTOPLAY SCHOOL.

The Dramatic School of Photoplay Acting has been ganized, with head offices in the Gaiety Theater Buildi for the purpose of instructing the art of acting on the sil stage to those who would break into this field. It is intention of the new company to give their instructions a regular studio with full equipment, aided by a professio director.

The Dramatic School would like to have scenarios s mitted, which will be either bought or returned in the us way. As an outlet for the graduating pupils, Mr. Jan Devlin, manager, is now making arrangements with seve manufacturing companies to find positions for them.

Advertising for Exhibitors

Conducted by EPES WINTHROP SARGENT.

MPROVING upon the suggestion recently made in this column regarding the filing of manufacturers' release dates, Mr. Walter A. Brooks, of the Pastime Theater, Canton, Pa., sends a sample sheet from one of his n books, which he has been using for some time, and writes:

> Dear Sir:—I have read with much interest your series of articles on "Advertising for Exhibitors," and have learned many valuable suggestions from them.
> In the last issue I notice a paragraph describing a book in which film releases may be recorded. I have for some time used a book of my own manufacture that I think is superior in many ways to the one you describe.
> First, I secured a small loose-leaf book from a local druggist costing me twenty cents. Without a doubt like books are procurable at any drug or stationery store. In this I pasted the list of film releases that is printed each week in the MOVING PICTURE WORLD, under the head of "Licensed Release Dates," with each company in a separate list. We are using films that are far from being first run, and therefore it is necessary to have quite a list of releases. The book answers every purpose of a card index, as far as information is concerned, it giving the date of release, name of the film, nature of the subject and the length. The book is never bulky, and as fast as a page becomes out-of-date it is discarded.

To Find Material Quickly.

This particular page is 4½ x 7 inches, but the exact proportion does not tter so that the page be wide enough to take the 2½ inch column comtably. Loose leaf books may be had of any stationer and, as Mr. oks points out, it is handy to be able to discard the dead material.

The stories of the film are printed in the issue dated the Saturday before, issued a week previous to that, so that if you have a release dated uary 24, for example, you turn to the World for January 20 and there ate your story.

Unless you are using early releases it is sufficient to paste up the book ry three or four weeks. In the sheet shown, for instance, the first ry covers the films from June 7 to July 5. The next cutting covers y 10 to August 2, and so on. If you have a book with a fairly wide rgin you can enter in the margin the page number of any special refence to the film and then the book has almost the value of an elaborate d catalogue system. The margin is also useful in checking up the ns used.

Three Weeks Ahead.

Fred Wheeler, manager of the Lyric Theater, Crown Point, Ind., sends a card folder giving the headline film for three weeks ahead. The nt page makes a very attractive showing in brown and dull green on ite card. There is plenty of ornamentation, but the display is in good te and the typographical appearance cannot fail to give a favorable pression. With a card that stays alive for three weeks, it is well to ve durable stock and this is printed on a better grade of cardboard n would be advisable where the issue was made weekly. In most of announcements the star of the play is given in this fashion:

> January 7. Maurice Costello is featured in a Vitagraph comedy entitled "An Innocent Burglar."
> January 8. "A Blind Deception." A Lubin drama featuring Florence Lawrence.
> January 9. "The Lost Necklace." A Pathe American drama.
> January 10. "The Politician's Dream," with big, fat and happy John Bunny in the leading role. A Vitagraph comedy that is real comedy.

Names Are Needed.

It is to be regretted that more of the manufacturers do not supply exhibitors with casts of the plays. The business now demands the sonal feature and instead of resisting the demand it should be met t the exhibitor may make the most effective use of what he is paying . The Edison, Selig and Vitagraph companies regularly announce their yers, and so does the Thanhouser company, but others having favorites the cast ignore the advertising value and neither the manufacturer nor exhibitor gets a return for the salary investment. There are hunds of live exhibitors who want the names and who give preference those companies which furnish them.

We incline to the opinion that Mr. Wheeler might sell his back page to fit and so cut down the cost of the cards, but it is very evident that prides himself upon his printing, for his letter head is as well done the card; so well done that we hope Mr. Wheeler will send in other mples of his work. We like to look at them. too.

How They Won Out.

Rusk and Andrews send this enlightening letter:

> Gentlemen:—We read with interest all departments of your publication and especially the "Advertisers' Department." Many good hints are given, and here is a bit of our experience in this locality: We are in a town of 4,000, where several moving picture shows have started and failed for want of patronage and the town was said to be a "Jonah." We started in the face of this, gave a good picture show, well projected, advertising with no bombast, ran the show at a loss each night for about a month, and now have our house filled at every show, and it is now a paying proposition. I enclose one of the "dodgers" we put out last week and from which we received good results. It is not "circus" advertising, but simply suggestion.

Advertising, proper management and a reasonably recent program will let a live man show a profit in the deadest sort of town. They send a sample dodger that will give hints to others. Here it is:

ADMISSION, 10 CENTS TO ALL

From a Veteran.

W. J. Melody, of the Hippodrome Theater, St. Catherine's, Ontario, Canada, sends an interesting letter, in which he says:

> It is with pleasure I have read in your department in THE MOVING PICTURE WORLD of the many advertising schemes. I beg to add my mite in the hope that some of the suggestions may help my brother exhibitors. I started back in 1904 singing illustrated songs for Mr. Rock, of the Vitagraph Company, when the nickel shows invaded Canada. I was one of the first to start. I opened with the Bennett Theatrical Enterprises, which afterward had houses in Hamilton, London, Ottawa, Quebec, Halifax, St. John and Sydney. We wrote circular letters to all the houses, telling what we had done in the line of advertising, that they might follow suit. I am outlining some of the schemes.

Mr. Melody outlines a score of schemes, from which we draw the following:

Some Business Getters.

Souvenirs for children at the Saturday matinee, the souvenirs costing from $1 to $2 a hundred, but being selected to make as big a showing as was possible for the money.

In cold weather, when business was apt to be slow, there was a drawing each Wednesday night for a ton of coal, the winning ticket being selected from those sold during the previous week.

Popularity contests for the most popular conductor or motorman on the interurban lines, a gold watch being the prize. One contestant alone sold more than 6,000 tickets in three weeks, with others pressing him closely. The expense was $13 for a gold watch for the prize and a printing bill of $5.50 for tickets and dodgers. Each contestant was credited with votes to the number of tickets sold by himself and his friends.

A Pathe release titled "Whimsical People" shows four darkies who were engaged in dancing and were transported to the moon, where they were seen to be singing. The film was held over and a local negro quartet danced behind the screen during the first part of the picture and sang during the moon episode, the film being worked up into a local sensation at small expense.

A somewhat similar scheme was used with the Essanay "Golden Days," in which a child singer and an adult were employed to supply the musical feature. The song "Then You'll Remember Me," ran through the story and brought about the climax, and the use of the singers boomed the reel into a sensation. The song feature was used to splendid effect in many subjects.

An Appeal to the Sunday Schools.

In Hamilton it was arranged to give one show each month in some Sunday school, the order of application determining the favored school. Mr. Melody writes that while in the early days of the scheme the response from the Sunday schools was none too ready, they now have more applications than they can attend to.

Mr. Melody also goes in strong for special effects where the film indicates their use, and with some reels the effects lift the ordinary into the feature class.

In his local advertising Mr. Melody seems to favor the two column width advertisement enclosed in a heavy black border. The typographical display is not good, due to the inexpertness of the compositor, but in the reading matter more care is shown and it is probable that a little pressure on the business office of the paper would result in a better display. The titles of the films should always appear in heavy type. The best display is for some of the Kalem Irish reels and some of the Vitagraph and Edison features. One folder uses this good line:

COME EARLY TO THE MATINEES. IF POSSIBLE BRING THE CHILDREN.
Special provisions made for baby carriages, so, no matter what the weather conditions may be, you will be sure of comfort, amusement and an entertainment that will well repay your visit.

Making the most of the ordinary subject is a matter that is too seldom looked after. The Pathe reel was not a particularly attractive subject in contrast with the more ambitious work, but the inexpensive efforts of four colored gentlemen made it a headliner and it became worth more to the management than more pretentious films.

Under existing booking conditions it is not always practical to work up a subject that comes into town on the eleven o'clock train and must be sent back the next morning, but when you read the stories of the films in The Moving Picture World make a mental note of those that will lend themselves to special treatment and when the film does make its unexpected appearance be ready for it. Plan ahead to frame the effects quickly when you get the reel, get your audience looking for novelty and pretty soon you'll find that people come to the house to see if you're springing any surprise. Do not announce the effect ahead, even when you know that it is coming, but aim to be original and the "surprise" will be a standing drawing card with a lot of patrons.

Some Suggestions.

Suppose, for example, that you have "East Lynne." In the scene where the mother discloses herself to the dying child, cut out the piano orchestra and from behind the screen have a good violinist play Braga's "Angel's Serenade" or the Bach prelude to Gounod's "Ave Maria." The jingling piano is not in accord with the death chamber, but the plaintive notes of the violin, coming unexpectedly, will startle the spectators into absolute quiet. There are times when the thin tones of the violin are much superior to the piano or even the organ for heightening the effect, but don't break the music the instant the scene changes. Keep it going unless there is an absolute demand for livelier music. It is not always well to change the selection every thirty feet of film.

Suppose that you have a factory scene. Don't let the trap drummer bang the iron plate a few times. Do like Mr. Melody did and "get all the junk you'd expect to hear from in a shop." Don't make so much noise that your patrons get headaches, but work in some special effects. A toy foot-saw with a small buzz-saw fastened where the emery wheel usually goes and a bit of metal lightly touched to the slowly revolving teeth now and then will help the illusion of a machine shop with its planing mill and lathes, a real anvil is better than an iron plate and a card pressed against the wings of a small electric fan will give the hum of shafting and belts. You'll have to experiment to get things just right, but it will be worth while taking the trouble to have the effects ready, to spring in an emergency.

Make the Audience Work.

The song revue, in which the audience is coaxed to join in the chorus of popular songs, is something of a craze, but why not improve on the idea by unexpectedly mounting the stage some night at the last show and offering $5 to the person in the audience who sings the chorus best. Let the audience pick the winner as at amateur nights by giving the prize to the contestant receiving the most applause. You'll more than get the prize money back subsequent nights when all the good singers in town—and those who merely think they can sing—crowd the house in the hope that there will be another contest. Do not announce the feature in advance, but let the effect be retroactive.

The audience always enjoys what it does itself more than what is done for them, so get them busy. Have your singer, if you use one, encourage them to come in on the choruses by coaxing them along.

Your Announcement Slides.

The other day in a theater in downtown New York an advance notice of the Pathe weekly was thrown on the screen. The announcement featured the funeral of Admiral Evans, a railroad accident in which two were killed, "and other interesting events." It is possible that this is the sort of stuff making the strongest appeal to the clientele of the house, but it would seem that the second incident might have been replaced with a more cheerful item with decidedly good effect. The Pathe Weekly is not confined to death and while both items had interest, something showing the diversity of the weekly budget could have been used more advantageously.

Your screen talk is your personal talk to the audience. Make it striking and effective. When you speak say something to the point and get away from brag, bluster and bromides. "We show only good reels here," may impress a few, but you could reach more people with, "All the good films as soon as they're out." Don't leave the lines to the operator to think up just as he starts to write them. Give some of your odd moments to thinking up snappy sentences and keep them on hand where you can make a quick and proper selection. If it pays to throw the slide it pays to make it effective.

THE MASSACHUSETTS CENSORSHIP.

By Henry.

Under the direction of Chief of Police General Whitney, all pictures entering the State are censored for use on Sundays, the week-day shows being exempt from this. The exhibitors feel, however, that, while General Whitney's supervision is absolutely impartial that it is too severe. Maybe a trifle too Puritanical. The number of pictures passed for Sunday use is becoming smaller and smaller. Things have come to such a pass that the gentlemen nearest to the Licensed interests in this State say that unless a larger number of pictures are passed for Sunday use by the state, it will very soon become almost impossible for them to supply any sort of a good program. The leading Massachusetts exponents of the Sales Company reiterate the remarks of their Licensed competitors.

During the week ending January 1, 1912, the following were passed: Biograph's "The Baby and the Stork" and the "Voice of the Child," Pathe's "The Doll," Vitagraph's " Doubly Desired Orphan," Selig's "He, She and It," Lubin' "The Oyster Industry" and Kalem's "A Presidential Re view in Washington." The Independent pictures passed fc the same week were: "The Divided Ring," a Solax ree Powers' "Life's Supreme Treasure," and Imp's "Th Portrait."

The following is the list of reels passed for Sunday us after the entire number of pictures released during the wee of December 25th, 1911, has been witnessed: Pathe's "Actor Heart," Gaumont's "From Pity to Love" and "Scenes O the Coast of North Africa," Lubin's "The Kiddies' Chris mas" (Parts I and II), Vitagraph's "The Old Doll" and " Reformed Santa Claus." The Independent reels passed wer Imp's "At the Stroke of Twelve," "Niagara Falls" and "Th Professor"; Majestic's "The Actress"; Reliance's "The Do tor's Dilemma," "Locked in the Vaults," and a Pair Shoes"; Powers' "When Steel Meets Cloud" and "The Viol Maker of Nuremburg," a Solax. When it is considered th a large proportion of the list are less than 500 foot subject and that the entire number of photoplay theaters in th State must draw from either one or the other of the list it is plain that the situation merits considerable thought.

As things now stand, the pictures to be seen on Sunday are very greatly restricted in scope and variety. More tha that, some pictures are almost "rainstorms," as it is impo sible to get a program without using a certain amount "junk." Regular patrons of many theaters are complainin at the poor quality of the programs, and further state th they often see the same pictures exhibited in the same hou after an interval of a month or sometimes less.

There are a number of ways to rectify this condition. On of them is in the hands of the different manufacturers. W need educational and scenic subjects. If the market co tained a larger number of these subjects the number "O.K.'d" reels would increase. Another method is one th the Massachusetts exhibitors must handle. An associati of Massachusetts exhibitors which was nearly dead has com to life during the past month. This organization shou wait upon the State police and place the case before the for consideration. It is hardly to be doubted that the Sta could be prevailed upon to become more liberal in its ce sorship, after the matter has been carefully explained. T Moving Picture World has stated on innumerable occasio that more pictures with an educational flavor are greatly demand. Massachusetts exhibitors are entirely in acco with this statement. It would seem that a great opportuni is present for the manufacturers to increase their sales. they should release a large number of educational and scen reels, it is certain that all exhibitors would quickly bo them. There is talk among exhibitors about taking up th question direct with the State police. It is to be hoped th this will be the case, as the performances at present offer by Massachusetts exhibitors on Sunday are far from go

WARREN KERRIGAN IS "MATINEE IDOL HER

Warren Kerrigan, the leading man of the American Fi Mfg. Co. and often termed "the handsomest man in the mo ing picture business," came in for a full-page write-up in t Chicago Tribune on Sunday, December 31. Mr. Kerrig was shown in the center of a large heart, surrounded zinc reproductions of love letters that he has received duri his years as a motion picture actor. The article was head "How It Feels to be a Motion-Picture Matinee Idol," a there followed a desertation on the annoynace of receivi a hundred love-letters each week from young ladies he h never before seen. The body of the article was taken with extracts from many letters from among "Handso Jack's" conquests.

It was excellent enterprise on the part of the Americ and has been the cause of much speculative comment as how Mr. Kerrigan may be expected to feel when some the young women whose heart-throbs have been laid ba apprise him of their sentiments. The article did not publ the writers' names, of course, but that fact may not alter situation materially.

Mr. Warren Smith, of the firm of Smith & McNeil, p prietors of the Itcit Theater, New Glasgow, Nova Scotia, the Crescent Theater, Westville, N. S., was a visitor to Moving Picture World office in New York recently. Smith came to town to look over the moving picture sit tion and get a line on everything that is new and up-to-d as applied to moving picture exhibition. Smith & McN are about to build a new house in New Glasgow, seating Mr. Smith has been in the exhibition business five years.

Projection Machine Mechanisms Part 2

THIS week the entire department is given over to the second of a series of instructions on mechanisms, designed to cover the latest model of all the leading achines. Herewith we give instructions on the Standard echanism, Model No. 4. Either the Edison, Simplex or otiograph will follow, depending on which one we can t ready first. Part 1, covering the Powers Six, appeared the issue of January 6th. The numbers refer to parts d plates, thus: 437, P 2, means that part No. 437 will be und on Plate No. 2.

Copyright, 1912, by F. H. Richardson. All rights reserved.)

No. 1. Removing the Gate. To remove the gate, loosen rew 525, P 1, and pull gate and spindle off to the left.

No. 2. Removing Lower Sprocket, Film Chute and Gear. o remove lower sprocket, film chute and gear, drive taper n out of sprocket 453, P 2. Drive taper pin out of gear 454, 2, and pull spindle 452, P 2, off to the left. In driving pins se a small steel punch. A heavy hammer is undesirable for ich work. A light sharp blow from a small hammer is most fective and least likely to do damage to the parts. Be sure d drive the taper pins the right way.

No. 3. Removing Film Slide and Cradle. To remove m slide and cradle 437, P 2, loosen screws 501, P 1; screws 26, P 2, and screw 527, P 2, and the parts will come off.

No. 4. Removing Star and Spindle. To remove star and indle 401, P 2; bushing 402, P 1; intermittent sprocket 403, 2, and bushing 404, P 3, first remove film slide and cradle see instruction No. 3); then loosen screws 509, P 2, holding p 497, P 2, and 498, P 3. The parts (star, sprocket, spindle nd bushings) may then be lifted out. In replacing same, e sure that spindle carrying star 401, P 2, is set exactly quare with the aperture. This may be accomplished by rning bushings 402, P 1, and 404, P 3, which are eccentric, ntil the star 401, P 2, hugs the cam 410 P 1, and opposite procket teeth are exactly the same distance from lower dges of strips for film slide 438, P 2. This is important ince if one side of the intermittent sprocket 403, P 2, is wer than the other, it will necessarily do most of the work f pulling down the film. Another and perhaps better way f leveling sprocket 403, P 2, is to have a thin piece of metal, xactly square on one end and just wide enough to fit snugly the film track. Slip this down until it touches the sprocket eeth. If it only touches on one side, manipulate bushing 02, P 1, and bushing 404, P 3, until both teeth touch the end f the metal strip. To make this effective, however, the end f the metal strip must be exactly square and it must fit in he film slide snugly. Still a third way of doing this is as llows: On the two bushings will be found a scratch mark unning lengthwise on their outer circumference. These cratch marks should be kept parallel or level with each ther. These scratch marks may be seen on the inner ends f the two bushings next to the intermittent sprocket.

No. 5. To Remove Flywheel Spindle. To remove flywheel spindle 405, P 2 and 4, drive taper pin (see instruction No. 2) out of hub of cam 410, P 1, and loosen screws in collar 09, P 2. Spindle, carrying flywheel, may then be pulled out o the left.

No. 6. To Remove Cam Pin. Cam Pin 411, P 2, in cam 10, P 1, may be removed by loosening screw 412, P 2. Pin vill then slide out to the left. Tap gently, using a small unch if it sticks.

No. 7. Removing Cam Shaft Bushings. To remove ronze bearings carrying cam or flywheel shaft, same being ocated under cap 496 and 497, P 2, proceed as per instruction No. 5.

No. 8. Top Plate and Flap. Top plate and flap 513, P 3, re removable by taking out six screws holding same.

No. 9. Removing Upper Sprocket and Spindle. Upper sprocket 443, P 3, may be removed from its spindle by driving out taper pin (see instruction No. 2) in its hub. Its spindle, 442, P 2, may be removed by first taking off the sprocket, then driving taper pin out of gear 444, P 2. Spindle then slides out to the left.

No. 10. Removing Upper Sprocket Idler Complete. To remove upper sprocket idler bracket and rollers complete, 448, 449 and 450, P 3, loosen screw holding idler lever 446, P 4, and the whole thing will slide out to the right.

No. 11. Outside Shutter. Outside shutter may be removed from its shaft by loosening screw 522, P 3.

No. 12. Shutter Shaft. To remove shaft carrying outside revolving shutter 470, P 4, tap lightly on either side of the shaft with screwdriver handle, at the same time pulling on the shaft. Do not strike the shaft heavily. Tap lightly while you pull on the shaft.

No. 13. Outside Shutter Yoke-Holder. To remove yoke-holder for outside shutter casting 464, P 4, loosen screws 500, P 4, and the part will come away.

No. 14. Shutter Casting. To remove outside shutter casting 463, P 4, follow instruction No. 13 and then loosen screws 528, P 4. Part will then come away.

No. 15. Front Plate. Front plate 529, P 4, may be removed by first following instructions 13 and 14 and then loosening screws holding plate in place.

No. 16. Governor. To remove governor lever 510, P 2, loosen screw 511, P 2, and lever will come off. Governor spindle 427, P 5, may be removed by first taking off the lever and then driving out taper pin holding gear 428, P 5 Next drive straight pin 432, P 5, out of wings 430, P 5. Next drive taper pin out of collar 433, P 5, and spindle may be pulled out downward. Replacing same is a reversal of the above process.

No. 17. Transmission Spindle. Transmission spindle 420, P 5, may be removed by driving taper pin out of gear 423, P 5, driving taper pin out of gear 422, P 5, and driving taper pin out of gear 421, P 5. Spindle will then slide out to the left.

No. 18. Driving Shaft. To remove driving shaft 414, P 5, drive taper pin out of sprocket 415, P 5, and taper pin out of gear 417, P 5. You can then slide the spindle out to the left.

No. 19. Framing Device Spindle. To remove framing device spindle 456, P 5, take out cotter pin 530, P 5, and pull spindle out, with framing device eccentric 457, P 1, on it. You can then also slip the sliding box 459, P 1, out to the left if you wish.

No. 20. Outside Shutter Horizontal Shaft. Outside shutter horizontal shaft 469, P 4, may be removed by driving taper pin out of gear 475, P 4. Shaft will then slide out to the left.

No. 21. Outside Shutter Vertical Gear. Outside shutter vertical gear 474, P 3, may be removed by complying with instruction No. 20, and then loosening screws 523, P 4, and bronze bearing 471, P 3.

No. 22. Vertical Shutter Shaft. To remove vertical shaft 468, P 4, follow instruction No. 13, then drive taper pin out of gear 475, P 4, and slide shaft out, upward, at the same time sliding gear 472, P 4, off.

No. 23. Magazine Shoe. Magazine Shoe 465, P 4, is removed by loosening screws 531, P 3.

No. 24. Tension Strips. Tension strips on gate above tension shoes 489 and 490, P 2, are held in place by screws. Remove the screws and the strips will come off. The bottom end of the tension shoe goes through the metal of the gate and is held by a small pin in either shoe. These shoes may be taken out by removing these small pins.

No. 25. Idler Bracket Tension Spring. Idler bracket tension spring 534, P 1, will come off when screw 533, P 1, is removed.

No. 26. Idler Bracket. Idler bracket 487, P 2, may be removed by following instruction No. 25, then pull pin 535, P 1, out and bracket will come away.

away from the sprockets by about twice the thickness of an ordinary film. If too close it will have a decided tendency to cause the film to run off the sprockets. If too far away, it will allow the film to climb the sprocket teeth; in either event the tendency is to lose the loops, or at least shorten one of them. Adjustment of sprocket idlers is very important and should be carefully looked after by the operator. The lower sprocket idlers which are inside of casing 485, P 1, are adjusted in relation to the sprocket by means of set screw 538, P 1. On the right side of casing 485, P 1, right next to the casting, you will see the end of one of the roller spindles. Adjust screw 538, P 1, until this roller just begins to turn when the machine is run with the film in, after which set up set screw lock-nut. Upper sprocket 451, P 3, is adjusted by means of a set screw in the bracket just to the left of the roller. By moving this screw in or out the rollers are set closer to or further away from the sprocket. After adjusting be sure and set up the lock-nut so that screw cannot move. Intermittent sprocket idlers 486, P 2, are adjusted in relation to the sprocket by mean of set screw 537, P 1. You can tell when this adjustmen is properly made as follows: When there is no film in th machine the idler which shows on the front of the gate wil remain stationary when the crank is turned. Place film in the machine and adjust set screw 537, P 1, until thi idler roller just barely begins to turn, after which set u the lock-nut to hold this screw tight.

No. 28. Adjusting Intermittent Movement. The inter mittent sprocket should have just a little circumferentia play, but not much. If star 401, P 2, is set up too tigh against cam 410, P 1, expansion of the parts, through hea engendered by friction and from the spot, may cause ther to bind too much, thus producing undue friction. For thi reason there should be just a little play. When this become too great through wear, however, the star 401, P 2, must b s up closer to cam 410, P 1. To do this, loosen screws 9, P 2, holding caps 497, P 2, and 498, P 3, and give bushig 404, P 3, and bushing 402, P 1, a slight turn in such directn as will raise the intermittent sprocket shaft, or star sift, thus tightening it against cam 410, P 1. It is importht that both bushings be turned the same amount. See itruction No. 4. When finished, set up screws 509, P 2, tht.

No. 29. Sprocket Teeth. The pull of the film on the tth of the intermittent sprocket 403, P 2, has the effect of ctting away the metal on one side. This is called "under-cuting." Its effect is to wear the film perforations unduly, and, if of considerable amount, render the picture more or less unsteady. The sprocket may be removed from the shaft and turned end for end, thus presenting the other side of the teeth to the film. To do this the star, spindle and sprocket 401, P 1, should be removed from the machine (see instruction No. 4) and sent by registered mail to the factory. An extra star, shaft and sprocket should be kept on hand, assembled and ready to put in in place of the old one. When both sides of the teeth are worn a new intermittent sprocket must be installed. It is best to send the part to the factory and have it done right. The cost of mailing is slight, and if an extra star, spindle and sprocket is on hand ready for installation, it is by far the better way.

The teeth of the upper and lower sprockets 443, P 3, and 453, P 2, also wear and may be reversed (turned end for end) the same as directed for the intermittent, except that the operator can readily perform the operaion. Remember, however, that the pin holding same to shaft is tapered, and be careful not to get the large size of the hole in the sprocket hub on the side of the shaft having the smallest size of the hole. Better mark the shaft and sprocket before removing sprocket, so that you will make no mistake. When both sides of teeth are worn a new sprocket may be installed by driving out the pin holding the old one, pulling it from the shaft, slipping new sprocket on and re-inserting the pin. But be sure about having the taper hole right. There is light wear on upper sprocket teeth and lots on the lower; some operators change these sprockets when lower becomes worn.

IT DOES NOT PAY FROM ANY POINT OF VIEW TO RUN WITH BADLY WORN SPROCKET TEETH.

No. 30. Tension. Tension on the film is a matter of much importance. It should be just sufficient to hold the picture steady. The best test is to set the tension so that the picture will begin to climb up on the screen slightly when crank speed is increased to about 90 per minute. More than that puts unnecessary strain on the film, intermittent movement of the machine, and in fact the whole mechanism. Tension may be increased or made less by tightening or loosening tension nuts 491 and 492, P 1. The office of the tension springs is to stop the film at the end of the star movement and hold it steady (perfectly still) over the aperture while the picture is exposed. When set tight enough to accomplish this it is sufficient. Some operators try to make the tension springs eliminate jumping of the film caused by worn sprocket teeth or lost motion in the intermittent movement. They may succeed after a fashion, but it is at the expense of excessive wear, both on the machine and film.

No. 31. Setting Shutter. To adjust outside revolving shutter 482, P 4, turn flywheel 406, P 4, in direction it runs until star barely begins to move. Hold flywheel still with left hand, and, having first loosened screw 522, P 3, turn shutter on spindle, in direction it normally runs, until top edge of wide shutter blade covers about half the lens. Tighten screw 522, P 3, slightly, and with a film title threaded in machine, try it with the light. If there are streaks up from the letters, pull top of shutter towards you slightly until streaks disappear. If streaks are downward, pull bottom of shutter towards you. When streaks have entirely disappeared, set up screw 522, P 3, tight.

No. 32. Shutter Shaft. When inserting shutter shaft 470, P 4, in bearing 471, P 3, see that arrow on shaft points toward the bearing.

No. 33. Oil. A motion picture mechanism has heavy work to perform. This is particularly true of the star and cam. It must be adequately lubricated or wear will be excessive. "Adequate lubrication" does not mean flooding the bearings with oil. This does no good, and does do harm. One drop of oil is plenty; more simply runs off, gets on the film, or smeared around, making a dirty mess. THE MAIN THING IS TO USE GOOD OIL; use it with reasonable frequency and use but one drop on each bearing. A GOOD GRADE OF LIGHT DYNAMO OIL IS BEST. Same may be had of any responsible oil dealer. Avoid very thin oils. As a rule they are lacking in lubricating qualities. Many of them are little better than water. For the chain a good bicycle chain lubricant will be found excellent. It may be had of any dealer in bicycle supplies. Engine valve oil is also excellent. Ordinary lubricating oil may be used, but is not very well suited to such work. Engine valve oil is also excellent for gears. Once a week it is an excellent plan to fill an oil can with gasoline or benzine, and while turning the crank, flood the bearings and gears, thus washing them out clean. A pan should be held under the machine while doing this, and plenty of gasoline or benzine should be used.

No. 34. Framing Carriage. The framing carriage is made to work hard or easy by tightening or loosening sliding box adjustment scew 460, P 1 and P 4.

No. 35.—Oil Holes. Oil holes will be found as follows: two in top plate of machine; one at X, P 4; one in cap 496, P 2; two in cap 497, P 2; one at Y, P 2; two at Z, P 2; one at O, P 2; one at X, P 3; one at arrow 416, P 5; one behind gear 423, P 5; one at A, P 4; one at B, P 4; one at C, P 4; one at D,P 4; one at E, P 4. One at F, P 4. Besides these the governor bearings, intermittent movement and right hand intermittent bushing must be oiled; also the sprocket idlers and idlers in film chute.

Bushing No. 413. On one end of bushing No. 413, P 1, carrying end of flywheel spindle 405, P 2 and P 4, will be found a file mark. This file mark indicates the end of the bushing which should be set next to the cam 410, P 1. Be sure and get this bushing in as directed or there will be trouble.

Cleaning Sprockets. It is of much importance that the various sprockets be kept perfectly clean. Gum or dirt collecting on the face of the intermittent sprocket will cause the film to jump. Gum or dirt collecting on the face of the upper or lower sprocket is likely to cause the film to run off the sprockets or climb the sprocket teeth. Sprocket teeth, particularly the intermittent, should be kept perfectly clean and an ordinary 10c. tooth brush is best for the purpose.

Care must be taken that the intermittent sprocket is so set endwise that the edges of the sprockets are equi-distant from the inner edges of the plates 437, P 2.

Take-Up. To adjust the tension on take-up, first loosen set screw in lock-nut on end of spindle. To release tension, turn top of lock-nut toward curtain, and opposite for tightening. When the desired results are obtained, tighten set screw in lock-nut to prevent slipping. It is very important that the leather washer between the two metal discs on take-up should be kept thoroughly lubricated at all times. If you permit this to become dry it will stick fast to discs and cause no end of trouble.

Loops. The upper loop of the film should not be made large enough so that it will touch the top plate when the carriage is framed clear up. The lower loop should not be made too large. Arrange the lower loop so that when the film is locked on the intermittent and lower sprocket the back of the loop will just bear lightly on the metal at the back. This is quite important and a little practice will enable the operator to get his loops right instead of wrong.

MISS MAE C. KENNY.

Charles O. Baumann, treasurer of the New York Mot Picture Company, sailed for Europe on Wednesday, Janu 24. In his absence his personal affairs are left in charge his secretary, Miss Mae C. Kenny, who is also assistant retary of the company. Miss Kenny has been with the N York Motion Picture Company from its inception and joys the unique distinction of being the only woman America occupying a similar position of importance trust.

DON'T CONFUSE "SOLAX" WITH "GAUMONT.

Much misunderstanding has recently resulted from a c fusion of the Solax and the Gaumont interests. Mada Alice Blache, the president of the Solax Company, has cided to dispel the false impression which may exist in minds of many by the issue of the following signed sta ment:

Flushing, New York, January 22nd, 1912.

Gentlemen:—We wish to protest vigorously against the allegations made to the effect that the Solax Company and the Gaumont Company allied in business.

The only relation which exists is a family one. Mrs. Blache being pres of the Solax Co. and Mr. Blache manager of the Gaumont Company of York. This is the only relation existing between the two companies.

The Solax Co. received its charter September 7th, 1910, through attorneys, Goldie & Gumm, of 27 William St., New York City, who will complete information to any person desiring it.

It is true that the Solax Co. has in the past rented the Gaumont st and all developing and printing has been done in the Gaumont plant, this has been strictly on a cash business basis and under the same condi as many other moving picture concerns have had their work done by Gaumont Co.

We have recently purchased a large piece of land in Fort Lee, New Je where we are constructing our own studio and where we will shortl installed in very much larger and better quarters than we have at presen

We trust that you will attach to this communication the importance w it merits, and believe in our sincerity in making these statements to

The SCENARIO WRITER

CONDUCTED BY EPES WINTHROP SARGENT

"Use No Hooks."

UNDER this title we have called attention to a number of instances of the return of manuscripts to authors marked up and in no condition to be continued on their travels without recopying, but a recent mail brought in a script that was not only filthy physically, but which had scribbled upon the back a memorandum of a lewd "daffydill" that evidently was intended to help out an unintelligent director's feeble mentality. He had not only carried the script in his pocket until it was soiled and creased, but he had used the property of another as the memorandum pad for his filthy humor.

This sort of thing passes the bounds of decency and the script has been returned to the office in the hope that the offender will be brought to a realization of the fact that manuscripts are not submitted to his firm to supply the directors with memorandum slips.

One reason for the poor average of merit shown in submitted scenarios is to be found in the director and his unwashed habits. There are many directors now in the picture business who are intelligent, orderly and decent, but there are still too many tenth-rate stage managers who, on the strength of the fact that they know the camera tricks, arrogate unto themselves rights and privileges that the proprietor himself does not assume. They not only refuse to produce any script that does not "appeal" to them, but they carry around in their pockets for weeks the scripts that might be found to possess an appeal—if they can get the idea through their thick heads—and then, finding themselves unable to "see" the story, they turn it back with the statement that it is "rotten" and the script is returned to the author in such a shape that it must be clean copied. Most authors do their own typewriting, so that there is no actual outlay of money, but the labor of "clean copying" is destructive to inspiration and there is some loss of possible earnings in addition to a positive loss of time. Where the author pays a copyist he finds that it costs him from fifty cents to a dollar to submit a script to some studios and the really clever men, the men who could be developed into contributors of smart and original material, drop scenarios to return to the fiction market, where the work requires men of such average intelligence as assures a respect for the property rights of others.

No magazine permits its editors to carry stories around in their pockets for four or five weeks before they decide whether or not to publish them. It is the unwritten law that a script must be returned to the author in a condition as nearly like that in which it was received as possible. If notes are to be made they are made on a separate slip or on the face of an envelope specially provided for that purpose and the editor or his assistant who does not wash his hands with sufficient frequency to avoid soiling the scripts with the filth on his fingers will not be tolerated.

There is no reason—save for the director—why a similar condition should not prevail in the studio and yet, only the other day, a story was returned to a writer with an apologetic explanation for its appearance that ran something like this:

"We are sorry we were not able to return your manuscript sooner, but it has just been found in Mr. ———'s coat, where it got a little soiled."

That's no sort of an excuse to offer an author whose work has been submitted in good faith. He sends his story in to be read, not to rot in the coat of some director or official of the company. It is tacitly understood that he is guaranteed careful treatment when submissions are asked for, and where this is not accorded payment should be made sufficiently ample to pay for recopying the story.

Even where editors know better they are helpless in the face of long established tradition that the director is all-important. He can only ask, not require, and is at the mercy of some unlettered fool who—in one instance at least—spells centipede "centerpede."

That it is possible to handle scripts and yet keep them clean is shown in the rejections from some of the studios, but these studios are few and the real authors are not going to waste time on scenarios until they can be assured at least half-way decent treatment.

Questions of Price.

S. WALTER BUNTING WRITES:

> "I have been much interested in the question of price in your column and elsewhere. The solution in my case has been to turn out fewer scenarios and better work."

This is a pretty good solution, but it does not take into consideration the fact that some studios have small consideration for such minor matters of merit and pay off on a fixed scale that is fair enough to the beginner but which is not at all fair to the man who puts meat and blood and brains into his stories.

It's too easy for some people to write scenarios. They turn them out by the dozen and they're willing to take the dozen price for those they are able to sell. Of course each man has the right to take what he will for the product of his hands or brain as well as the right to refuse any offer, but the men who can write a lot of ideas, some of which will find acceptance, are keeping the prices down all along the line. They take ten dollars for ten dollar stories, but they make the way rough for the man who is writing the fifty dollar product.

At that, the fifty dollar man is gradually coming into his own, but he is doing it by offering only the best of his product. The farmer holds back the undeveloped potatoes, the bad batch of butter, the weakling porker for the farm and markets only his best. The manufacturer may produce "seconds," but he does not market them under his trade name if they are under the standard of his product, and the scenario man who turns out a hundred scripts and tries to sell them all because he wrote them, is doing himself an injustice. The man who gets the good prices is apt to be the man who offers only high grade work. He markets only the cream of his product and holds back the rest of the ideas against the time when he has some inspiration that will enable him to give the required quality to the inferior product.

Get identified with the $50 story and you'll come to be regarded as the $50 man, but send out all grades of material and the product will be averaged up and the price as well. Mr. Bunting's advice is good, but it is incomplete.

What Sells the Story.

Not long ago a correspondent wanted to know why it was that his first story sold and others much better were gently but firmly rejected. At first glance his letter suggested that he never could have written a story that would sell. His expression was crude and his spelling worse, but he sent some samples and these told the story.

Everything he wrote had an idea and many of these were salable. Some were based on themes forbidden by the Board of Censors, but quite a lot were thoroughly available. The plotting of the incident was poor, the preparation of the script amateurish from every point of view, but this uneducated chap in a small town of perhaps two thousand inhabitants had an imagination that he could use.

Just because he saw Western stories in the films he didn't sit down and ring the changes on the cowboy, the ranchman, a daughter and the jealous half breed, nor did he write a yarn about the new boss who turns out to be a girl. He wrote Western types, one story to each type and, when he didn't make the type wade through gore, he had a story that any editor would be willing to pay money for.

Just because everyone else was writing familiar plots he dug into his imagination and his very slight worldly experience for new people of the West to write about, and he found more new types in ten stories than have been used in as many months.

There is a hint here for others. Don't cling to some few types already used, but think up people of flesh and blood who have not had a chance in the films. Use them, use them intelligently in plots without bloodshed, send them to companies that you know really are buying and see what happens.

The office scenario workers can twist the familiar incidents into newer combinations than you are likely to achieve, but if you hand the editor a brand new type he will be tempted to swell the check a little and ask for more contributions.

There have been hundreds of Wild West stories, for example, but few that deal with the modern West. There have been hundreds of Indian tales of massacre and bloodshed, but the writer recalls only one story of educated Indians who lived in frame houses with steam heat and drove sulky plows and Studebaker wagons. The Indian who keeps his trousers up with a pair of suspenders he got with cigar store certificates may not be as picturesque as the fake Indian who wears his war bonnet when he should be wearing a straw hat, but he's much newer, more novel and he can be made as interesting.

What sells most stories is the idea and the reason that so many fail of acceptance is that so few have ideas that are worth while. Get an idea before you write the scenario and you'll not have to write so many scenarios in proportion to the acceptances. Try it for a while. It's not so much how many you write as how many you sell that counts in the long run.

Getting It Fine.

Do you ever work over your stories until you get them too good?

It's not a common failing, but sometimes it happens that the careful author works over a script until the inspiration is removed or replaced by technique.

A script of this sort came to our notice the other day. In many places it seemed unreal and improbable and a suggestion to this effect was made. The reply was an explanation of every action objected to, and in the light of the explanations the action appeared to be right and proper, but the trouble was that the explanations, consisting largely of the influence of the mind over the actions of the characters, could not be conveyed to the spectators. It was plainly to be seen that John did this certain thing because he knew this other matter, but so long as the audience was not informed of the reason for the act, the act itself became unreal.

A majority of scripts suffer from too little consideration, but a few writers habitually reduce their action to such a point of exactness that without the explanations the action becomes unreal and illogical.

It is well to bear in mind the essential fact that what is not told in action or leader is not told the audience and that matters influenced by hidden facts, which are apparent only in the scenario, become uncertain.

It is all very well to write that "Hudibras refuses to pass through the doorway because he knows that Gregory lies in waiting to kill him," but unless you put in some sort of a leader all you show your audience is that Hudibras refuses to pass through the doorway.

You know why and you've told the editor why, but it's necessary to tell the audience that Hudibras knows. If he should come into the scene unobserved while Gregory's fellow conspirators talk over the plot and indicate in action and by example what they are going to do to Hudibras when he comes along, then when he slips away and comes back walking on his heels the audience knows that he is aware of what is waiting for him behind the curtain and they are keenly interested in seeing how he handles the situation.

The photoplay runs eighteen minutes and there's another one right after it. There is no time for the audience to ponder over hidden motives and mental processes. Pass up the little refinements and draw your story in strong, forceful lines. The miniature portrait is apt to be exquisitely done, but it would be out of place high up on a wall. Keep the stories dependent upon mental processes for your fiction string, where words will enable you to get the ideas over, and make your pictured action strong and self-explanatory.

The Fatal First.

"I sold my first scenario to the ——— Company for $25. Since then I've written a dozen, but they've all come back It's very discouraging."

Change the amount of payment and the number of subsequent scripts and that paragraph will fit scores of cases. And they all seem puzzled over the fact that they cannot keep on getting checks for all they write.

It is probable that the first script was written because the author had something to write about; an idea so novel and interesting that he was tempted into a new field. The idea sold the story because it was an idea and not a paraphrase of the same old thing and instead of realizing this, the delighted experimenter proceeds to turn everything he can think of into scenarios, old fiction stories, that funny experience father had in '83, the adventure mother had in boarding school and suggestions from old photoplays.

In these there may be no novelty of idea and the writer has not the technique of the experienced photoplaywright to make the story attractive. With neither technique nor idea, the story stands small chance of acceptance and presently the astonished novice begins to wonder why.

Study that first script. Try and see what it was that made the editor accept the plot, and then try and write others as novel and as good. Don't rush everything you write into the mails. Wait until you are certain that it is right before you send it out, and you'll save a lot of stamps and some reputation in the course of a year. Every editor knows of the accidental hit and he never decides that he has made a discovery until the second or third good story verifies his judgment. Beware of the fatal first and strive for the successful second.

One Way to Sell.

Recently a correspondent suggested that a certain winter industry might make a good release, and he was advised to query a company in the matter, the suggestion being added that he make it worth while by submitting one or more scripts of photoplays in which the industry might be utilized.

He queried the studio without the scripts and very promptly received a letter suggesting that he send some scripts. He sent one and got twenty-five very easy dollars.

If you are familiar with some generally unfamiliar but picturesque industry why not get up half a dozen ideas and submit the scripts to some company that utilizes field sections, such as the Edison or Vitagraph.

Make the scripts as diversified as possible while holding them down to scenes to be obtained in your immediate neighborhood, and make it plain in your letter that all of the scenes and situations can be had in your vicinity and that you'll be glad to help them get the stuff. Make certain that you can make good your promise before you send the letter and the probabilities are that you'll not only sell your stories but get a chance to learn a lot about picture making while you are helping the director lay out his work.

One story will not be enough, as a rule, but many of the companies will put a section into the field if a half-dozen or a dozen original themes may be worked without undue expense.

What to Write the Editor.

Several have written to know what to write the editor when they send in a script.

What's the use of writing anything? Most editors have the press work to look after, or at least some of the details of the advertising and they have no time to read gushy letters. Since the script has been sent to the studio it is to be presumed that it is offered for sale and that is all the editor needs to know.

Don't tell him that you do hope he'll buy the script because you want to buy brother Willie a velocipede for his birthday or because you are trying to pay your way through college. It isn't going to help the sale or the price, because the editor is likely to suspect that the appeal is a faked bid for sympathy, and it is more apt to irritate than interest.

And don't tell him that it's your first scenario but that if he likes it you have a lot more. That it's the first is apparent and he knows very well that an acceptance will be followed by a flood of stories.

If he becomes interested in your work and takes the trouble to write you about it, as sometimes he will, thank him for his courtesy and add such other matter as the communication suggests, but wait until he gives the sign and meantime simply send in the script and its return cover and let him do the rest. It's the best way to get solid with an editor—just to leave him alone.

Melies Wants.

The G. Melies Company is advertising for scenarios and advises would-be contributors to send a stamped and self-addressed envelope to their studio, Sulphur Mountain Springs, Santa Paula, California, for their suggestion sheet before making submissions.

In the past this company has confined itself largely to Western subjcts in which the interest is not gained through crimes or promiscuous shooting. The company produces but a single reel a week.

Writers should bear in mind the fact that the riding stock is made a general feature and provide scenes for the exploitation of mounted chases, etc.

Inquiries.

S. K. R.—The addition of the 101 Ranch Company to the Bison stock has not resulted in the dismissal of any of the leading people. These are retained to play the acting parts, the show outfit supplying the local color.

J. A. F.—Where the addresses given in the list of companies recently published differ from the addresses given in the advertisements, it means that scenarios should be sent to the studio and not to the business office. The list is for the use of scenario writers.

M. H.—Mrs. Casey, in Imp's "Executive Clemency," and the old lady in the same company's "The Falling Out," were both played by Mrs. Brennan. The Imp Company does not advise us as to her first name, but it would seem that your letter merely seeks to determine whether the parts were played by the same person, so we have not queried again.

A. L. D.—You are only half right as to Miss Marion Leonard. She was once a Biograph star and later played in the Reliance Company. She was not with the I. M. P. Company, though two of the Biograph stars went to the Imp following the Biograph engagements.. We do not know whether she played the parts you mention and there is no way of getting hold of the information at this late day. We suppose that you are advised that she heads the new Gem Company.

MARY S.—Jack Standing is the player in "A Romance of the Sixties" and "Love's Victory." Romaine Fielding has the other lead in "Love's Victory." Miss Frances Gibson was the girl in both of these Lubin productions. Jack Halliday was the husband in the same company's "A Timely Lesson." Mr. Standing has appeared in a number of the Lubin productions, but has not been with that company since November. We understand he is with one of the Independent companies.

INQUISITIVE.—We're inclined to question the sincerity of your inquiries. With some fifty or sixty stories released each of the fifty-two weeks of the year, it very naturally follows that some plots will show similarity. The use of six-shooters in plays set in periods prior to the invention of the revolver is not always due to carelessness. The use of the old-fashioned single-barreled pistol would delay the action or reprses its spirit, and the anachronism is condoned for the sake of the general effect. Save in historical production, there is some excuse for the practise, and some forms of revolvers were in use in the latter part of the period you mention. Your last question answers itself. We have few plays with unpleasant endings because it is claimed that they are not wanted, and the manufacturers seek to give the sort of plays that find the widest approval. The theaters are regarded as places of entertainment and the happy ending is demanded by great majority of playgoers. The success of the so-called Biograph type of plays did not depend upon their sombreness for success, but pleased in spite of that because of the excellence of the acting. We are not aware that the Melies Company furnishes suggestion sheets to scenario writers.

AN INQUIRER, whose name we have mislaid, is advised that Miss Marion Leonard played Alaska Kate in the Reliance Company's "The Last Laugh."

CURIOUS.—"Bennie from Lubinville" is not yet a member of the stock company of that firm, but is in the business office. He is singularly wide awake for Philadelphia, and his willingness to help out the Inquiry Editors of this and other papers has brought him paper fame. He sometimes plays children in the films and he advises us confidentially that he did the best work of his brief career in "The Office Favorite," a forthcoming Lubin release.

BOB.—We believe that the Edison Company copyrights its productions by virtue of publication of its Kinetogram, or bi-monthly bulletin. The unproduced scenario cannot be copyrighted, as was explained in these columns, because it is not published. Motion pictures may also be copyrighted under class J as photographs.

T. P. E.—There are no blank forms to be had on application by mail, but some companies ask you to fill in a blank when you apply for work in person. Generally these are filled and that's the end of the story, since the positions are few and the applications innumerable.

B. J. F.—You appear to be the loser. There is no place where "all the films" are run off. The licensed product is seen by the Censor Board at 81 Fifth Avenue, and the Independent pictures at 111 East 14th Street. The Board of Censors has no projection room, as you appear to believe.

C. L. M.—Payment for a scenario carries with it the implied right to make such changes as may be demanded by studio conditions.

HAGGARD.—In the Thanhouser "She" Miss Marguerite Snow is She, James Cruze Kallikrates, and his descendant Leo Vincent, William C. Cowper and Horace Holly. The picture is in two, not three reels.

JEFF.—The Kalem Irish players were located near Lake Killarney and "Arrah-na-Pogue was made in that vicinity.

V. M. G.—The Lubin Company has no permanent studio in the West, but their Western director will presently take a company to Arizona. A company has already started for the South.

E. C. J.—Edward Boulden and Edwin Clarke were the bellboys in Edison's "The Sign of the Three Labels."

K. D.—It was Dolores, not Helen Costello, who played in Vitagraph's "Some Good in All." Helen Costello played in "The Old Doll," released about the same time, the former December 25th, the latter the 23rd.

NANCY.—King Baggot was the Naval Lieutenant in "The Sultan's Garden," which by the way, was an Imp and not a Thanhouser.

J. D. P.—We are sorry, but you are asking for trade secrets.

E. S. A.—The automobile fire apparatus shown in the Edison release is not experimental, but is regularly stationed in fire houses. One auto tower and a high-pressure tender are attached to the house in Center Street, near Canal.

G. B. T.—Miss Pearl White was Alice Wayne in Pathe's "The Reporter."

COMP.—You can submit your scenarios in galley proof if you want, but it would be well to break the column so that you can prove up on the usual 8½ x 11 typewriter paper. Proof paper is too flimsy to stand much handling. It might also be a good idea to run a note explaining that you are handier with a linotype than a typewriter. Galley proof is so suggestive of syndicated matter.

W. M. T.—The Mrs. Frances Hulette who plays in the Edison films is the mother of Gladys Hulette, but she is not the mother of Yale Boss.

PUZZLED.—While original titles are to be urged, if a caption already used seems particularly apt, there seems to be nothing to prevent its use. There are dozens of instances of title duplication to be noted in the past year, some of the titles being used more than twice. A matter of greater moment is to avoid the duplication of plot.

S. F. J.—We do not believe that you can obtain the desired photograph, as the player is not now with any company.

D. D. S.—The S— in Essanay does not stand for Selig, but Spoor.

T. N. M.—Photoplays are not sold as subjects, but by the foot, which is why the length is featured prominently. A nine-hundred-foot reel brings only nine-tenths as much as a full thousand feet. Film is not measured with a yardstick, but is passed through a machine in which the sprocket holes engage a sprocket wheel. A certain number of revolutions of the shaft to which this wheel is attached are required to cause a hand to make a circuit of a dial representing from one to four or five hundred feet, the usual length being one hundred. The face of the dial is marked into fractions, and the length of a reel may be determined almost to the inch. Leaders, title and censorship tag are all included in the measurement.

E. F. R.—The home addresses of photoplayers are not given, even should they be known. They should be addressed in care of their respective companies.

MISS L. H. B.—Miss Marguerite Snow was both She in the Thanhouser production of that name and the Elida in "The Lady of the Sea." James Cruze was Leo Viscent in "She" as well as his Greek ancestor, and William Russell was the Stranger in the Ibsen play. We have no record of a Reliance "The Birthmark," but there was a play by this title done by the Yankee. Hobart Bosworth was the Mate and Miss Bessie Eyton the Captain's Daughter in Selig's "The Mate of the Alden Besse." We do not believe that Gladys, of the Biograph, was ever with the Vitagraph, though her photograph bears a resemplance to Adele de Garde of the latter company.

G. H. J.—The Vitagraph has been using aviation subjects; you might try them. The Lubin Company, which started for the South last week may make some air pictures, but it will be too late to get to them. It's a good plan not to write aviation stories in which the actors are called upon to play leading parts and also run the 'plane.

Song and The Singer

By Clarence E. Sinn.

MISS BEATRICE HARCOURT, whose portrait appears this week, is a member of the "Aufderheide Trio," which is popularizing the already popular Aufderheide songs in Chicago and vicinity. Miss Harcourt is a very pretty young lady, with a good voice and pleasing personality and is making friends whenever and wherever she appears. The rio also includes E. Ham Wood and Paul C. Pratt. They report that hey are more than making good with "In Bamboo Land," "Ever Lovin' Bear Cat Dance," "Drifting In Dreams With You" and "Moontime is Spoontime." Mr. Pratt is the professional manager for the Chicago branch f J. H. Aufderheide & Co., whose home office is located at Indianapolis, nd. You are probably familiar with their trade captions of "The House f Melodic Ideas" and "The Home of Happy Melodies." The Chicago ranch is in the Randolph Building, suite 403, and is under the direction f Lawrence Wm. Deuker. They have a very efficient office force here ho are energetic, willing to oblige and possessed with an abounding faith n the Aufderheide goods (which are good goods) and this is as it should e. Mr. P. C. Pratt says that prospects couldn't be much better for the future and that "In Bamboo Land" is one of the greatest songs ever. The following are some of the acts now using the Aufderheide songs: Al Bernard on Southern time is singing "That Ever Lovin' Bear Cat Dance." Tascott with his great trio is using with great success "In Bamboo Land" and "That Ever Lovin' Bear Cat Dance." Sontuca Venetian Trio, playing Association time are featuring "In Bamboo Land," "Bear Cat Dance" and "Dusty Rag." Claude Kay is singing "Moontime Is Spoontime" and taking encores on this beautiful harmony ballad. The Invincible Comedy Four are singing "I Want a Patriotic Girl," "Drifting In Dreams With You" and "A Totally Different Rag," reporting the numbers as sure applause getters. Jeanette Adler is using "In Bamboo Land" and "Bear Cat Dance" and is more than enthusiastic with the success she is making with these songs.

MISS BEATRICE HARCOURT.

Featuring Aufderheide Music Co.'s Latest Songs.

Clifford and Carter are featuring the moon ballad "Moontime is Spoontime." The Three Rambler Girls have added "Moontime is Spoontime" to their act. Haraldson & Co. are using "In The Vicinity of My Affinity." John Scully, now in Chicago, is proving that such songs as "That Ever Lovin' Bear Cat Dance," "In Bamboo Land," "Moontime is Spoontime" and "I Want a Patriotic Girl" are audience songs of merit. Keating and Murray in their comedy sketch are using "In Bamboo Land" and "Bear Cat Dance." Wheeler and Hanley are singing "In Bamboo Land." Fern and Smith, presenting "The Hungry Coon," are doing the "Ever Lovin' Bear Cat Dance" with excellent results. The Aufderheide Trio (Beatrice Harcourt, Ham E. Wood and Paul C. Pratt) are putting 'em across with "In Bamboo Land," "Ever Lovin' Bear Cat," "Drifting In Dreams With You" and "Moontime is Spoontime." Jules Held, with his Childhood Days Company, is using with extraordinary success the Aufderheide jungle song "In Bamboo Land."

At the "Busy Corner," State and Monroe Streets, the Ted Snyder Company adds its quota to the busy-ness that gave the locality its name. This store, one of the most popular of the "Globe Song Shop" chain of Ted Snyder music stores, is under the direction of Mr. Frank Clark and is crowded to capacity at all hours of the day. There is a reason. Think over the number of really popular songs turned out last season—songs that have the "go" and ginger, and you will find Ted Snyder's name at the top of the list among the publishers of them. "Alexander's Rag-time Band," "In the Land of Harmony" and a host of others. Now they are preparing for the coming summer's campaign with a host of equally good numbers. "Pick, Pick, Pick on Your Mandolin, Antonio," by Irving Berlin, is a very catchy Italian character song and promises to be another "Sweet Italian Love" by the same composer. It has already taken hold with the public and the singer who fails to add it to his or her repertoire very soon, is overlooking an opportunity. A splendid ballad this house is bringing out is entitled "Take Me Back to the Garden of Love," which is sure to be among the successes of the coming summer. It is a sentimental high-class ballad, rich in both words and music and will undoubtedly be much heard and heard of.

Mr. Frank Clark (Chicago manager for Ted Snyder) has returned from a visit to the East, where he spent the holidays. He put in a week at Atlantic City and reports everything looks promising for a good summer business. On the way back he stopped over at Pittsburg, where one of the Ted Snyder "Globe Song Shops" is being remodeled. Frank brought with him a new song which he thinks is going to be a sensation. It is called "Take A Little Tip From Father" and it is certainly starting out well; they are all grabbing for it. Talking about "grabbing" for a song, it is impossible to supply the demand for "Everybody's Doing It." Frank Clark is concentrating his efforts on "Rag Time Violin" with the intention of making it the biggest sensation Chicago has ever seen. Miss Flo Jacobson, "That Popular Band Singer" with the Ted Snyder forces, is singing "Pick, Pick, Pick on Your Mandolin" and says it is going to give "Sweet Italian Love" a close run for the money. Amy Butler introduced this song at the Majestic Theater a short time ago, and it went big. Make no mistake, here are five songs you want to get acquainted with quick: "Ragtime Violin," "Everybody's Doing It," "Take A Little Tip From Father," "Take Me Back to the Garden of Dreams" and "Pick, Pick, Pick on Your Mandolin."

Rocco Vocco, professional manager for Chas. K. Harris, predicts a very big hit in "Fairy Moon." He is now using it with great success at the Parkway Theater. This promises to be another famous "moon" song. Others who report favorably upon this number are as follows: Carmin Romans, who is now with Chas. K. Harris, says "Fairy Moon" is a Great Big Hit with him at the Circle Theater. Jack Roberts, playing at the Jefferson, says he is "making the hit of his life" with this song. Taking it all around, Rocco Vocco says he is confident that "Fairy Moon" is going to be as big a seller as Chas. K. Harris ever turned out; and you know he is responsible for some big winners.

Mr. Tom Faxon, of the Tell Taylor music house ("The House of Melodies"), reports that the two new songs, "Way Down South" and "O'er the Billowy Sea" are going with enormous success. Mr. Faxon was in Milwaukee last week for a few days and said the songs met with big success in that city (that made something else famous). That Bass Song of Mr. Earl Smith's is sure some song, says Tom, and is already in demand by all the bass singers around the city. The following acts are now using it: Dayton (the man with the three voices), Orpheus Comedy Four, Amsterdam Quartette, Church City Four and Gotham Four.

Mr. Thomas J. Quigley, the well-liked tenor, manager and all-around good fellow, has returned to this city from New York and has taken charge of the "M. Witmark & Sons" business here. Mr. Quigley will be glad to meet all his old friends and introduce them to the hottest ever from the pen of Geo. Christie, "Lady Angeline." This number only arrived in Chicago last Monday (January 15th), and the performers are going after it like hungry boys after one of mother's pies. Ascher B. Samuels, the assistant manager for Witmark & Sons, says "we are working our heads off on this song" and I predict it will be the one big bet. "Lady Angeline" has a swing and "go" that catches and holds your attention from the first. Don't overlook it.

THE NEW GLOBE AMUSEMENT COMPANY, LOS ANGELES.

Incorporated under the laws of the State of California for $1,000,000, the Globe Amusement Company seems destined to revolutionize the motion picture and vaudeville business of Los Angeles and the neighboring cities.

It is their purpose to build a chain of magnificent theaters extending through the most populous suburbs of Los Angeles. The entire circuit will be constructed along the same lines: a beautiful front of pressed brick and white tile surmounted by a huge illuminated dome, which in turn is capped by a powerful searchlight. The whole will carry a myriad of electric lights. The interiors are primarily designed for comfort and safety, while rich in the extreme; a lower floor with wide aisles and inviting opera chairs, a mezzanine with loges and lounging chairs of the most approved type. There will be a foyer in the rear of this floor where the patrons can order refreshments at tables while watching the performance.

Exclusive first-run pictures and high-class vaudeville will be the offering at these houses. A perfectly appointed stage, with a half-dozen sets of scenery, will be part of the equipment of each house. Mr. H. W. Nixon will be the general manager of this vast enterprise with offices at 728-729-730 Title Insurance Bldg., Los Angeles. Pending the completion of this building, the offices of Mr. Nixon are at 915 Security Bldg.

CHICAGO LETTER.

By Jas. S. McQuade.

SERGEANT JEREMIAH W. O'CONNOR, head of the Chicago censor board for moving pictures, is as ardent in his admiration for good picture subjects as he is careful in weeding out the undesirable and objectionable. The sergeant is proud of the type of pictures permitted in Chicago and never misses an opportunity to give them a boost.

Sergeant O'Connor has a son in a boarding school, about twenty miles from Chicago, whom he visits frequently. The rector of the school, on learning of Mr. O'Connor's position in Chicago, became much interested in moving pictures and asked his opinion on the installation of a picture machine in the school. The sergeant recommended that it be done, and now the boys have an exhibition every week of a specially selected program, furnished by a Chicago exchange. It is needless to say that the rector and the boys are delighted with the new educational aids. In his report to his superior officer, for the week ending January 13, Sergeant O'Connor showed that 84 films were inspected, of which four were rejected. Cut-outs were also made in 19 films, the total number of feet of films rejected being 4,525.

Sergeant O'Connor's bureau also keeps a close surveillance on vaudeville and other theaters in the city. Parts of plays and acts considered objectionable are ordered to be eliminated. In one theater seven parts of acts were ordered to be cut out, in another five parts, and in another four parts, for the week mentioned.

Selig Display Captures Prizes.

A unique and much-admired feature of the famous Rose Tournament parade at Pasadena on New Year's Day was the Selig section of the display. For the first time in the history of the great carnival, wild beasts and queer domestic animals of the far Orient were scattered among the modern flower-bedecked equipages in the gorgeous line of march. Better still, four pretty actresses rode in a stylish turnout through the admiring multitude and jauntily tossed fragrant flowers onto the upturned faces of the thousands along the way. The actresses represented the big Selig studio in Los Angeles, and the animals were from the Selig wild animal farm. So tastefully had Manager McGee, of the Pacific Coast branch of the company, arranged his entries that the Selig aggregation captured two cash prizes, in competition with the entries of many famous millionaires and powerful civic organizations.

The piece de resistance of the Selig entries was a stylish English golfing wagon, drawn by prancing Selig horses, and containing four charming young ladies—the Misses Besserer, Harte, Shepard and Eyton. These young ladies rode waist-deep in fragrant California blossoms and showered the crowds with petals. Frank Clark, of the Selig Company, acted as their whip. Then came the big Selig elephant, "Toddles," ridden by a lovely product of California, dressed to represent the Queen of the Pacific, representing the seaside city of Redondo. There followed two camels blanketed with flowers and a cage of wolves, drawn by trick ponies and driven by "Bootsie," attired as Red Ridinghood. These entries bore the Selig trade mark and were complimented by all who saw them.

Miss Martha Russell's Tour of Moving Picture Theaters.

Miss Martha Russell, at one time leading lady of Essanay's Eastern stock company, and now on a tour of the country lecturing on Essanay pictures in which she took leading parts, and which are run off during her lecture, has written an interesting letter describing her wonderful success in this new field.

Miss Russell, at the time of writing, had been through Illinois, Indiana, Iowa, Kentucky, Tennessee and Georgia, and she stated that Florida would next be visited, and then Cuba, after which the return trip to New York will be made.

"I am in Mr. Montgomery's theater in Atlanta," writes Miss Russell. "This theater is the most beautiful of its kind I have ever seen. Mr. Montgomery is a wonderful moving picture manager, and his pictures, instrumental music and singing—in fact, everything pertaining to this theater—are of the finest type and most costly.

"I am meeting with wonderful success on this tour. As you probably know, three Essanay pictures (changing daily), in which I played the leading parts, are run off, and I talk about them and the wonderful future of the moving picture business. I meet the patrons after each performance and shake hands and converse with them. I have made many warm friends, who assure me they will smile upon me, as I smile at them, when I return to pictures this spring. The managers all feel that this is a tonic to the business. Even managers of houses which were competitors of those in which I appeared were satisfied, believing that I helped the picture game and, therefore, everyone in the business.

"I could almost write a book about this wonderful and interesting trip. No one can realize, until he or she sees the moving picture business in the way I have been enabled to do, what a wonderful and lasting hold these moving pictures have upon the public. To find so many educated, cultured people in the theaters I visited has been a rare treat to me. The Moving Picture World, I find, is widely read and is spoken of highly by everyone. I am asked by a great many people how they can get in closer touch with the pictures, and I advise them all to read the World."

Chicago Film Brevities.

Stanley Twist, publicity man for the Selig Polyscope Company, who has been in the hospital for some time, is recovering rapidly, and returned to his desk Monday, January 29th. His many sincere friends congratulate him on his speedy convalescence.

Schuyler Colfax, of the Eastman Company, Rochester, N. Y., spent a few days in the city during the week of January 15th, and returned East on January 20th.

Joe Mergener, assistant manager of the Western Film Exchange, Milwaukee, visited the city last week on business. He reported that the Western is recovering rapidly from the effects of the disastrous fire of recent date.

S. L. Rothapfel, manager of the Lyric Theater, Minneapolis, was in the city Friday and Saturday, January 19 and 20, on business. During his stay he was a very busy man, but found time to go out to the Selig plant and learn some of its mysteries. Mr. Rothapfel informed me that the return dates, January 11-14, for "Cinderella," were marked by capacity business. He is fully confident that the Lyric is now on the way to remarkable favor and prosperity.

Fred W. Hartmann opened his new house, the Rex, at 3448 Southport Avenue, on Tuesday, January 16. He reports very satisfactory business since the opening. He is using a high grade service furnished by the G. F. Co.'s branch at 17 S. Wabash. Mr. Hartmann will also open another new theater, the Fay, at 2611 Lincoln Avenue, about January 25. Straight pictures will also be used in this house and will be also furnished by the above exchange. Mr. Hartmann has had wide experience in the management of vaudeville and picture theaters. He has made successes in La Crosse Wis., Waterloo, Iowa, and other cities, during his career. Mr. Hartmann makes a specialty of taking hold of non-paying houses and making them profitable.

S. S. Hutchinson, president of the American Film Manufacturing Company, accompanied by his family, left for El Cajon Valley, Cal., on Wednesday, January 17. A stay of several weeks will be made there.

The new factory of the American Film Manufacturing Company, on Evanston and Devon Avenues, was occupied Monday, January 22. The new studio, in connection with the factory, will not be occupied for a few weeks yet. It is rapidly nearing completion.

Henry W. Schell, owner and manager of the Boulevard and Schell theaters, this city, was seen last week, and reported very dull business during the cold spell. Mr. Schell looks for exceptional business from this time on.

Mr. Coleman is building a new house near the Schell Theater (within one and a half blocks) that will seat 300 people. The theater will be finished in about two months. Another new house is being built at the corner of 55th Street and Center Avenue, by a Mr. Baker. This theater is about half a mile from the Schell and will seat 300. It will be opened in two or three weeks.

Carl Laemmle arrived in the city Saturday, January 20, and will spend several weeks in the West before returning to New York. After visiting Minneapolis, on business, it is his intention to take a few days' rest at the French Lick Springs Indiana.

The Alvin, a new house on 63d and Drexel Avenues, owned by C. B. Reynolds, a prominent railroad man, was opened Monday, January 22. Mr. Reynolds intends to acquire a chain of high class picture theaters, in which straight pictures will be used. The service for the Alvin is furnished by the A. F. Co.'s branch, 429 S. Wabash.

W. H. Apgar opened the Edgewater Theater, Monday, January 15. This is a new house, at 1130 Bryn Mawr Avenue. It seats 300 people and exclusive moving pictures are shown. Admission is ten cents, and Mr. Apgar is strongly encouraged by all the best business and professional men of Edgewater.

S. Wertheimer will open the Sylvia, a new house, located at 2809-11 Sheffield Avenue, near Diversey Boulevard, on Saturday, January 27, or Monday, January 29. The Sylvia seats 300 people. A good service is furnished by the G. F. Co.'s branch at 429 S. Wabash.

Katz & Rosenthal will open a new theater at 5619 Center Avenue on January 27. The service of this house is also furnished by Manager Van Ronkel, of the G. F. Co.'s branch, 429 S. Wabash.

B. Petchaft & Co. will open a new house, the Princess, on Western Avenue, near North Avenue, on Saturday, January 27. The capacity is 300 seats. Service will be furnished by the G. F. Co.'s branch at 429 S. Wabash.

Among the Chicago Houses.

By Charles A. Young.

THE Lyceum Theater, at 39th Street and Cottage Grove Avenue, one of the Jones, Linick & Schaefer houses, has been running a program of straight pictures for the past few months, and is seemingly a very popular house. It has a large seating capacity, being built for vaudeville, and can, of course, afford good film service, which is supplied by the American branch of the General Film Company. Operator Harry Forbes has one of the longest throws in the city, 118 feet, and at the end of that throw a Sunlight curtain sends back one of the best pictures in town, despite the distance. I may say that the picture at the Lyceum is about the best of any that I have seen in the Jones, Linick & Schaefer houses so far. A Powers No. 6 and a Powers 5 are the machines used, both of them giving good curtain results. Harry Forbes is the first man I have yet heard to utter a complaint against the "Six," but with good reason. He got the third finger of his left hand caught between the crank and the flywheel in some way, crushing the middle joint badly. He removed the possibility of a second accident of the kind by extending the crank shaft about an inch, giving plenty of clearance between crank and flywheel. Outside of the bad impression given him by his unfortunate accident, he thinks highly of the machine. Mr. Fred Linick, of the firm of Jones, Linick & Schaefer, is manager of this house, and I was much pleased to learn from Mr. Forbes that he is one of those rare managers who will not allow the films to be rushed. Instead of that, the main floor seats sell for double price on holiday, Saturday and Sunday evenings, as well as when special features like "Vanity Fair" are put on. That is the right way to get money out of specials—to run them right, and get the extra money through increased prices of admission. The operating room is well fitted up, with two machines, dissolving stereopticon and spotlight. Mr. Forbes has equipped his rewinder with a motor drive, using an ordinary fan motor inverted with its base fastened to the under side of the rewind bench, which is a great convenience. The screen has been set at the extreme rear of the stage, which gives the picture considerable depth, and makes the front seats far enough away from it to make them desirable. Altogether a very pleasant show to visit.

Oakland Theater.

The Oakland Theater, at 39th and the "Grove," formerly the Swanson, is still doing business at the old stand, but under different management. The manager is R. M. Power, who bought one of the first mirror screens in Chicago for his house on Twelfth Street. Projection is excellent. Al Fields is the operator, and presents a picture above all criticism as far as his work is concerned. His light is white, clear and even, and the picture even on the old Curtainyline screen is very bright, though the bluish tinge of the screen takes away the sunshiny effect the picture ought to have. However, Mr. Power says that a Sunlight curtain is coming, and the pictures will then be done full justice. Service is supplied by H. & H. Film Service Company, and though first run is not used, the reels are new enough to be in good order. The original decorations in the color scheme of green and gold are still on the walls and could hardly be improved upon.

Glamour Theater.

I went over to the Glamour Theater, 63d Street and Wentworth Avenue, with a friend to show him what a real picture on the curtain looked like and wasn't disappointed. Mr. John Miller is still proprietor of the Glamour, but has given over the active management of it to Jack St. Clair, who is continuing the policies of Mr. Miller. The projection equipment includes a Motiograph and a Mercury Arc Rectifier, a combination that insures good results. Ben Hannaberg is the operator, and the mere fact that he works at the Glamour is evidence that he is capable. The light is handled very well, and the announcement slides are clean and good. Mr. Miller believes in letting his patrons know what is coming, and the program of bookings for almost an entire week is shown on the screen. He isn't afraid to run old stuff and repeat on real features, too; for instance, he is running on December 24 the Vitagraph production, the "Battle Hymn of the Republic," now more than six months old, and running it for the fourth time. He lays claim to the distinction of being the first manager to book a third reel. Music is a feature of the Glamour program, rendered by a blind pianist, Richard Boehler. Songs are given by Miss Martin, also a blind musician. Much stir was caused some time ago when these two people eloped and were married, the press being filled with news about them.

Calvert Theater.

The Calvert Theater, on 18th Street near Wabash Avenue, was a disappointment to me. It is a newly opened house, and I could have expected to find a good picture in it, but I didn't. In the first place, it is very poorly designed for a moving picture house, being broader than it is deep, and two-thirds of the seats are so far to the side of the screen that views from them are merely distorted caricatures of the picture, due to foreshortening. The throw is very short, 40 or 45 feet, necessitating the use of a short focus lens, and the machine is located considerably to one side of the center of the screen, resulting in a wedge-shaped picture. Worse than all this, the lights are so imperfectly shaded that they absolutely kill the picture. The shades are of the scoop pattern, covering half the lamp, and are of no use at all, as they are now placed, that is, over the lamp. It would be best to put the shades between the lamp and the screen, that is, those on the side walls. The lamps on the rear wall could be dispensed with entirely, and ought to be, as they cannot be shaded. The light on the picture was very poor, due to insufficient current or an incompetent operator, and the larger part of the center of the picture was a gray ghost, with only the corners bright. This sort of picture will never build up a trade. The York Theater, on 22d Street, a few blocks away, has a good picture, and the neighbors of the Calvert who may visit the York cannot help comparing them, not to the advantage of the Calvert, I am sorry to say. I have not seen so weak a picture as that at the Calvert for a long time, so it behooves the manager to set to work and rectify the faults now existing in his theater. If he doesn't—why, the pictures won't attract as he has been told they do, and the moving picture business will be blamed for a loss instead of the real offender, poor projection.

"JOY AND GLOOM" BOOKLET.

The Charles L. Kiewert Company, of New York, importers of the well-known "Bio" carbons, have made a deal with Mr. T. E. Powers, the famous cartoonist of the New York American. Mr. Powers has lately been drawing a series of popular cartoons in which he uses some funny little characters that he calls "Joy" and "Gloom." Mr. Powers has always confined his work to the sphere of fun and satire for the reading columns and has never been known to dabble in advertising, but by some unknown and powerful influence, the Charles L. Kiewert Company have persuaded him to do a number of his "Joy and Gloom" drawings for their advertising matter. This is decidedly a novel idea, because it is quite certain that any person will enjoy reading the "Bio" ads even though a carbon is the last thing he would ever want. The "Joy and Gloom" ads will be circulated in the form of a booklet and will be sent to exhibitors and exchanges everywhere. Exhibitors are requested by the Kiewert Company to send their names and addresses to be sure of securing a copy.

Comments on the Films

"THE LITTLE POET" (Essanay), January 19.—The comedy in this film lies wholly in the difference in size between the small poet and his large wife. They come to the paternal homestead when hunger presses sore, as mother and little boy. There is much sport in the incongruous sizes of the two persons. The photographs are good. The audience laughed now and then.

"THE TWO SPIES" (Kalem), January 19.—It has remained for this company to introduce a novelty in the work of spies during war by sending out a woman from one army and a man from the other and arranging to have them meet while they are engaged in their special missions. Of course there is a love affair. There are some interesting escapades and a rescue or two from ruffians to add zest to the picture. Eventually there comes a time when it is necessary for the girl to expose the man, but love proves stronger than duty and she fails to do it. A mutual understanding is reached and there is a promise on the part of the man to return after the war closes and claim her. It is a good story and is well told, albeit a little far fetched. It has the good quality of Kalem war pictures.

"THE LITTLE ORGANIST" (Edison), January 19.—The curse of village gossip is adequately pictured in this interesting film. A young woman arouses the jealousy of certain village busybodies and when the minister shows his preference for her some means is sought to destroy her character. She has taken her sister's child to care for and when these gossips discover her romping with the little girl they immediately spread the usual scandalous tale. Things are in a bad way for her when the child's mother fortunately appears to take her home. The minister is asked to resign, but when the mystery is cleared up there is a revulsion of feeling and he is asked to stay. When he introduces the young woman as his future wife the clouds all pass away. But the taint of the gossip can hardly be forgotten. It is almost a feature.

"TOM TILLING'S BABY" (Vitagraph), January 19.—There is a touch of heart-interest about this picture. It might be sub-titled, "How a horse-shoe brought good luck," or something similar. The jealous butler of a wealthy family, to tease the nurse, hides the baby in some bushes. Tom sees the infant and takes the baby home. He answers the advertisement and baby is returned to its grief-stricken parents. The baby's father sets Tom up in business as a bootblack. The butler is discharged, notwithstanding his asseverations that it was only a joke. The story is simple, but it is well told and acted and cannot fail to interest, although it is not powerfully convincing. Kenneth Casey plays the bootblack. It is well photographed, is of full length and will be a good filler.

"A NIGHT OUT" (Selig), January 19.—Another version of the old story that married men must account for their coming and going to their wives. This one had a sick friend, as usual, but apparently he was at a prize fight, for a moving picture, seen by his wife sometime afterward, shows her benevolent husband there enjoying the time of his life. She induced him to go with her to the show and when his picture appeared on the screen the consternation depicted in his face is well worth seeing. When they arrive home the riot act is read to him with an emphasis which he won't soon forget.

"SEEING BUFFALO" (Selig), January 19.—Another interesting series of pictures in Selig's well-known travelogs. This time the interesting points in and about Buffalo are carefully and accurately illustrated. The points are well chosen and the mechanical work is done so well that criticism is unnecessary.

"THE LOAFER" (Essanay), January 20.—Perhaps this film was intended as a testimony to the value of thrashing. At any rate, because of a horsewhipping, supplemented by the present of a pair of horses, along with an injunction to get busy, a loafer becomes a prosperous man, and in later years repays the kindness of the ringleader of those who did it by giving him enough money to liquidate his mortgage. It is a Western story built on lines different enough to make it novel and interesting.

"A DARK DECEPTION" (Lubin), January 17.—A rough farce to please the gallery. A girl, her lover, a count and a negro butler are the principals. The lover knows that the count is to call. He is jealous, captures the butler and, with the help of theatrical friends, makes up to look like him. He then abuses the count. It is funny.

"THE PEANUT INDUSTRY" (Lubin), January 17.—On the same reel with the above there is this unusually interesting industrial film. It is very instructive and deals with a subject that few of the vast army of peanut users know much about. They will be very pleased to know about peanut farming and packing.

"THE BLIND MINER" (Vitagraph), January 22.—A very interesting picture which, however, is not highly dramatic. Its chief value is in that it pictures what takes place in a mine immediately after an explosion. There is a slight love interest. The blind miner, now incapacitated for labor, leads the rescuers. They have oxygen helmets, but he refuses to put one on. He wants to be able to hear clearly so that he can lead to the gallery where his son-in-law is trapped. The prisoned miners are rescued and resuscitated. The pictures of the coal mine were taken underground. It is instructive as well as interesting, and because of that we place it among the features.

"THE LADY POLICE" (Lubin), January 22.—A fantastic farce, almost wholly fresh and very funny. To get the women's vote, the suffragette leader was made commissioner of police and she chose a very pretty farce to maintain the law. The cells were fitted up like rooms in a girls' boarding school. It wasn't long before the jail had a waiting list. Soon the other women paraded with a sign "Home is the place for husbands, not jail." It is very light; but it kept the audience laughing. It is well photographed and will serve as a feature on occasions where a very light bill is desirable.

"FOR HIS SON" (Biograph), January 22.—A very significant picture. It has a clearly seen purpose and is in fact a tract; but it has dramatic qualities and besides a freshness of interest that make it deeply interesting. A new, soft drink, "Dopocoke," has been placed on the market by a doctor and its tremendous success as a "bracer" has made him rich. The secret was, it had cocaine in it. This doctor had brought up his son badly and he was a mere spender. The doctor put out the "soft" drink knowing that he was preying on peoples' souls; but he needed the money for this precious son. The picture powerfully suggests the widening grip of the Demon Cocaine as the bottles of "Dopocoke" multiply and people begin to get the habit. The boy gets the habit, becomes a wreck and dies and then the old man has no son; but he is still rich. The roles of the doctor and of a stenographer are, at most moments, very suggestively filled. The son is also played pretty well and the lesser office figures. The photographs are good; it is of full length and will serve as a feature. It might be advertised as a strong arraignment of harmful soft drinks.

"A GIRL OF THE WEST" (Vitagraph), January 20.—A Western melodrama with three or four interesting characters. The story is also interesting, but its dramatic interest springs chiefly from the chase; there are three different phases of it shown. The first comes after Dolly, the heroine, (Miss Christie) has learned that her sweetheart's valuable horse has been stolen and she gallops off to warn the man who she knows is expecting to buy it, cash down. The second is a race between Dance-hall Nell (Miss Case), who is in league with the thief, and Polly. Polly escapes from Nell, but comes a bit too late and encounters the thief with the money. She has a dramatic struggle with this man and her pistol shot brings the cowboys to the rescue. From this comes the final chase and climax. There is excitement, but the picture might have been conducted to give it more, make it more convincing. For instance, there was a cowboy who waited for the crowd, although he was ready and might have dashed to the girl's rescue at once. Miss Christie makes a pleasing heroine and Miss Case's characterization, when Nell gets the thief's note asking for help, and also that of Jones, the horse buyer, are very good, although the latter was a bit self-conscious. A first class filler.

"TO SAVE HER BROTHER" (Edison), January 20.—A thoroughgoing melodrama making use of improbable incidents; its hero does a technically criminal act, holds up a mail stage, to save his sweetheart's brother. This brother had stolen money from his father's safe, because he had read the ad of the Golden Opportunity Co. and wanted to double the money in a day or so. He then learns that the advertiser is a fraud and asks the hero to help him. The plot is clear and fairly well put together; the photographs are very good and the players commendable. The result doesn't grip very strongly; it is too unconvincing. A fair filler.

"THINGS ARE SELDOM WHAT THEY SEEM" (Kalem), January 22.—A comedy in a Western setting. An unsuccessful suitor attempts to discredit the girl's accepted sweetheart by impersonating a woman. There are two amusing climaxes in the picture; the first of these is fairly fresh. The "girl," riding away from the hotel, is followed by a Mexican who has fallen in love with her. He gets his fellows to make a capture; but in the tussle the girl's wig comes off and the other Mexicans enjoy their amorous leader's discomfiture. The second is the quickness with which the duped sweetheart gets his gun out when he discovers the imposture. It is well played by the leading man who acts just like a girl. It does not drag and is well photographed. It will serve as a good filler.

"DAD'S WATCH" (Essanay), January 18.—Though this story is based on an old theme, a father's objection to his daughter's choice of a husband, it is worked out in a new way. The good doctor is her father invited to a dinner where he is to meet some learned professors. In reality he meets some very gay girls. The wine gets in his head and he gets rather gay himself. He is left to pay for the dinner and is forced to leave his watch as security. The young man bribes the waiter and gets the watch. He returns it next day and the girl's hand is the price of silence.

"THE OUTLAW AND THE BABY" (Melies), January 18.—The story of this film tells of the influence that the child had upon an outlaw. He stopped at her father's house for something to eat and when he left she toddled away after him. Her father returned and, upon missing her, suspected that the bandit had carried her away. The bandit himself discovers her as she is being followed by an Indian and risks capture to take her home. The sheriff and all his deputies have been assembled, but the bandit holds them all up, relieves them of their arms and departs. He leaves a note for the sheriff, saying that he intends to live straight in the future, all because of the little one.

"THE OLD BOOKKEEPER" (Biograph), January 18.—A good, heart-interest story, very dramatic and very naturally acted by the Biograph's best company. It is commendable on every count, but one specially noteworthy thing is the well co-ordinated and speedy drawing together of all the elements to make a dramatic and emotional climax. The scenes are often pretty, the photographs are suggestive and clear, the acting gives many interesting moments besides carrying the story forward clearly through the whole, full-length reel. No exhibitor will make a mistake in featuring this picture which is substantial, exciting and healthy. The old bookkeeper, played by this company's well-known, short, elderly player, is the center of interest. He was so charitable that he could save no money; but he was so friendly that everyone made friends with him, except the new office manager whom the employer left in charge and the landlady. He soon found himself out of work and homeless. Seated, shivering on the steps of his employer's home awaiting his return, he hears burglars enter and bravely goes in to protect his employer's goods. He gets into difficulties. The rescue makes a thrilling climax after a well-handled suspense.

"A JUST VERDICT" (Lubin), January 18.—A melodramatic story played by the Lubin second company. It is interesting and, at its end, some in the audience applauded. The story is neither very original or very strong, yet neither has it any marked weakness. A sleep walker stumbles over the body of his host in the library, dead by suicide. Before he awakes, he places unconsciously the last letter of the deceased in his pocket. On awaking, he is horror-stricken and rushes back to his room where he takes off the dressing robe and returns to the library. The police are there and have found the weapon. It is owned by the lover of the girl of the house with whom the dead man had quarreled. No one knows how it came there and the lover is accused of murder. The note is discovered in time to save him. It is dramatic and well photographed. It is of full length. Will be an acceptable filler.

"MERELY A MILLIONHEIR" (Selig), January 18.—A comedy in which Mr. Hobart Bostworth plays a double part with the contrast that lies between a society man and a dirty, ragged tramp. The only weak feature in this reel, full length, is poor photography. It keeps hold of the comedy spirit all through and is both fresh and very amusing, Mr. Bostworth being well supported by his entire cast. The audience laughed and seemed much pleased. The millionheir promised his friends that they wouldn't know him at the mask ball as he was coming as a tramp. He finds a tramp who looks just like him and, in a spirit of fun, sends him. He forgets that his fiancée is to be there. The tramp arrives and acts the part. He wins the big silver cup, prize for his costume. The fiancée gets him out into the moonlight and doesn't understand why he won't kiss her; but, though a tramp, he is at heart a gentleman. He makes a date, four o'clock the next afternoon, and promises her a kiss then; he also makes a date, the same hour, with the club's champion boxer with a promise to knock his block off, and he makes a date with everybody to give them good booze at the same hour. Next day, at four o'clock, there's a jolly gathering at the millionheir's. The last scene shows the tramp by his camp fire. It is commendable as a leading comedy.

"A COMPROMISE" (Lubin), January 20.—A very short farce that never falls down from start to finish. The idea is fresh and in the atmosphere of a farce, amusing and it is handled as was proper. It is bright and laughable.

"A BOARDING-HOUSE ROMANCE" (Lubin), January 20.—A farce of about 600 feet showing a boarding-house love affair with the usual concomitants, coyness and jealousy. One can not say that it is very amusing. It surely isn't very fresh in anything. The audience that watched it was small and there were no laughs. The last scene is a hugging match.

"MAKING HAY" (Lubin), January 20.—A very interesting agricultural picture showing the newest wrinkles in hay making. The photographs are up to Lubin standard in all the three pictures on this reel and it will serve as a good program filler.

"BRUTUS" (Cines), January 20.—This sumptuously produced picture of Shakespear's "Julius Caesar," was reviewed on page 193 of the Moving Picture World for January 20, 1912. It needs no further comment.

"THE BANDIT'S MASK" (Selig), January 23.—A melodramatic picture which has little thrill and not much originality. There is, however, one moment when the action, which takes the form of a struggle on the tip of a precipice, becomes tense; that is the only thrill in the picture. The backgrounds are Mexican. There are two Americans, one is a bandit and the other is suspected. The suspected, innocent man is pursued, but eludes the Mexican posse at the edge of a cliff. The heroine, a Mexican girl, hides him. He is captured at her house; but at the moment when they are going to hang him, the real culprit is brought in and the innocent lover is freed. The photographs are good pictorially, but have a blurred effect that interferes very much with clearness. One can't distinguish faces of players who are riding. It is a filler.

"THE STOLEN NICKEL" (Edison), January 23.—A delightful, heart-interest picture of a typical small boy. It is very well played by Yale Boss. His parents didn't let him have any pocket money at all. He chanced to pick up a nickel on the sidewalk. He knew whom it belonged to; but the temptation was strong and he spent it. He then suffered all the poignant repentance that such a youngster would be likely to feel. He saw the necessity of returning the money and started to earn it, one penny at a time, so that he could make the restitution. The state of mind that led up to this resolution, the difficulties he encountered in making the money, the inter-reaction of the boy and all the characters with whom he came in contact and the effect on them when his repayment disclosed the situation are all very dramatically and skilfully shown. It is a good feature picture, well photographed, excellently acted and of full length.

"JEAN INTERVENES" (Vitagraph), January 23.—Jean is the Vitagraph black and white collie and those who watch the pictures closely will remember that a few months back Jean was pictured as coming between two lovers. That picture was much more believable. This picture shows Jean as exhibiting human traits of sympathy and intelligence that the spectator can not accept. Miss Turner and Hal Reid play the leading parts; are the two lovers who quarrel over Jean, the lover being somewhat jealous of the collie, and whom Jean in the end brings together again. Miss Edith Halleran and Wallace Reid play important roles as a married couple, friends of the lovers. Miss Turner's acting, and as far as that goes the acting of all the principals, gives more than one pretty moment to the picture, which, however, doesn't afford her any real freedom. It is not shown to fair advantage. The plot, the story itself and even the backgrounds, which appear disjointed, keep the picture from rising very much above commonplace. The camera work is fair; it is of full length. A filler.

"FATHER'S BLUFF" (Edison), January 24.—For a long time father had compelled his family to perform all the manual labor about the premises, threatening suicide if they did not instantly carry out his instructions. A young man appears on the scene to make love to the daughter. Father objects for he foresees that one of his willing assistants may depart. They decide to call his bluff, so the young man unloads a good line of death dealing appliances, headed by a large keg of gunpowder. When next father threatens to shuffle off he is not restrained. Instead, the family lead him to the woodshed and show him the collection of apparatus. Father is nonplussed, but he doesn't like to give up. He sits on the keg, and suddenly discovers to his horror that the fuse is lighted. Then he beats a precipitate retreat and when next he is seen he is laboring with the bucksaw, a pleasure in which he had not indulged for many moons. He apologizes and the young lovers proceed with their own affairs.

"ACCIDENTS WILL HAPPEN" (Kalem), January 24.—A young man, with store clothes, of which he is proud, and an automobile, or which he is prouder, meets an old school friend and invites her to ride. She accepts, much to the disguist of her sweetheart, who has no store clothes and no automobile. All goes well until the machinery goes wrong. Then comes one of those scenes which are common enough; the sweetheart appears with a wagon and after refusing once takes the girl in, but will not allow the young man to ride. The picture closes with the stylishly dressed young man hauling the machine home by means of a rope over his shoulder.

"HOW JIM PROPOSED" (Kalem), January 24.—A delightful bit of comedy which relates with some detail Jim's difficulties in attempting to propose. The girl was willing, but something always occurred to prevent his saying what he wished to say. These troubles, together with the way he did propose, furnish the basis for this interesting picture.

"CAPTAIN BARNACLE'S MESSMATE" (Vitagraph), January 24.—This old favorite has not been seen of late, but once again he appears, this time to help his old friend, Captain Bunce, out of a very tight place. Bunce has met some friends on shore and as a consequence finds himself in a strange town with a very small supply of money. He seeks the lodging house of Mrs. Mulligan and engages a room. She wants payment in advance, but Bunce can't do that. However, the widow is anxious to marry a second time and sees in poor Bunce an easy victim. Once he escapes, but she brings him back and then takes his hat and shoes so he can't go again. He finds means to acquaint his old friend Barnacle with the facts and the latter comes to his rescue. While apparently sympathizing with the widow he is in reality getting means of escape to Bunce. Then ostensibly he locks him in his room and goes down to bring the minister. Instead, he goes into the back yard where Bunce is letting himself down by a rope. They start for Barnacle's boat. The widow gives chase, but they manage to reach the boat and the picture closes, Bunce smoking his pipe in peace at his mess mate's fireside. It might be proper to remark that Barnacle gives Bunce a sound berating for permitting himself to get caught in such a plight. It is a fair feature, well photographed and acceptable.

"THE HEART OF A 'BOSS'" (Lubin), January 24.—The interest in this story lies in the fact that a banker remembered a newsboy and when opportunity came helped him to rise. Eventually the boy becomes a political boss. The banker is arraigned for alleged misuse of funds and a pardon by the governor is the only possible release. The boss learns the situation and succeeds in applying the proper kind and quantity of pressure to secure it. At the next election both the governor and the boss are defeated. The banker has been reinstated in his position meantime and learning of the boss' defeat calls upon him. The defeated politician is very much dejected and gladly accepts an offer which the banker makes. Eventually he falls in love with the banker's daughter and there is an open way to the church at the close of the picture.

"THE BRAVE DESERVE THE FAIR" (Cines), January 23.—It is natural to expect patriotic war stories from Italian picture makers just now. This is a good war tale and has a very dramatic struggle, including a leap over a cliff. This follows a well-suggested battle scene and is between the Italian hero of the picture and a determined Turkish soldier over a Turkish banner. The story has a romantic theme. The old Italian soldier won't let his daughter marry anyone but a brave man, so her lover enlists and goes to Africa with his regiment. By capturing the Turkish flag, he wins a medal given only to brave soldiers and is sent home badly wounded, to be welcomed by his father-in-law of the future with open arms. The photographs are good, the acting is acceptable, but the war pictures are excellent. They suggest modern warfare very effectively. On account of this, as well as the artistic travelog on the same reel, it may be counted a safe feature picture.

"ARTISTIC VENICE" (Cines), January 23.—A picture giving artistic vistas of Venice. It is often very beautiful and all of it is very acceptable.

Independent.

"THE MORMONS" (American), January 25.—The Mormon prophet sent out a young man whom he greatly loved to ascertain the fighting strength of a small party of Gentiles, a settler, his wife and two daughters, who were on forbidden land. He falls in love with settler's daughter. He hears the prophet send out the men to kill the man settler and to capture the women for the prophet's wives. He begs for the daughter; but is refused, so he joins the settler. There is a fight, with odds greatly in favor of the Mormons; but the presence of the young man saves the day and the settlers escape. The picture has no special strength, nor any noticeable weakness except the result of the battle. It will serve as a filler.

"OBJECTIONS OVERRULED" (American), January 22.—A romance and comedy of La Mesa, Cal., and of last week, perhaps. Dad was rich and his boy had nothing to do but smoke cigarettes, so Dad sent the boy out to the West to be made a man of. The boy fell in love with Daredevil Anne and the picture shows the stages—the boy as he was and the man she made of him. Dad, of course, didn't know Anne. When he heard her name for the first time he was a bit put out. The lad had become so independent, though, that Dad had to hike out to La Mesa, where he too learned something new. He grows to like Anne as much as the spectators like her. It has a picture of awkward riding and there is also one or two brisk gallops in it for fun. It is not quite a feature picture. It affords several good laughs and has a pleasing freshness.

"TEN LITTLE DARKIES" (Reliance), January 27.—"Ten little darkies standing in a line, one went home and then there were nine." This is the picture's first leader. The first scene shows the ten darkies, with loin clothes on, dancing in a modern dooryard. An old mammy comes from the house and sends one home, then there are nine. The picture carries on the rhyme until there is only one left. The actions are fairly amusing. The photographs are good except for the painted backgrounds. There isn't very much to the picture.

"RELIANCE NATURAL HISTORY SERIES," January 27.—On the same reel with the above is this picture in which Baby Rosanna's fairy godmother, a very pretty picture, changes her Noah's Ark animals into the real thing. Baby Rosanna takes out white mice, a black and white rat, an armadillo, kangaroorats and a snake, and then another, beside many other interesting things. It is a first class feature picture. This series, if this is a specimen, is sure to "take" most emphatically. The audience seemed to enjoy it very much indeed.

"THE DECEPTION" (Reliance), January 24.—A very pretty proposal is in the opening scene of this picture. The girl, a stenographer, accepts the son of her employer. His father, who seems to be a big printer, objects and, as soon as he hears of it, the girl is discharged. Then follows a secret marriage. The son is hurt in the shop and carried home. The father schemes to separate the two lovers, and his deception causes the young wife to write a note to her husband that makes him think that she desires a separation. The results of this deception as shown make a very pleasing picture. It is a very good story, well put on, photographed, and acted, especially by Miss Ruth Robinson, who plays the girl.

"A SANE ASYLUM" (Rex), January 25.—Young Dr. A. Pill had a splendid chance to win a fortune. His uncle was rich and promised to will the money to him, if he made good. Meanwhile, he had the fine big house to live in, the uncle being abroad. All went well until he fell in love with a pretty actress, the ingenue of the "Wanderer Company." The girl didn't show any inclination toward darning socks and he probably never would have heard from her again, had not the company become stranded. We see them stalking into Barnstormville along the wintry railroad track and see them get chased out of the warm depot. The girl telegraphs to Dr. A. Pill and he comes to the rescue of the whole company. He is entertaining them at the house when Uncle unexpectedly rings the door bell. To save the situation, the company pretends that it is a rare assortment of non compos mentis cases under treatment. The insanity symptoms that they develop at once are amusing. If Uncle hadn't fallen in love with the leading lady, young Dr. Pill probably wouldn't have been so fortunate with the ingenue. The picture will serve very well as a feature for ordinary occasions. It is very prettily staged and photographed and very well acted. It lacks substance; but it is made with skill.

"PLAYING INJUN" (Solax), January 24.—A picture of children's play wholly by children. It will greatly amuse their elders. The backgrounds are Western and the photographs very good.

"HER BROTHER'S PARTNER" (Champion), January 24.—A story of East and West, of a sister in poverty and distress left at home while her brother made good out West. Her brother has her come out to him and then she finds that her brother's partner is the man who had married her and, because of poverty, deserted her. The story is clear and the audience followed it closely. The photographs are not very good. The acting is only so so. The picture will serve as a filler.

"THE BRUTE" (Champion), January 22.—The producer's intention seems to be put across by this picture perhaps a hundred per cent. It is terribly effective as a picture of the fierce brute that hides in man. The man is a drunkard. He comes home in an ugly temper to act like a hideous madman and to make his home a ruin of broken glass and furniture. One of his little children runs for help, while the oldest girl fights back. The men from the saloon come and beat the brute into insensibility. The youngest child has meanwhile fallen over a cliff and is lying dead. She is missed. While the family and the neighbors are out seeking her, the man comes to consciousness; but has delirium tremens and when the dead child is brought in he also is found dead. Here surely is an argument against drink. It is simply fiendish. As we overheard it said, "It is like the stories of real life one hears."

"BUILDING THE GREATEST DAM IN THE WORLD" (Imp), January 22.—This immense dam in the Mississippi River has been photographed by the Imp people in some excellent moving pictures. Big works like this really need a clear lecture to be understood by the people. The things shown are but processes on a very large scale of such building operations as nearly every one is familiar with. An engineer might get a great deal of valuable instruction from this picture. It will interest the average spectator also. The name of the dam and its locality should have been added to the title. The photographs are fair. It will make a desirable filler where the audience is of a mechanical turn of mind or is broadly informed.

"THE WORTH OF A MAN" (Imp), January 25.—A picture of sentiment showing the trials that a hump-back scholar had to endure from his college class-mates. He became a great surgeon and was able to use his skill and his courage too, to save the life of a young woman. A fire broke out in the hospital. He alone remained with the patient, bandaging the wound, before he carried her out. The picture has a thrilling climax. It is well photographed and acted and will serve very well indeed as a program filler.

"I WISH I HAD A GIRL" (Imp), January 20.—While the man had hopes of winning a girl of his own choice for his wife, he could see few charms in Bedelia. But when these hopes were gone the case was a bit different. His experiences are very amusing. The photographs are good. A good comedy program filler.

"THE FLAG OF DISTRESS" (Imp), January 20.—A farce in which a flag of distress waved by a henpecked husband brought two men of his lodge, perhaps, to the rescue. They come as highwaymen and he is enabled to chase them out of his wife's sight. A detective is employed by the wife and poor Henpeck is found at a mask ball. It is amusing, lively and well photographed.

"WANTED, A GOVERNESS" (Eclair), January 25.—A farce in which a capable French actress plays the clown, burlesquing an awkward governess. Yet, with the subtitles as given, the play doesn't make the motivity of the governess very clear. One feels that the fault is wholly with the subtitles, for the acting is very good indeed. The girl, too pretty to suit the mother of the family, has to act the part of the awkward clown. The son of the family took pity on her and she fell in love with him. It was a great annoyance to have his pity for being the gawk that she wasn't when she couldn't get his love for being the pretty girl she really was. The painful predicament made her resign the job. It is one of those pleasing, thoroughly, well done, artistic little pictures. It is commendable especially for private exhibitions and for a program brightener.

"THE TURKISH POLICE" (Eclair), January 25.—A picture that is very interesting. It shows a semi-military corps of police in a sham-battle with bandits. The backgrounds are very pretty.

"LOVE FINDS A WAY" (Eclair-Am.), January 23.—In this picture, love found a way to bridge the gulf between a girl who once had been well-to-do but who was now only a lady's maid, and her employer's son. The mother found out their secret and the girl was discharged. The young man persuaded the girl to "make up" as a middle-aged woman and apply again. She is given her old place; but now the father of the family falls in love with her. This the mother also discovers. To clear matters up the son tells his mother that he and the girl are married, which satisfies everyone. It is not a very significant picture nor does it get a very strong hold on our sympathies. The photographs are excellent. The acting intelligent and pleasing. The audience watched in silence.

"THE RUN ON THE BANK" (Bison), January 19.—This picture, telling a Western story, has some sensibly posed scenes. It was only a week or so ago that the Imp Company released a picture, "At the Hour of Three," using the same idea. The rancher's ex-convict, but honest employee, forges his employer's name to save his fortune on deposit at a bank on which there is a run. He gets the money and delivers it at the former's office, then goes away. The last scene is a sunset by the ocean, a bit more convincing ending to the story. There is more excitement and vim in this picture than in the former. It will be a fair filler despite the fact, noticed above, that its theme is still fresh in moving pictures.

"THAT EXPENSIVE RIDE" (Majestic), January 26.—A pleasing comedy with a fresh idea. A little unexpected money induced pater familias, who was a man working for a salary and had a nice little family deserving of a good time, to take them for a motor car ride. The speedy vehicle ran over a woman. On claims of injury this woman and her husband "bled" the man and got part of his salary every week until, in an amusing climax, the blackmailing schemers manage to show themselves up and the victim manages to get some of the things he had given to them back. It will serve very well as a program filler; it comes near being a feature. The audience enjoyed it.

"SPARE THE ROD" (Majestic), January 21.—A picture that may prove a good lesson to fathers who are more or less brutal in their treatment of their unruly children and also to mothers who protect their children from the due punishment of a just application of the rod. The father of this picture's bad boy let his angry passions rise at his son and the mother let hers rise at the father because of it. They separated in consequence, and much trouble brought them together again. It is a very interesting picture and very well photographed and acted. It held the audience's attention. It may prove acceptable as a feature or as a substantial filler. Mabel Trunnelle plays the mother and Herbert Prior plays the father.

"A MOTHER'S SACRIFICE" (Majestic), January 28.—The central idea of this picture has been used before in pictures, but with a somewhat different situation. Mother and daughter love the same man, who first makes love to the mother, but forgets her when the daughter arrives. The mother sees how things stand and returns to him his ring which permits him to put it on the daughter's finger. The lover failed to show the presence in his heart of any struggle at finding his affections changing from mother to daughter. Aside from this, the picture is convincing enough to get over and will serve very well as a program filler. It has some very pretty scenes and excellent photographs. Mabel Trunnelle plays the daughter very acceptably.

"HER LADYSHIP'S PAGE" (Thanhouser), January 23.—A prettily romantic picture in which a beautiful lady, captured by a cative baron and in sad distress, is rescued by her unknown knight, the king of the realm. The lady's little page (the Thanhouser Kid) carried the news to the king whom he didn't know save as a friend. The little page is made a knight and keeps his vigil by his armor in the chapel like other true knights who wear golden spurs. It is a very good feature for the right occasion. It is well photographed, well acted and delightfully set.

"EAST LYNNE" (Thanhouser), January 26.—This big melodrama in two reels is too well known as to its qualities to need argument or criticism. This is a remarkably beautiful picture of it. It gives the reviewer pleasure to say this although it was reviewed at length on page 213 of the Moving Picture World, January 20. Opposite to page 202 of the same issue a full page of illustrations of it will be found. These are not the prettiest scenes, but will give a good taste of its quality.

"THE EQUITABLE BUILDING FIRE" (Powers), January 20.—A remarkable picture of this very true sensation. It deeply interested the audience. The photographs have much pictorial quality and make a very desirable film. Police Commissioner Waldo is taken as he inspects the ruins.

"THE DELHI DURBAR" (Powers), January 20.—An excellent film. It gives pictures of their majesties that are somewhat more intimate than those in the Pathe Weekly and also contains some very interesting views of Delhi itself. An extended view of the coronation pageant around the throne pavilion is shown.

"FOUR YALE MEN" (Powers), January 23.—A college-friendship picture showing four seniors who agree to meet every fifteen years and drink a glass for old lang syne. At their first reunion they get together and find that all have been successful. At their second, one chair and one glass are empty; the medical man of the four is dead. At their third, there are but two, and at the fourth, but one, and their meeting of one old man and the original butler is a death scene. The audience seemed to grow weary of the picture. It is very slow.

"TOTO IS IN LOVE" (Itala), January 27.—A farce like others of this kind, well photographed and fairly amusing. It is not a picture that cultivated people will be enraptured with. It is a rush, knockover and break farce and ends in a department store mix-up.

"MUTT AND JEFF FALL IN LOVE" (Nestor), January 27.—They both take the same girl out to dinner and both get a photograph and lose their valuables. They tried to get even with the adventuress; but it came dear, for they were using priceless porcelain that cost $100 a piece. It is not so amusing as the best of this series. The photographs are good.

"LOGGING AT STONY BROOK" (Nestor), January 27.—A short industrial showing the making of boards. It is very well photographed.

"CUPID AND THE RANCHMAN" (Nestor), January 24.—It was a brash young man who sold a balky horse to his prospective father-in-law. It was even more brash to have his sister from the East come to see him without warning his neighbors. It proved to be the way out of the difficulty; for Dad fell in love with her and when he "popped" she referred him to her brother. When he discovered who brother was he was an astonished man. But a fair exchange is a good bargain; the picture ends happily. The story, the players and the photographs are all pleasing. The picture has some excellent comedy and will prove a first-class program filler.

"A MATINEE MIX-UP" (Nestor), January 22.—Old Nick, the troublemaker, gets four interesting young people into trouble. A convincingly misplaced letter and the natural courtesy that a man pays to his fiancée's best friend, who is a married woman, are the means the fiend uses. When the married man finds the letter to the fiancée on his wife's table and goes to this fiancée's father, who is a lawyer, to get a divorce, the trouble is at high tide. Of course, immediately afterward, everything is explained and cleared up; but, in the meantime, we see the natural pain and trouble dramatically pictured. The story is helped by the Nestor subtitles, which might have been much better. The photographs are good and the acting fairly pleasing. It is a good substantial offering and will fill out a bill very well.

"THE SUPREME MEETING" (Ambrosio), January 24.—A tragic story in distinguished settings. Two men, with whom a famous actress flirted fight a duel because of her. One is shot and the survivor takes vengeance on the woman light-o'-love by poisoning her and himself at the same time. This picture's theme is not one that will be popular with Anglo-Saxon audiences. The photographs are perfect, the acting strong. The story is very skilfully produced and its backgrounds very interesting indeed.

"RETRIBUTION" (Republic), January 20.—A terrible picture, sensational in the extreme, as sensational as, let us say, any of Hawthorne's longer stories. It is also logical and very convincing. The photographs are excellent and the story held the audience strongly. A burglar struggling with a woman kills her. He had just forced her to tell her little daughter that the man in the room was her husband. The husband is arrested for the murder and, on his child's story, sentenced to ten years in prison. The burglar later falls in love with the daughter, now grown to womanhood. He is killed, after the father is released, and by one of his old-time pals. Just before he dies, he confesses. The ending scenes are extremely dramatic, and the whole conduct of the picture commendable. To those who want a rather harsh picture of life, this will serve as a feature. It should be shown with happy pictures. One would hardly commend it as the ending picture for any bill.

"A MARITAL MIRAGE" (Republic), January 21.—A farce of crazy happenings. It utilizes an old idea and carries it farther than others have done. The result is like a bad dream, like one of those at which one wakes up laughing. Yet a dream, no matter how ridiculous, always "gets over;" not all of this gets over, but some of it does. The foolish cook is first shown and then we see her no less foolish employers. The cook's treatment of the family beefsteak and soup is almost revolting. Soon, the family becomes poor and the cook falls heiress to much money. So the family decide to marry their son to her. They then discover that the crazy cook is not an heiress after all. The picture will serve as a filler on some occasions. It is decidedly frivolous; but the cook is played by a capable actress.

"THE POWER OF INOCENCE" (Republic), January 28.—A story of the country girl who comes to New York City for a job and gets into dangerous company. Fortunately for her, she finds a friend who protects her from considerable danger whose presence she never suspected and sends her home to her mother. The story is well told and is exciting. Such stories are of use aside from entertainment. The photography is excellent. It is almost a feature.

"A BLUE RIDGE ROMANCE" (Republic), January 27.—A moonshine whiskey story in which one of the revenue men sent to arrest the lawbreakers had once been a lover of his wife. She didn't know he was a moonshiner when she married him and just before the revenue man entered, he promised to break his association with it. The revenue man lets him go although he had clear evidence against him. The photographs are clear and many of the snowy scenes in the forest are beautiful. The story is well told. but slight. It will prove a very acceptable program filler.

"O, YOU KID" (Lux), January 26.—"Bill," the amusing Lux player, takes the part of a soldier who is a simpleton. The captain's little daughter, about eight years old, gets him into trouble with the authorities and then begs him off. It is fairly amusing. The photographs are good. With the other picture on the same reel, it will make a desirable release to round out the bill.

"MAKING PAPER FROM WOOD" (Lux), January 26.—The first picture shows a load of pulp. From pulp to paste and with the paste through the refiners until it is spread out in sheets and passed between hot cylinders and then dried, it shows the process of manufacture. It is one more good, instructive picture. The photographs are good.

"MEMORIES OF '49" (Solax), January 26.—An old miner sits beside his cabin and dreams of the days of yore. Using lines quoted from some ballad of '49, the picture tells a story of border warfare and love. The leaders lack not only poetry, but in some cases sense. The photographs are not very clear. The story is only fairly interesting.

"ACROSS THE ROCKY MOUNTAINS IN THE SNOW" (Solax).—A magnificent winter scenic taken from the back of a train crossing the mountains in Colorado. It is not a very grand picture, but a very clear and interesting one. The photographs are so good that clouds are plainly seen.

"THE LITTLE SOLDIER" (Solax), January 24.—The same little player who took the part of Little Boy Blue, in a recent picture, plays the little soldier in this release. The little boy is wounded when his father grasped the burglar and the revolver went off. He is not greatly harmed, however. The picture is pleasing and the photographs very good. It is slight, but, with the other picture on the same reel will make an acceptable filler.

MISS LURLINE LYONS.
Leading Lady of Pathe Western Company.

THE JUVENILE PICTURE.

Another series of pictures finding its distinctive descriptive title in the film maker's catalogue is the "Juvenile." Nothing is going to solve the problem of the "children and the pictures" quicker and better than genuine and satisfactory juvenile pictures. "Jack and the Beanstalk," "Babes in the Wood," "Red Riding Hood" and others are a good beginning, but good only as a beginning; let them be if necessary the kindergarten of the manufacturers' productions, to be followed by others of a standard nature, suggestions for which will come by the score from the bookshelves of a well ordered juvenile library.

These are days in which anything that is worthy for adults in literature is reproduced in suitable form for the younger generation. The great Bible itself has been reproduced in "The Children's Bible Stories." The immortal Shakespeare has reappeared in "The Children's Shakespeare"; science has produced a "Children's Astronomy," and an enterprising publishing house recently issued a forty-volume work, "The Young People's Library," which is calculated to impart a complete education in all branches to those who are able and willing to master the whole. There is, therefore, no excuse or reason why especial juvenile pictures should not form a very substantial branch of cinematographic art. There are in the studios of the film makers many clever children whose appearance on the screen is most enthusiastically greeted by their young friends everywhere. Let them appear often and especially for their young well wishers, and may their number be increased. It is a truism acknowledged by all authorities that when children are interested adults will follow. That "a little child shall lead them" is not yet fulfilled; nevertheless, who gets the child gets the adults, and that with perfection of attractive power. Cater to the juvenile and many victories will be won which in any other way might prove impossible. The juvenile picture is an "open sesame" of great power and good.

Manufacturers Advance Notes

"THE GAMBLER'S DAUGHTER" (Reliance).

The title of this picture suggests a wild and wooly Western picture, but such is not the case. Far from it. As far as the East is from the West. For a change we get an Eastern gambler who lives amid fine upholstery and filigree work, just the same as though he were a banker. In the gambler's beautiful home there was a charming young lady who was being courted by a very manly young man. Who the young lady was or what she was doing there we do not know. At first we thought she was the gambler's daughter. But later we found out otherwise, because the gambler forced her to marry him at the point of a pistol. So that matter was soon cleared up, because no matter who she was she then became the gambler's wife and the poor young man lost his case.

In the course of time a child was born to the gambler and his wife, and the mother did not live long after that. Soon after the child was born the gambler was taken dead to rights by the police and sent over the road for a long term of years. The mother, realizing that she was about to die, and seeing no hope for her child, sent for the manly young man and obtained from him a promise that he would always look after her daughter. The young man did his part and the gambler's daughter was raised by the unlucky lover's father and mother. When the child had grown to a young lady the gambler came back and by trail of circumstances located his daughter in the home of the very minister who had married him to her mother many years before. By this it will be understood that the noble young man's father was a minister. The story is quite interestingly worked out and is far from being bad. The actor who played the gambler made an excellent showing in the part. On the whole, it is worth showing and will make a good programme filler. We were puzzled about one thing and that was: who paid the rent on the gambler's fine house for fifteen or sixteen years while he was in jail? Of course an audience will never bother about that point, but once in a while we have to say something about those things in order to keep the boys from forgetting themselves.

Scene from "The Gambler's Daughter" (Reliance).

MELITA'S RUSE (Melies).

Good photography and impressive mountain scenery form the principal charm of this latest Melies offering. The story of the picture is of secondary interest and cannot be considered a dramatic masterpiece, but the photography and scenes pull it through. The idea of the story is based on the well-known theme of an innocent man who takes flight for the unlawful action of another and thereby becomes a fugitive and an outlaw. In moving pictures this situation sometimes makes one impatient at the lack of judgment shown by a man who will run away when some other man makes a gun-play. But the fact remains that it is a thing that occurs very often and has always been a part of human nature.

To the spectator it usually seems a foolish thing to run away at another's misdeed. But that is because the spectator does not place himself in the other man's place. Some men are excitable: they act upon impulse and never view the situation in a calm way until it is, perhaps, too late. It is safe to say that nearly every man who reads this will remember a time when, as a boy, he fled when some other boy threw a stone through a window. The boy who throws the stone seldom gets caught; but it is usually some unoffending boy who fled, upon impulse, with other boys, and being caught he bears the full blame. Such, in a general way, is the idea of "Melita's Ruse," except that Melita is a girl, the sweetheart of Pedro. She assisted Pedro when he became a fugitive in a serious case with which he was not connected. He ran away when there was really no need of his doing so. But, as we have said, some men get excited and act upon impulse, and thereby hangs the tale. Pedro's sweetheart by a clever ruse assists him to escape across the American border into Mexico where Pedro is apparently obliged to pass the remainder of his days.

Scene from "Melita's Ruse" (Melies).

The successive scenes are exceedingly pleasant to look at and the picture will pass muster on that account. One scene is particularly irritating: that of a prisoner escaping through a window while three guards directly outside of it are so interested in a card game they do not see him. The only excuse that could be given for the man to get out of such a predicament would be that the three guards had suddenly gone stone blind and deaf at one stroke. Why do producers do these things, when even little children notice the absurdity of them?

FINE MAJESTIC COMEDIES.

Cochrane Back from Chicago with an Armful of Delightful Pictures.

General Manager Tom L. Cochrane, of the Majestic Company, has returned to New York with as fine a line of comedies as his or any other picture company has produced in many a day. The Majestic players have been working in Chicago for the past two months, but Manager Cochrane brought them back with him and has installed them at studios at Coney Island. While in Chicago, despite the cold weather, this company was most industrious, producing two pictures every week, so that the list of new subjects ready for early release is a long one. Not only is it a long one but it is a notable one in quality and cleverness. As has been noted before in these columns, Mr. Herbert Prior and Miss Mabel Trunnelle, formerly Edison players, are leading members of the Majestic company. Two more dependable artists would be hard to find, and however good their reputation was in the past, their work in Majestic pictures has greatly enhanced it. Exhibitors and other critics who see these pictures will agree that Miss Trunnelle has few equals. In the distribution of praise, Director Miles is entitled to his share, for the pictures prove that no novice is at the helm.

Scene from "A Game for Two" (Majestic).

Among a number of subjects shown a representative of the Moving Picture World last week were "A Game for Two," "Arresting Father," "Lucky Man" and "A Little Old Lady of Twenty," all comedies of the highest class and full of fun. The first two subjects are full reels, while the last two are on one reel. In "A Game for Two" there are four characters: an author, his wife, a young woman colaborator and a young man friend of the author. The author has very little time for his pretty wife, but a ready ear for the colaborator. He has planned to go to the theater with his wife, but a message from the other woman summons him to her apartments to look over a story that they are writing together. He turns the wife over to the friend and goes to keep his engagement. When the wife is about to leave the house an idea comes to her—she will give her husband some of his own medicine. Accordingly she leaves a note telling him that she is going to her escort's apartments after the theater and that he had better come for her.

Now, it happens that the apartments of the young man adjoin those of the woman writer and there is an awful mix-up in the course of the succeeding events that is laughable in the extreme. The comedy throughout is of the most refined and there is not a suggestive act or situation; just a most distressing tangle that ends in a complete victory for the author's wife. As the wife Miss Trunnelle is charming.

"Arresting Father" is a genuinely funny farce in which the pretty daughter of a testy old man and her lover manage to outwit father and overcome his opposition to their marriage by heroic measures.

"Lucky Man" is the portrayal of the dream of a woman who wishes that she was a man and could go out nights just as her husband does. Hubby has an invitation to play cards with some friends, leaving his wife alone. She retires with the idea that she would like to be a man and dreams that she is one. In natty attire the dream man starts out for a time, but is threatened with arrest when he attempts to start a flirtation with a strange woman on the street. This calamity is averted by a liberal bribe, but the policeman gives the masher a shove that sends him sprawling. Here the dream ends by the sleeping woman falling out of bed, tickled to death to discover that she is still a woman and that it was only a dream. By double exposure the sleeping woman and the escapade of the man in the dream are shown simultaneously.

"A Little Old Woman of Twenty" is a genuine picture classic. Mabel Trunnelle plays the part of a young actress who has been given the part of an old woman with instructions to make a careful study of the part. As she is adjusting her make-up, an artist next door, trying to hang a picture, knocks some plaster upon her dressing table. Coming in to apologize, he is so pleased with the little old woman that he wants her to pose for him. The plan pleases the girl and she consents. As the artist is a nice young man the girl concludes that she would like to make his acquaintance otherwise than in character, so she sends him a note to the effect that her daughter will soon be in town and asks him to take care of her while she is away. The little actress then drops her old lady character and appears as her pretty self, much to the delight of the artist. The situation is worked up very nicely until the little old lady makes her real self known to the artist, and the theater manager is then notified that his actress cannot take the part he has assigned her, as she has been engaged to play the leading part in the play "Just a Wife." George Tucker is the artist and gives a careful rendition of the part.

These are but a few of the delightful and beautiful pictures bearing the Majestic trademark; the others are as good or better. Get in line for them.

"AN INNOCENT GRAFTER" (American).

There is a bit of high finance in the American subject "An Innocent Grafter." John Burton, the sole support of a widowed mother, becomes interested in a scheme to sell stock for the development of an abandoned oil well. When Burton suggests that operations be started on the well, his partner informs him that it is not the plan to work the well, but to use the money obtained from the stock for other schemes. Among other investors in the scheme is John's mother, who has put in her insurance money. Realizing that the scheme is a fraudulent one, John compells his partner to give up the money and books of the concern and proceeds to return all the money derived from sales of stock.

While John is planning to do these things, experts have been investigating the well and discover that it is a real bonanza. Consequently everybody is satisfied and John becomes a millionaire. The crooked partner, though, is looking for a fast freight.

AMERICAN TO OPEN NEW FACTORY WITH BANQUET.

Now that the American Film Mfg. Co. has entered its new factory, the successful dinner to employees given during the holidays will be repeated. For this purpose it is proposed to utilize the new studio where an excellent dinner and some extemporaneous talks are promised. President Hutchinson is a firm believer in the policy of getting close to his employees, and the results of his first attempt has made him anxious to repeat the experiment. Gatherings of that kind, he believes, promotes a better feeling among employees and tends toward more loyalty and a clear understanding of the principles for which the American stands.

The Feature Film Co., of 108 E. 14th St., New York, is in receipt of some very flattering testimonials from several large and representative exhibitors in regards to the excellence of their subjects and the reliability of their service. One letter, from the Unique Theater, 186 East 14th Street, New York, speaks in highest praise of both films service. The F. F. Co. is at present exploiting "Notre Dame de Paris," in three reels, colored; "A Woman's Strange Revenge," in three reels, and "A True Mother," also in three reels.

"BROWN MOVES IN TOWN" (Imp).

When Brown moved to town a rather unpleasant adventure befell him. Before he got his packing boxes properly placed he tore his pants. It was a very bad tear indeed. In his difficulty he appealed to a neighbor to help him out with another pair. The neighbor was unable to do so and intimated as much by sending him a photograph of herself. For the neighbor was a lady doctor. However, she was good-natured and sent poor Brown a kimona instead, which Brown gallantly wore in the sight of the doctor.

Here Brown's troubles might have ceased were it not that news had gotten abroad that there was an escaped lunatic to be run to earth. It was poor Brown's hard luck that he was taken for the looney and so he suffered many indignities before he was identified and rescued by the kind lady physician.

Scene from "Brown Moves to Town" (Imp).

The lady doctor was so good-natured that she fell in love with Brown and Brown with her, and the picture ends by the conjunction of their two names outside their apartment, presumably in a flourishing part of New York.

This is typical of the bright and vivacious comedies that form part of the Saturday releases of the Imp Films Company (Feb.3).

"THE KID AND THE SLEUTH" (Imp).

This is a fantastical drama worked out as a dream. A small boy with a passion for detective literature dreams it all. He dreams that he is instrumental in securing the services of a famous detective for the purpose of foiling the machinations of a most plausible looking villain and a very intense villainess, who conspire against the peace of mind and personal safety of the heroine. The villains subject the heroine to a whole series of dastardly outrages, following the detectives step after step. After the small boy has followed the dramatis personae of his dream to the bitter end, he awakes to find he has been dreaming. It is to be hoped that the dream has cured him of sensational literature.

This fantastic story is thoroughly availed of by King Baggot, W. R. Daly, Thomas Barry, Miss Young, and Miss Grandon, to give a most laughable burlesque performance conceived and carried out in the true spirit of exaggerated burlesque. The offering, we think, will be appreciated by moving picture audiences who love to see the absurd overacting often given in cheap drama successfully caricatured.

"THE POWER OF CONSCIENCE" (Imp).

When a man is in financial difficulties and has an extravagant wife, he is an easy mark for all sorts of temptations. Eric Masters was in this plight. Apparently he was a prosperous business man; in reality, when he had paid off his staff one Saturday afternoon, his cash box was empty and he owed his friend, Vernon Godfrey, a large sum of money secured by note.

Vernon undertook to renew the note, not out of particular friendship for Eric, but because Eric had a nice wife with whom Vernon was desirous of becoming extremely friendly.

At a society ball Mrs. Masters shone resplendent in a garb for which Eric could not foot the bill. One of the guests at the dance drops some valuable jewels, which Eric finds. He is sorely tempted to keep them as a means of extricating himself from his financial difficulties. The wife was also tempted to elope with Vernon Godfrey. Fortunately, the little child of the pair was the means of recalling her to her duty. Eric again resisted the temptation to retain the jewels. Both were brought to their senses by those "prickings of conscience" which have been said to make cowards of us all, and in the end resolve to lead more rational and economic lives.

Scene from "Power of Conscience" (Imp).

This picture is acted with great power by King Baggot, William Shay and Miss Briscoe, and will be eminently successful amongst Imp dramas. Jan. 16, 1912.

A THANHOUSER VIEW OF "SUDDEN RICHES."

Here is a new story of the "happiness" that follows the acquiring of sudden wealth, as told in a Thanhouser effort called "The Trouble Maker":

They are newly wed and have only the dingy, old farmhouses, a lot of health and a lot of happiness. They "fall" into a "mint o' money."

Scene from "The Trouble Maker" (Thanhouser).

And then they "go in for" high society. By the magic of their money, this is easy, and the suddenly rich pair find themselves members of the very elite. They are supremely satisfied—for a time.

And then—!

Yes, and then—the "break" comes. Disappointment, discord—disgrace, almost—are their lot. Their wealth had proven too much for them. How, and why, Thanhouser shows Tuesday, Feb. 6, when "The Trouble Maker" is released.

"Where Broadway Meets the Mountains" is the name of a release scheduled by the American Film Mfg. Company for February 12. The central action of this film takes place on the verandas and grounds surrounding Grossmont Inn, which is located on a mountain especially noted for the magnificent winter homes of Madam Nordica, John Drew, Owen Wister, Gen. Nelson A. Miles, and Lillian Russell.

MLLE. CAMILLA DALBERG.

Those who have seen the charming comedy-drama, "The Heart of Nichette," released by the Edison Company on December 8th, will recognize in the above photograph the face of the actress who so well played the leading rôle. Mlle. Dalberg has an enviable European reputation, having appeared by command before the crowned heads of Great Britain, Russia and Germany. She has played season engagements at the leading theaters of London and Paris and also in New York City. Of her work in this city the New York Herald says: "Miss Dalberg's repertoire is exceptionally extensive. In lightest comedy or deepest tragedy she is equally at home. Her Catherine in The Taming of the Shrew and Portia in the Merchant of Venice are highly interesting character studies."

Mlle. Dalberg has appeared before the moving picture camera with equal success, as her work with the Biograph and Edison companies will testify. As announced in our advertising pages, she may be engaged for special rôles or for permanent stock by addressing her in care of the Moving Picture World.

GAUMONT ANNOUNCES TWO-REEL FEATURE.

Not content with placing a masterpiece one-reel feature, "The Christian Martyr," on the market through the ordinary release channels instead of putting it out on the state right plan whereby the exchanges would be done out of their portion of the profit, the Gaumont Independent Company now announces a two-reel feature, "The Trust," to be released as their regular Saturday offering. To see this production is to agree that this manufacturer is truly befriending the exchanges by allowing them to book it through their medium instead of selling the state right to individual purchasers for exploitation. The film sheds light on some of the underhanded and nefarious methods employed by large monopolistic corporations. In Europe and elsewhere abroad, this film proved a veritable sensation, for which reason far-seeing exhibitors and exchangemen will want to add it to their list of strong box-office attractions.

The appropriateness of "The Trust" coming at this nationally disquieting time, when all eyes and ears are directed at the attacks on the trust, together with the endeavors of the United States government to dissolve such large, wealthy combines as the tobacco, steel and beef trusts, cannot help but make the March 9th Gaumont feature one of the biggest pictures that have ever before been released. Political questions have yet been but scantily filmed by the various manufacturers, so that in addition to putting out something of timely importance, Gaumont is also invading a rather virgin and yet absorbingly interesting field.

Representatives of the Gaumont Company will show this film in most of the large film centers of the United States in order that the purchasers may be firmly convinced of the merit and usual qualities that "The Trust" contains.

One of the few electrical concerns that make a specialty of supplying all kinds of electric light globes to theaters is the Newman Electric Lamp Co., of 3346 Bonaparte Ave., Cincinnati, O. They have them in all shapes, plain or fancy. They also carry bulbs in colors, frosted or plain. Exhibitors in dealing with them will get just what they want if it can be gotten at all, and will save a lot of time in the bargain.

There are a number of artists who have come into moving pictures out of the legitimate field only to silently fold their tents after a brief experience and steal back to more familiar pastures.

In undertaking the moving picture version of "The Power Behind the Throne," for Powers Picture Plays, Miss Holland says that she has found a work of absorbing interest. Her own staging ability has made her a keen and intelligent observer of the technique of the film stage, and she has become enthusiastic on the subject. Miss Holland now has a firm grasp of a great many of the fine points of picture production; in fact, she is a fan.

She is shown here, caught by the camera in a characteristic pose, discussing a scene in the play with Mr. P. A. Powers and Director St. Loup.

While engaged at her work at the Duplex Studio, Miss Holland has been called upon by a number of the performers who supported her in the original production of "The Power Behind the Throne," many of whom have also toured the country with her for years. In staging the piece it has been found practical to use several of these people so that the hundreds of thousands of people who have seen the play all over the United States will recognize other faces than Miss Holland's which may bring back memories to them. Not only this, but Miss Holland has been very careful in preserving some of the important costumes from the production, and these, too, have been used in the moving picture version. They include a number of the most brilliantly regal outfits ever made for the stage, all of which were designed under the personal supervision of Miss Holland, who is a past-mistress of every branch of stagecraft.

"MRS. CRANSTON'S JEWELS" (Solax).

Mrs. John Cranston	Blanche Cornwall
Mr. John Cranston	Darwin Karr
Miss Dorothy Deering	Marian Swayne
A Detective	Walter Holmes

Good psychological stories are not only the most difficult to get, but are the most difficult to produce. While manufacturers are always only too willing to produce a "Psychological," they are not always very certain whether they have succeeded in transmitting to the screen all there is in the story. It is very hard to show the working of a mind or a number of minds, by a series of pictures.

In the Solax production of "Mrs. Cranston's Jewels," the release of Friday, Feb. 9th, we see two cultured and perhaps trained minds working along the same lines and arriving at diametrically opposed results.

The husband of Mrs. Cranston is in tight quarters. He is caught both "short" in funds and in stock. In order that he may be able to cover up his margins, he decides to rob his wife of her jewels. He zealously plans to do so, but his wife anticipates him and steals the jewels herself, she having reason to believe that he would attempt the crime in a moment of weakness.

The husband, when he finds that his wife's jewels are missing, raises a "hue and cry," and the police take up the case. After considearble investigations, the crime is traced to Mrs. Cranston.

"TWENTY YEARS IN SING SING."

Interesting Subject Released by the America's Feature Film Company.

"Twenty Years in Sing Sing," which is being sold on the state rights plan by America's Feature Film Company, of Chicago, is a film which has much to commend it. It is not, as suggested by the title, a lurid sensational melodrama, and in fact the title is the only sensational thing about it.

The story is clearly and lucidly told, and the action is not drawn out to fill the three reels. It is somewhat similar in theme to the well-known play of the melodramatic stage, "Human Hearts," but is not by any means a copy of that drama. The interest is held through the entire action of the film.

The story tells the experiences of Bob Morgan, who offends the superintendent of the sawmill where Bob is foreman by warning him to cease forcing his unwelcome attentions on Bob's sweetheart, Marjorie. For this, Muldoon, the superintendent, nurses a grudge against Bob, and contrives plans to ruin and hurt him. He inveigles him into gambling on a crooked horse-race at the county fair, with the result that Bob loses all he has, and then later discharges him from the mill.

Bob, in need of money, sells his revolver to the game warden, and later obtains a position as a wood cutter. Muldoon, out hunting in the woods, passes by him while at work, with taunts on his descent in occupation. A little later the warden meets Muldoon and arrests him for hunting on private property. On the way to the village, the warden trips and discharges the revolver he is carrying, the ball striking and killing him. Muldoon notices Bob's name on the stock of the weapon, and conceives a plan to ruin him completely. Knowing Bob to be near by, he calls for help, and runs for other woodsmen. When they come back they find Bob bending over the body, with the warden's wallet in one hand and the pistol in the other. Muldoon accuses Bob of shooting the warden, and the others take him to the sheriff.

At the trial, the circumstantial evidence is all against Bob, and he is convicted and sentenced to twenty years in prison.

After five years of prison life, Bob, while at work painting in a machine shop, gets a chance to obtain a steel hack saw. By its means he is enabled to escape by cutting the bars of the cell. He finds his way to the main sewer and gets out through that, though he is forced to saw the bars at its mouth where it discharges into the river.

He reaches the neighborhood of his home, but the long arm of the law has preceded him and a posse has been organized. Eluding the pursuers after a chase, he hides near Romance Cliff, where he and Marjorie had spent many pleasant hours. He gets into communication with her, and she starts to him with a basket of food and clothes.

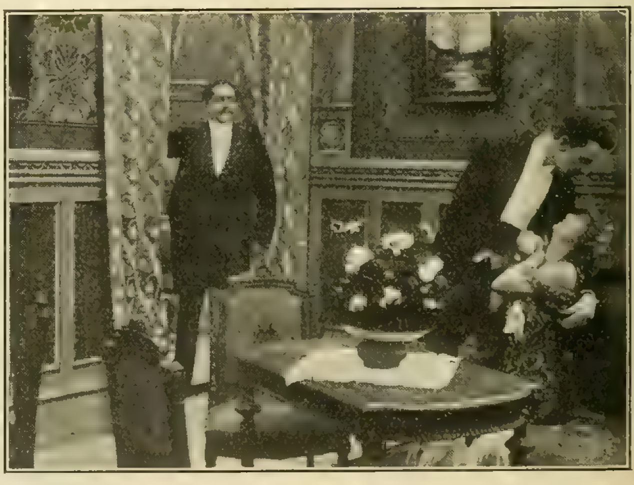
Muldoon has seen her, and suspecting, follows her to their rendezvous. Marjorie has taken her motor boat to reach the cliff, and Muldoon follows in another. Marjorie calls to Bob to jump in the boat as she passes the cliff, and then puts on her highest speed and runs away from the pursuer. She lands and tells Bob to make the best time he can in getting away, while she will try to detain Muldoon. Muldoon, however, pushes her aside, and rushes after Bob, overtaking him at the top of a cliff. He attacks Bob in a hand-to-hand fight, and Marjorie, having more fear for what will happen to Bob if Muldoon gets the better of it than for his capture, calls to a passing motor boat for aid. The two men in it respond, and come toward the landing place. Before they reach the men, however, Muldoon strikes at Bob, who dodges, and the force of the blow causes Muldoon to lose his balance, and fall many feet to the bottom. Bob starts down after him and brings him badly hurt to the top. Marjorie and the two men from the motor boat arrive, and are witnesses to Muldoon's dying confession that the death of the warden was not a crime, but an accident, which exonerates Bob completely.

The photography and technical work of this subject are very well done. Most of the scenes were taken at the Dells of the Wisconsin, famous for their beauty, and a large part of them are finished in a soft brown tone which is a great relief from the ordinary black and white. Even the titles are of finished design, and far better than many manufacturers make for regularly weekly releases. The first scenes were taken at a real county fair and show events there of much interest. The interiors of the prison are also interesting, and show the convicts receiving their allowances of tobacco, mail, etc. The production is free from errors, as far as the writer noticed, and the actors show no camera consciousness.

Altogether, "Twenty Years in Sing Sing" is a good production, and the fact that the rights for exactly half the states in the Union have already been sold testifies to this. It may also be said that the films have been passed by the Chicago Police Censorship Board, which is well known for its rigorous and strict censorship. C. A. Y.

"VENGEANCE VS. LOVE" (Great Northern).

Under this title the Great Northern Film Company releases this week a strong dramatic subject with a Nihilist plot for its background. A father has been condemned to death; the shock caused by the official announcement of sentence results in the death of his wife, and the son swears to be avenged. He attends a meeting of Nihilists and takes the oath of the society and receives the weapon with which he is to accomplish the death of the Count, who has been instrumental in causing his father's condemnation. The young man moves in good society and chances to meet a very beautiful girl, with whom he falls in love. The attachment is mutual.



Scene from "Vengeance vs. Love" (Great Northern).

Later a state ball is given by the Count, and the young man attends with the determination of killing that official. Others of the Nihilist band are there to encourage him and assist him to escape. But the girl is there, too, for she is the daughter of the great man, and the young conspirator wavers. His companions remind him of his oath and he determines to take his vengeance in spite of his love for the girl. The girl suspects that something is wrong and follows the young man to the chamber where her father is asleep and prevents the murder.

There are a number of very beautiful scenes in this picture.

The Robeley-Fisk Amusement Co., operating a chain of theaters, with headquarters at Toledo, have leased a building at Jackson, Mich., near the Otsego Hotel, and will remodel same into a modern theater seating about 400, playing two acts of high-class vaudeville and pictures, at 5c admission.

"THE MELODY OF LOVE" (Essanay).

The excellent work of the Essanay dramatic company is gain demonstrated in a coming dramatic release, "The Meldy of Love." The story, which so easily lends itself to ramatic treatment, is a fine conception of the photoplayright's art, and is interpreted with such fine feeling and ower that those who view it cannot but be impressed.

Not only is it a master production from a dramatic point f view but the photograpic quality is of a standard of exellence which has been zealously maintained by the Essanay ompany.

The story tells of the love of Maurice Eaton, a composer, r Isobel McIntyre, a society belle. Inspired by the love hat he bears for the girl, Eaton composes a wedding march f exquisite beauty to be played at their nuptials.

On the eve of their marriage Eaton is stricken with a ever and the ceremony is postponed. At last able to leave is bed, Eaton finds that the fever has left him blind, and the heart-broken girl he deplores the fact that the match ust be broken off. The girl weepingly tells him good-bye nd leaves him. Several years pass by and the lonely mucian finds company and solace with his music, but ever bere him is the face of his former sweetheart. Not so with er. The musician is soon forgotten in the whirl of social ctivities. She has many suitors and finally chooses from mong them a young man of considerable wealth and social anding.

Scene from "The Melody of Love" (Essanay).

On the day set for the marriage of Isobel and Olmsted, e church organist is taken ill and is unable to play. The urch officials are in a quandary where to secure another, hen the old church sexton tells them of a blind musician ho lives in the neighborhood and whose services might be btained. It is Eaton and he consents to play.

It is a dramatic moment, indeed, when Isobel recognizes e strains of Eaton's composition of years before. The emembrance unnerves her, but the ceremony is concluded. ut the climax is reached when Isobel, now the wife of nother man, requests to be taken to the organ loft that she ay see the player. The Essanay players have managed is delicate situation with great skill and have brought the ory to a touching conclusion.

Francis X. Bushman played the part of Eaton, and Miss ily Branscombe the part of Isobel. The picture will be eleased Feb. 8.

CHAMPION ENTERPRISE.

If Mark M..Dintenfass, tells you that he is spending more oney securing a series of aeroplane pictures than it would ost to hire the most expensive team of photoplay actors the business, believe him. It is only too true that Mark burning up a bundle of good bills, awaiting favorable eather for Robert Fowler and the Champion cameraman ascend into the clouds to take bird's-eye views of the ountry. The latest news from the aviator's camp, Boston, lass., was a telegram to the effect that Fowler's airship et with another mishap, which means another delay and ore expense to the Champion Co. When completed, this eries of aviator's views of the country over which he asses will be most interesting, as they are the first pictures f this kind to be released as regular subjects.

While part of his staff are up in the air, Mr. Dintenfass as about him, since the reorganization of the Champion Film Co., a working force that is second to none, and many new faces will be seen in the coming Champ releases. Having secured the services of Mr. J. Hunt, formerly of the Vitagraph Co., and more recently of the Eclair Co., the prospects of a higher class of pictures look promising.

Mr. H. C. Simeral, who for the past seven years has been connected with the exhibiting and exchange end of the moving picture business, and is still interested in the Simeral Amusement Co. in West Virginia, will assume charge of the sales department of the Champion film Co.

"FAR FROM ERIN'S ISLE" (Kalem).

Another of the O'Kalem Irish pictures is about to be released. "Far from Erin's Isle" is the title and the story is that of an Irish colleen who leaves home to make a fortune in America. Many bits of Irish land and sea scapes beautify this picture, and the portrayal of Irish character is quaint and interesting. The cottage interiors will attract attention for the careful arrangement of the details of those scenes.

The opening scene shows the colleen reclining on the rocky shore studying a steamship advertisement. Her lover approaches and she tells him of her intention of going to America. At home her father and mother plead with her to remain at home, but without avail. Finally the father gives his savings to pay her passage.

Scene from "Far From Erin's Isle"—Katherine Leaves for America.

It is a typical gathering of friends that bid the girl goodbye as she is driven to the station on one of the curious donkey carts of the Irish peasantry. There is a glimpse of the steerage of the ship which brings the colleen over; the landing from Ellis Island, and the next glimpse we get of the girl is in a sweat shop, toiling at a sewing machine. A strike in the shop throws her out of work, but she finds employment in a store; but the work is too strenuous and she is carried out one day ill from exhaustion.

A kind landlady takes an interest in her and finally loans the money necessary to send the disappointed, homesick girl back to her friends in Ireland, where a happy reunion occurs.

The abundance of realism and the deep heart interest contained in this picture mark it for one of the best of the Kalem Irish pictures.

POWER CLEANING UP IN IOWA.

Mr. Julius Singer, the hustling manager of the Des Moines (Iowa) office of the Laemmle Film Service, is breaking records in the sale of Power's Cameragraph No. 6. Following are some of his recent sales:

Golden Theater, Des Moines, Ia.; Moorehead & Fairchild, Perry, Ia.; Moorehead & Fairchild, Carroll, Ia.; Geo. Lehmann, Hartley, Ia.; James & Riseley, Bussey, Ia.; Reynolds & Skersick, Marengo, Ia.; W. F. Insel, Opera House, Eagle Grove, Ia.; A. Armstrong, Newton, Ia.; Watkins & Thrower, Boone, Ia.

Mr. George Lehman, of Hartley, Ia., says in a recent letter to Mr. Singer: "Say, Mr. Singer, I would not do without that new Power's machine and wouldn't sell it, if it was the last machine to be had, for $1,000. Everything running as smooth as silk. The people just praise it, and they don't complain about their eyes hurting any more the way they used to when I ran the other machine."

PATHE DURBAR SPECIAL.

The filming of a great event on the other side of the globe and the release of the completed prints in America in less than a month is an unparalleled feat in the history of motion pictures. It certainly establishes the prowess of the Pathe Company in being first on the American market, the Pathe film being released on January 11th. Another manufacturer was a close second, but the publishers of Pathe's Weekly, which has so often broken the world's records for filming local current events, have shown by their quick handling of the Durbar film that their organization can cope with any emergency.

"FOR HER FATHER'S SAKE" (Champion).

This is a splendidly conceived and cleverly acted drama with Miss Evelyn Francis in the rôle of a daughter who is willing to sacrifice her happiness to save her father from the financial clutches of a designing business associate who would gain her in marriage by holding this advantage over her father's head. The girl's true sweetheart is dismissed from their home without learning the real state of affairs. Deeply disappointed over his throw-down, the young man plunges into the mazes of business with heart and soul, and, as a big horse dealer in the far West, he amasses a fortune. The unfortunate girl becomes more tortured as her wedding day nears, and she sends a last farewell letter to her sweetheart. And when he receives it, only then does he learn the cause of his dismissal. It is the wedding day, and the unfortunate girl is about to be united to the man she abhors when in strides the youth of the West, who upsets the carefully laid plans of his rival.

NESTOR GETS EDUCATIONAL PICTURES.

David Horsley writes from Adamana, Arizona, that he is en route to New York, having permanently established the Nestor stock company in Los Angeles, Cal. Mr. Horsley says that he will bring back with him several thousand feet of negative made especially for the New York Board of Education. Among the subjects are several hundred feet of excellent records of petrified forests, and many excellent views in and around the Grand Canyon.

A CAMPAIGN FOR SUNDAY EXHIBITIONS.

The exhibitors of the City of Delaware have united in an effort to induce the municipal authorities to permit moving picture entertainments on Sundays. The exhibitors have retained Counsellor Richards, a former attorney-general of the State of Delaware, to represent their interests before the city councils. Acting upon the offer of the Moving Picture World, the Wilmington exhibitors sent a committee to this office to ask for material to be used in a campaign for Sunday exhibitions. The Moving Picture World supplied the requested materials, which may be had by any exhibitor upon request, absolutely free of charge.

INDIANA EXHIBITORS' MEETING.

On Tuesday, February 6th, 1912, the Denison Hotel, Indianapolis, will be the Mecca for the exhibitors of the State of Indiana. The Indiana Motion Picture Exhibitors' League has prepared a program for the occasion which should bring out every exhibitor who is interested in the welfare of his business. The president will deliver an address on "How the Exhibitor Can Help the Booking Man and Incidentally Himself." Mr. Robert Lieber and Mr. Schrader, managers of the two Indianapolis exchanges, are down for addresses. A paper will also be read on "Mediums for Advertising for a Small Theater and What the Front Means." Mr. H. S. True, of the Banner Advertising Co., will have something to say on "Outside Display." The slogan of the meeting is get together and come prepared to offer suggestions, and if this is acted upon by the exhibitors of the State it cannot fail to result to their mutual advantage. President Neff, of the National League, will no doubt be present. He writes us that he is well pleased with the progress that has been made in forming active local associations, and the Moving Picture World hopes to be able to record the Indianapolis meeting of February 6th as being a model in volume of attendance and good work accomplished.

ADDRESS OF JOHN R. BOWLES WANTED.

An inquiry has been made at this office for the address of Mr. John R. Bowles, who was in the moving picture business in the Bronx, New York, about two years ago. If this notice comes to his attention, or to that of any of his friends, will they kindly send his present address to the New York office of this paper?

REALISM FOR KALEM FILMS.

Auto-Sleigh Goes Through the Ice in Film Chase—Two Hurt in Kalem Drama.

Pursuing Oliver Haviland's ice yacht, Fred Waters recently drove his auto sleigh through the thin ice, undermined by a spring off the Independent Ice Yacht Club House, on the bank of the North Shrewsbury River. Waters was thrown about twenty feet, and landed on his forehead and rendered unconscious. He was removed to the club house, where he was revived, but had a bad gash over the right eye and suffered injuries to his arms and legs. One of the Kalem actors who was seated behind Waters in the auto sleigh was thrown over Mr. Waters, landing heavily on the ice, but escaped serious injury, however.

The Kalem Company was making a thrilling picture when the accident occurred. It is understood the picture will be called "The Banker's Daughter." A young man who was in love with a banker's daughter had been rejected, and robbed the father's bank. He was seen escaping and, running to the river, jumped into the ice yacht in an endeavor to get away. The girl's father was in close pursuit in another ice yacht, but failing to catch the robber, hired an auto sleigh and had almost reached the ice yacht in which the fugitive was escaping, when Mr. Waters' auto-sleigh plunged into the water, ending the pursuit.

A TOLERABLE REPETITION.

A monotonous repetition of many subjects often provokes criticism and complaint. There is a law under which the repetition or reproduction of any subject may be tolerable, and that is when it succeeds in improving upon its predecessor, or, if it adds prestige to that which it is intended to illustrate; if it does not fulfill either of these conditions, i is guilty of sameness, monotony, and being non-progressive becomes retrogressive and distasteful. That this has often been the case the complaint columns of the Moving Picture World and the press generally will testify.

It is worthy of note that these conditions do not obtai in the educational field of cinematography, for here repetition is emphasis, repetition is knowledge, repetition is advancement. This is particularly noticeable in a series o films illustrating the great evils and fearful ravages of the drink traffic. The first important contribution to the exposure of this evil, with life portrayals, was one entitle "Drink." Although possessed of considerable merit, ther was a standard which it did not reach, a mission which i did not entirely fulfill.

A second production, "Victims of Alcohol" was mor worthy, filling the conditions lacking in its predecessor, an telling a story without exaggeration of the home-destroying life-ruining, murderous (falsely called) beverage. The criticisms of this picture are its commendations, as the villai in the play is successful only as he provokes the hisses an not the plaudits of his audience; so the "Victims of Alcohol succeeds as it provokes expressions of horror at the soul body, and home destroying ravages of the evils it is intende to expose.

If it can be shown truly that alcohol makes a hell out o a heaven sufficient to provoke a universal disgust, it will hav fulfilled its mission as a lesson teaching, and not an amusin picture.

A third repetition is entitled "Alcohol—the Poison o Humanity." This is also a repetition filling that law whic makes repetition acceptable. It is a gun of another mak loaded with another kind of ammunition, sighted from an other direction, but aimed at the same common enemy o mankind.

A monotonous reproduction may be plagiaristic; to imitat should be to emulate with a view to improving upon th which has gone before. When this is accomplished there ca be no room for complaint, for here repetition is advancemen

H. A. MACKIE, INC.

Notice has reached us of the incorporation at Albany the above company, with a capitalization of $50,000. Th incorporators of the company are H. A. Mackie, L. E. Feli and E. L. Keener.

It is only about a year ago that H. A. Mackie commence business at 853 Broadway with a small repair shop and lin of motion picture supplies. In a few months he found necessary to double the floor space which has since bee outgrown. On the first of February the concern moves a ground floor store and basement at 21 East 14th Stree near Broadway, where ample facilities are provided for th growth of the business for some time to come. The rap development of the business speaks well for the personn of the concern and the treatment of their customers.

WHAT LITTLE BOOK IS KEPT WEIGHTED WITH LEAD?

What little book is kept weighted with lead? What is the most jealously guarded volume in the world? What volume, through the weight of the very lead aforementioned, may be cast overboard (aha! it is connected with a boat!) when capture threatens, and hence speedily and easily sunk? Why, none other than the naval signal code book, and it is of this book that a new film called "The Signal Code" treats. Thanhouser issues the picture Friday, Feb. 9. A whole fleet of battleships was employed for it, and it is expected that the reel will create a sensation. The code book is stolen from a young officer by a young woman in the pay of a foreign nation. The film takes up the matter of the theft and is certain to hold the spectator's interest.

SCENE FROM "THE RECKONING" (Republic).

Many unique features mark the subject of which the above cut is an illustration. The story is laid in a lumber camp and tells of the effort of a man to avenge the death of his brother.

HALLBERG ECONOMIZERS FOR ALL CIRCUITS.

Mr. J. H. Hallberg, "The Economizer Man," reports that during the past week he has shipped out alternating current economizers for 25 cycles, 40 cycles, 60 cycles and 133 cycles, and has booked orders for D. C. economizers for 110-volt, 220-volt and 500-volt circuits. He is also furnishing chairs and machines for three new theaters.

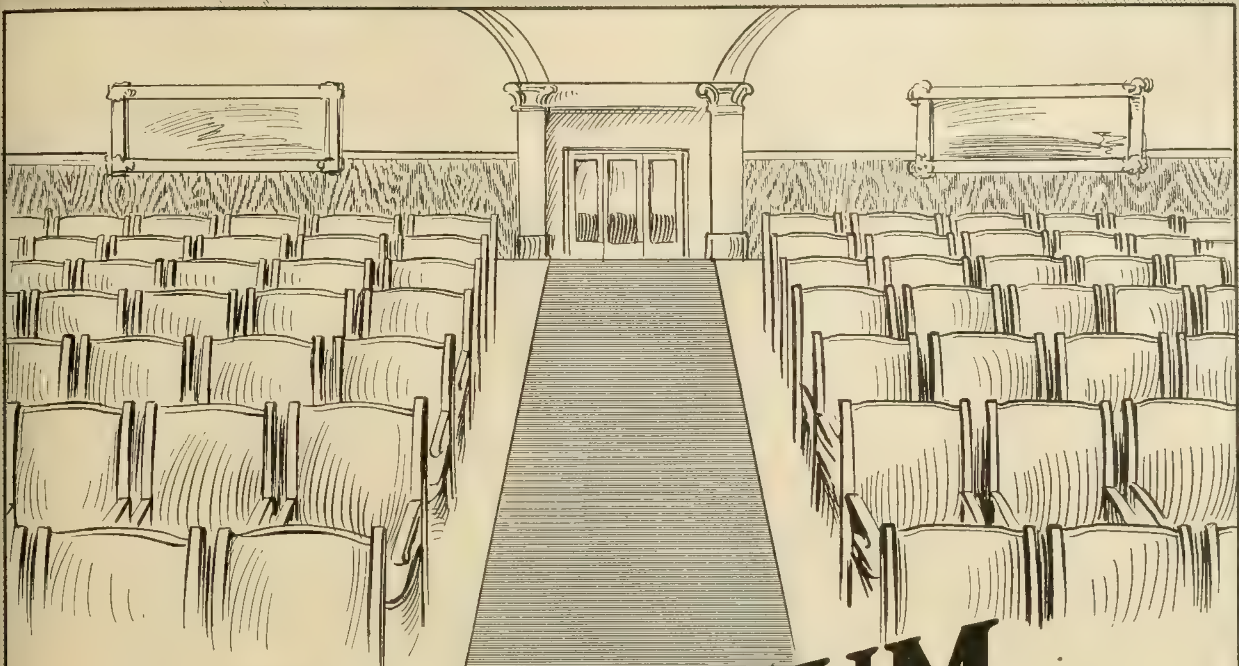
"IF IT'S ANYTHING TO ADVERTISE A PICTURE THEATRE WE HAVE IT"



CONGOLEUM

For Flooring

FOR FLOORING for the aisles of moving picture theatres, we manufacture Slate Gray Congoleum, a tough, durable fabric which looks like rubber but is much cheaper and more satisfactory. It gives perfect footing and can be used like rubber in sloping aisles. It is not inflammable and will meet the approval of fire underwriters. It has ideal laying qualities, for it clings tight to the boards and will not curl up, kick up or buckle. Needs no nailing. It will stand an enormous amount of traffic and is used commonly around billiard tables and similar places where there is constant hard wear.

Sold in rolls 36, 45, or 54 inches wide; buy whatever length you need.

It is obtainable from dealers in household furnishings, hardware and department stores, or we will sell you direct.

NEW ENGLAND.

Herewith is a copy of a bill that has been introduced into the Massachusetts legislature. Without doubt, it is the king pin of all the bills ever introduced into the Massachusetts legislature, and as a joke has never been equaled. It is enough to make the angels weep!

Senate, No. 200.—To accompany the petition of James P. Timilty that the hours during which moving picture and vaudeville entertainments shall continue be restricted. Mercantile Affairs.

The Commonwealth of Massachusetts.
In the Year One Thousand Nine Hundred and Twelve.
AN ACT
Relative to the Hours during which Moving Picture Shows and Vaudeville Entertainments may be carried on.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives in General Court assembled, and by the authority of the same, as follows:

Section 1. It shall be unlawful for any person to carry on a display of moving pictures or a vaudevill entertainment, so-called, except between the hours from one to five in the afternoon and from seven to eleven in the evening.

Section 2. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be punished by a fine of not less than ten nor more than five hundred dollars for each offence.

The author of this bill could hardly expect it to pass, and the chances that it will die are strong. The General Film Company knows of the bill, and will help to defeat it. More than that, the American Federation of Labor is extremely interested in defeating this measure, as it would do much damage to the Federation were it passed, as many of the photoplay theaters employ Union help. Among the trade it is not worth the time and trouble of again setting forth why such wild bills are drawn up for the legislature. Every manufacturer, exhibitor and exchange man knows the reason without any extended comment at this time. What would some of the peanut politicians do without the pictures?

Mayor Fitzgerald, of Boston, has sent a few bills to the legislature affecting the theaters, one of which is that all seats must be spaced not less than thirty inches from back to back, and that no seat shall have more than six seats intervening between it and an aisle.

Here's another: There shall be no temporary seats or other obstruction in any passageway, aisle or stairway in a theater.

More bills. James Frank Eagen and Representative J. F. McCarthy have petitioned for a law prohibiting the selling of tickets in excess of seating capacity.

Another measure which, if passed, will affect a number of photoplay houses, is the one offered by Mr. J. F. McCarthy providing that one member of the fire department shall be present at each performance in any theater having a seating capacity of 1,000 or over, and that the expense of having the fireman should be paid by the theater.

Here's one that will interest every Massachusetts exhibitor, offered by Mr. W. H. G. Wright, who proposes that all theaters should be closed on Sundays.

Mr. P. H. Higgins comes to the front with a most sensible and commendable bill, which petitions that the law passed four years ago limiting the showing of pictures to twenty minutes, be changed, so that pictures may be projected for one hour before some other form of entertainment be offered. The idea of limiting the exhibition of pictures to 20 minutes was passed with the argument that more than 20 minutes of cinematographs was injurious to the eyes. As a matter of fact, as the writer explained in these columns not long ago, the bill was never enforced to any degree, and of late has been totally disregarded by the officials. Yet, it will be better if the law is taken off the records.

As this is only a sample of what the legislators have up their sleeves, it is easy to see that the newly formed association of New England exhibitors should bestir themselves, lest some of the obnoxious efforts of the politicians are "put over." A lawyer of standing and presige can easily put such trumped-up bills to shame, and the Association of New England Exhibitors should take action and procure the right kind of legal talent.

Mr. Jack Watt, the Woburn, Mass. picture king, has returned from his trip to Florida, which covered a period of eight weeks. Mr. Watt's mission in Florida was to look over the ground, with a view to opening a string of theaters devoted to vaudeville and pictures. According to Mr. Watt, conditions in that section of the country are ripe for the right kind of photoplay theaters. As Mr. Watt returns to Florida after a brief stay, it is safe to presume that some definite announcements will be forthcoming in the near future.

The Rev. James Frisbie, of Salem, Mass., is a great friend of motography, and in a recent lecture gave ample proof of this. Rev. Frisbie stated that the benefits of motion pictures to the intelligence could not be over-estimated. After telling of the great good the pictures do from educational viewpoints, the Rev. Frisbie states that through the agency of the pictures people can be brought into the church who have not stepped inside for years.

Watertown, Mass., has broken into the list of New England towns that possess a photoplay show, as the first performance of that nature was given in Waverly Hall last Saturday night. Moving pictures and illustrated songs make up the show as no vaudeville is on the bill.

The first bomb in the invasion of William Fox into New England was fired on Monday, January 22, when the Grand Opera House of New Haven, presented a big show of vaudeville and pictures. The same policy that has been so successful for Mr. Fox in New York, will be used in New Haven—a show of six acts of vaudeville, and eight reels of pictures, with a bi-weekly change of bill. The Grand Opera House was leased from Henry B. Harris, the New York theatrical manager, and Mr. Fox has decided to retain Mr. Yack as his resident manager. The opposition in New Haven is the theater run by Mr. S. Z. Poli. The Grand Opera House is charging 10, 15 and 25 cents. As was noted in these columns, Mr. Fox operates his second New England house next November, when the Nelson Theater comes under his control. Mr. Fox expects to have a large chain of theaters in New England before many months have passed.

Colonel Stanton, of the Central Square Theater, Lynn, Mass., finds that vaudeville and pictures are not just what his patrons want, and is changing his policy to comic operas. This bears out the statement made some time ago in these columns as to the condition of the Central Square, even though the management vigorously denied it in an open letter to the World.

On January 14, an official mass meeting of the White Rat Actors' Union was held at Marcus Loew's Orpheum Theater, Boston, Mass. Mr. Joseph Callahan was chairman of the meeting, and is a member of the board of directors. The Hon. J. A. Brackett, counsel for the Union, Frederick Kneeland, of the Boston Central Labor Union, A. M. Huddell and P. J. Haloosa, labor editor of the Boston American, spoke. The necessity of organization was the main topic. Many local photoplay managers were present at the meeting.

The Academy of Music of Haverhill, Mass., was damaged by fire on January 20. The entire loss is estimated at about $50,000. The Academy is the oldest theater in Haverhill, Mass.

It is now stated that William Fox is to pay $11,000 per year in rent for the Nelson Theater, Springfield, Mass., for the first five years, and $12,000 for the last five years. Mr. Fox comes into possession of this house in November, 1912.

A new Maine corporation is that of the Cumberland Theater Company, which has filed its certificate of incorporation. The new concern has its headquarters in Brunswick, Me., and is capitalized at $10,000. Mr. H. C. Baxter is treasurer and W. F. Senter is president. The concern expects to open a high-grade theater, devoted to vaudeville and pictures.

As was noted in these columns, the Pastime Theater, Brunswick, Me., was closed by the Board of Health because of the small-pox cases in the town. The Pastime attempted to open but the Board of Health and the Selectmen refused to allow the opening. The Pastime is now closed indefinitely.

The Congress Theater, Portland, Me., has been leased by Messrs. Bishop and Paverada. The former will manage the house as usual, but vaudeville will be eliminated from the bils entirely.

LOUISVILLE.

The Ideal Amusement Company, composed of Fred J. Dolle, Henry Reiss, Joseph Stuerle and others, operating a chain of theaters, has filed amended articles of incorporation, increasing the capital stock of the company from $800 to $30,000. The latter figure is also set as the debt limit. The concern, which is erecting a new $50,000 moving picture house on West Market Street, has been delayed in its operations by the weather. The new structure will be opened about the middle of April or first of May.

The Clifton Amusement Company has filed articles of incorporation with a capital stock of $2,500, divided into 100 shares having a par value of $25 each. The incorporators and stock owners are: Robert H. Lucas, 92 shares; E. L. Pay, 4 shares, and Thomas Lucas, 4 shares. The debt limit is $2,500. The company has completed the Clifton Theater, on Frankfort Avenue. It has just opened with encouraging initial attendance. Mr. Lucas is a lawyer, this being his first venture into the theatrical business.

The Advertising Specialty Company has filed articles, with a capital stock of $500. The concern will handle photo-theaters in the vicinity of Louisville. About a dozen theaters have been secured with others in contemplation. The officers are: John F. Prinz, H. H. Krebs and J. C. McFerran.

The Falls Cities Amusement Company, controlling half a dozen theaters in Louisville, New Albany and Jeffersonville, has increased its stock from $20,000 to $150,000.

ter of a small street, many predicted that it would be a failure, but from present indications its success is assured.

Plans are being drawn for a vaudeville and moving picture house at Westville, N. J. It will meet active competition in the other well conducted houses in that city.

A contract has been let for the tearing down of the standing walls of the Lubin Moving Picture house, No. 928 Market Street. The General Film Company will open a new headquarters shortly.

The Union Theater, Hammonton, N. J., has closed and The Opera House has reopened. Formerly both houses ran at the same time, but the town could not support two houses of their size.

Mr. Ralph M. Bechtel, who was better known to his associates as Jack Myers, was found dead on January 12, having been accidentally overcome by escaping gas. He was with the house of Lubin when it was known as S. Lubin, at No. 912 Arch Street, and has been known in moving picture and theatrical circles for many years. Mr. Charles A. Calehuff of the Calehuff Supply Company, has been made executor of the estate.

The Vigilance Committee of the Civic Club, at Harrisburg, Pa., have taken active steps looking into the films shown there. At a local moving picture house several films were declared objectionable and were withdrawn. The city officials are backing up the club's efforts.

Messrs. Carr & Schad have paid $37,500 for a property on Penn Street, Reading, Pa. It has a frontage of 20 feet. A modern, up-to-date vaudeville and moving picture house will be erected on the property. Several years ago the same property sold for $28,000.

Mr. James Martin of the Pittsburgh Feature Film Company, spent several days in this city.

Mr. H. M. Taylor, formerly manager of the Keystone Theater, has taken over the management of Hart's Theater.

It is rumored that a syndicate is contemplating buying a property at Front and Lehigh Avenue for the erection of a vaudeville and moving picture house.

CLEMENT H. CONGDON.

ST. LOUIS.

There is a rumor out that the new Independent exchange in this city, the St. Louis Film and Supply Company, will shortly disband and be absorbed by the Swanson, Crawford Film Co.

The Bijou Dream, on 6th and Washington has changed ownership and management. Mr. Blondin taking hold Monday January 15th. The upstairs part of the house has been closed but the new management hope to find use for it in the near future. General admission to the Bijou Dream has been changed from ten cents to five.

The St. Louis Times, an afternoon newspaper, is starting an advertising campaign which will greatly benefit the general business of the local picture shows. Mr. Ed. Strassman of the Times, will be remembered as the man who was mainly responsible for bringing Miss Florence Lawrence and King Baggott before the St. Louis public.

Oscar Dane of the Eastern Theatrical Exchange, is booking feature films in the different picture shows in conjunction with the vaudeville end of the game.

Mr. Abrams of Toledo, was in the city selling state rights for his feature films "Zigomar" and "Love and Aviation." "Zigomar" holds the record for attendance this season at the Gem Theater.

At a meeting of the Board of Directors of the St. Louis Motion Picture Company, it was decided for the present to postpone the manufacture of pictures until the advent of better weather and the completion of alterations in the studio.

The Building Commissioners' office is on the rampage and all theaters, large or small, are being closely scrutinized to see that they measure up to legal requirements. This pleases the smaller fry, as heretofore they have been made to bear the brunt of most of the "investigations."

William Ferner and E. Keblenbrink of the St. Charles Theater, 515 St. Charles Street, are the inventors of a unique set of sound effects pronounced to be the best in the city. Their handling of the storm scene in the Vitagraph's "Fires of Driftwood" being a very realistic piece of business.

Wm. J. Flynn, general manager of the Grand Avenue Amusement Co., operating eight houses here, is a bundle of energy and a very optimistic booster in the picture business. His concern is also affiliated with the Mikado Amusement Co. and the Union Theater and Airdome Company.

FRANCIS J. FEGAN.

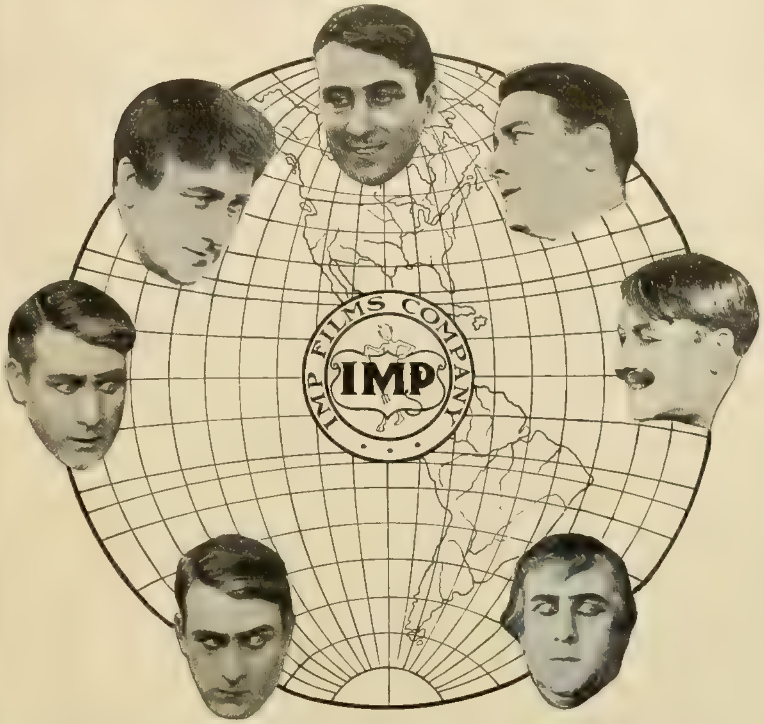
The BIGGEST and BEST film renter in the World

Popular All Over the World!

(King Baggott and Imp Films)



King Baggott is not dead. Like Mark Twain he says the rumor of his death is "greatly exaggerated." The rumor started in Kansas City this time. Last time it was St. Louis. You can tell your patrons, men, women and children, that King Baggott is not only very much alive but that he is "just as good a fellow off the stage as on." Moreover he is just as popular in Imp films in Europe as in America. He's working in some Imp pictures now that will set you wild with enthusiasm the instant we release them. Keep your eyes on three Imps a week. Our next releases are:

"The Helping Hand"

A totally new kind of plot; a real heart drama of intense interest. Released Monday, Feb. 5. Copyright 1912, Imp Films Co. Jot it down!

"Mrs. Matthews, Dressmaker"

A story of the poor and the rich. Not a fussy sermon but a corking good drama. Released Thursday, Feb. 8. Copyright 1912, Imp Films Co.

"Who Wears Them?"

Another ten-strike Imp comedy, showing who wears the pants in the French family. Released Saturday, Feb. 10. On the same reel you get

"Tea Industry in the U. S."

Only a few people know that tea can be grown in the United States. This reel shows the whole business as conducted in Summerville, S. C., near Charleston. It's great. You'll like every bit of it. It's part of the "Saturday Split" of Feb. 10. Copyright 1912, Imp Films Co.

Extra! Extra! Extra!

What is "The Implet"? Have you seen it? Did you get it? If not, your name is NOT ON OUR MAILING LIST. Get it on at once! Better do without breakfast than miss "The Implet." What is it? Write and find out. Send name and address SURE.

P. S.—On the way! The one biggest laugh of the year! "A MILLIONAIRE FOR A DAY." Only half a reel but a fuzzy peach! Begin talking to your exchange about it RIGHT NOW!

Captured by Wireless

This Urban-Eclipse production, to be released February 7th is a sensational detective story, brimming with realism.

Frank Warner, a defaulter, sails for South America. Nat Barnes, the detective, reaches the dock just in time to see the great ocean liner on which Warner is sailing swing out from its moorings. Barnes uses wireless telegraphy and delays the landing of the vessel.

In the meantime Barnes takes passage on another ship which docks at the South American port ahead of Warner, and the banker's arrest is effected amid great excitement.

The film shows two (2) ocean liners and two (2) wireless telegraph stations. This is the most practical illustration of the efficiency of the Marconi invention in rounding up criminals ever shown in a moving picture.

Kosmik Films Please the Public

The popularity of CIN-ES films is ever increasing. This is a very natural consequence, due to their general excellence.

Our Cin-es release of February 6th:

BESIEGED JENKINS, A CONQUERING HERO

lives up to the Cin-es quality admirably.

January 10th, 1912

NOTICE

The validity of the Edison Re-issued Patent No. 12,192, covering motion picture film, has been sustained by the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia, and for the information of those concerned, there appears with this notice a copy of the order and decree entered in that Court on December 23rd, 1911.

The manufacture, sale, rental or use of motion picture film containing the invention covered by said patent, without license from this Company, will be diligently prosecuted by suits for an injunction, accounting and damages, including all profits, gains and advantages that the infringer has received or that have accrued to him by reason of such infringement, in manufacturing, selling, renting or exhibiting such film.

In the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia.

MOTION PICTURE PATENTS COMPANY, Plaintiff, vs.
CHICAGO FILM] EXCHANGE,
Defendant.

In Equity
No. 28,605.

This cause having been brought to final hearing upon pleadings and proofs, and upon Defendant's motions to strike out testimony taken on behalf of the Plaintiff and for leave to take further testimony on behalf of the Defendant, and having been argued by Melville Church, Esq., of counsel for the plaintiff, and by Harry N. Low, Esq., William Houston Kenyon, Esq., and William J. Wallace, Esq. of counsel for defendant, and having been duly considered by the Court, it is, by the Court, this 23rd day of December, 1911, Ordered, Adjudged and Decreed, as follows :

I. That reissue letters patent No. 12192, granted to Thomas A. Edison, on the 12th day of January, 1904, for Kinetoscopic Film, referred to in the plaintiff's bill of complaint, are good and valid in law as to the 2nd claim thereof.

II. That Thomas A. Edison was the original, first, and true inventor of the improvements described in said reissue letters patent and particularly claimed in the said 2nd claim thereof.

III. That the plaintiff, Motion Picture Patents Company, has good title to said reissue letters patent.

IV. That the defendant, Chicago Film Exchange, has infringed upon said reissued letters patent No. 12192, as to the said second claim thereof.

V. That a perpetual injunction issue against the said defendant, Chicago Film Exchange, prohibiting it, its officers, directors, attorneys, agents, servants and workmen, from directly or indirectly making, using or selling Kinetoscopic or Motion Picture Films containing or embodying the invention set forth in said reissue letters patent No. 12192, and particularly covered by claim 2 thereof.

VI. That the plaintiff do recover from the defendant the profits, gains and advantages which the defendant has received or made or that have accrued to it by reason of its said infringement of said reissue letters patent No. 12192 since the date of said reissue letters patent, and also the damages which the plaintiff has sustained by reason of said infringement, to be assessed as provided by law.

VII. That this cause be and is hereby referred to the Auditor of this Court to take and state an account of said gains, profits and advantages and to assess such damages, and to report thereon with all convenient speed ; and that the defendant herein, Chicago Film Exchange, its officers, directors, attorneys, clerks, servants and workmen be and are hereby directed to attend before said Auditor, from time to time, as required, and to produce before him such books, papers, vouchers and documents and to submit to such oral examination as the said Auditor may require.

VIII. That the plaintiff do recover of the defendant its costs in this suit to be taxed by the Clerk of this Court.

IX. That defendant's motion to strike out parts of rebuttal testimony of the plaintiff as not being proper evidence in rebuttal, and defendant's motion to be allowed to take further testimony strictly in surrebuttal, heretofore reserved for the final hearing, are hereby denied.

WENDELL P. STAFFORD, Justice.

Decree entered December 23, 1911.

LICENSED Film Stories

PATHE.

PATHE'S WEEKLY—Reel No. 5—1912 (Jan. 29).—Pasadena, Cal. The annual floral parade and races in connection with the Rose Festival meet with the usual great success.

New York, N. Y. One result of the zero weather here is the great ice floes which greatly hamper the harber traffic.

Breslau, Germany. Kaiser Wilhelm reviews the Boy Scouts.

Palermo, Italy. Reinforcements for the army in Tripoli arrive and camp outside the city, awaiting the transport.

Tregeron, Wales. This village is nearly swept away by a flood.

Melun, France. The motorcycle race, organized by the Motorcycle Club of France, is won by Dubost, who covers 127½ miles in 3 hours 24 minutes and 10 seconds.

Bowling Green, Ky. The planters bring their crop to the Annual Tobacco Pool, formed a few years ago in a desperate effort to break the grip of the Tobacco Trust.

Special for the Ladies: Paris, France. Advance models in late winter and early spring millinery. And many others.

A BOOMERANG JOKE (Feb. 7).—Jack is deeply in love with Mary, and his jealousy is aroused at Mary's birthday party, by the attention of a real count, who seemingly has fascinated Jack's sweetheart. In order to get even, Jack decides to have a party of his own, and dresses up Tom, a friend of his, in women's clothes, and Tom makes a striking appearance as a woman, and at the party attracts the count's attention. This piques Mary and leads to a heart to heart talk between Mary and Tom. Tom discloses his identity and ultimately wins Mary for his own, leaving both Jack and the count out in the cold.

NIAGARA FALLS IN WINTER (Feb. 8).—This picture was taken when the thermometer registered 28 degrees below zero, and the ice formations on the falls, in the rapids and on the trees close to the falls where the mist turns every twig into a white lace-work, make the picture a veritable fairyland.

TWO BROTHERS (Feb. 10).—Mack and Jack are in love with Bessie, the ranchman's daughter, but she loves Jack the best and writes a letter, telling him so. Mack gets it, changes the name and Jack goes away broken-hearted. Bessie, too, is so overcome with grief, that Mack relents and swears to bring his brother back. To do this, the two brothers go through a series of exciting adventures.

BIOGRAPH.

A NEAR TRAGEDY (Feb. 5).—A vaudeville sketch team is fired by the manager, who says their act is "rotten." In their hotel room that evening, the couple rehearse their act, and the constable, seeing the figures silhouetted against the window-shade, thinks murder is being committed. He arouses the sheriff, and they rush to the rescue, only to find the two actors trying to bolster up that "rotten act."

LILY'S LOVERS (Feb. 5).—Lily prefers Paul, the artist, while her father insists that she marry the doctor. The village sport and the "cut-up" both aspire for her hand. The day is set for her marriage to the doctor, and by pretending to look with favor upon both the sport and the "cut-up," she manages to secure their aid, although unwittingly to them, in becoming the bride of Paul, the artist.

A SISTER'S LOVE (Feb. 8).—At the death of their mother the elder sister makes a sacred promise to take care of the younger, and by so doing she sacrifices the love of her sweetheart, who refuses to assume the responsibility of the extra care, as he feels it is an injustice. This separation almost breaks two hearts for they love each other devotedly. The elder sister, true to her trust, toils incessantly to provide money for her sister's education, even sending her away to the city to study music. Here a young millionaire patron of music falls desperately in love with her and marries her. Her success is so great that she quite forgets the tremendous sacrifice her sister has made for her, and it is only when she learns that her sister is at the point of death that she is awakened to her sense of duty.

C. G. P. C.

ROETGEN'S X-RAYS (Feb. 6).—This scientific film is exceedingly interesting in familiarizing the spectator with the mysteries of those invisible rays which penetrate opaque bodies. The machine which creates the electricity, the peculiar Crooke's tube, the method of taking a radiograph and finally the picture of a live frog taken with X-rays, showing the movements of the bones, form this interesting film.

EXCURSION IN THE SWISS ALPS (Feb. 6).—The towering mountains, the verdant falls, the great glaciers are all perfectly shown, as is also a party of mountain climbers, toiling up the steep sides of the cliffs.

A VISIT TO THE DOME OF THE MILAN CATHEDRAL (Feb. 7).—This film is unsurpassed in delineating the marvelously beautiful architecture of the ancient cathedrals of Europe. All the delicate carving is distinctly shown in a series of foreground views, and the whole forms a picture of exceptional instruction and interest.

THE THREE KITTENS (Feb. 8).—This is a departure from the ordinary run of films, and rests for its interest upon the antics of three beautiful little kittens, who seem to be almost human in their entertaining playfulness. They appear through a hole in the side of a fence and proceed to the drawing-room. They play with each other, fight, quarrel, chase flies and tumble over each other in a manner which makes every spectator long for three just like them.

PHILEMON AND BAUCIS (Feb. 9).—Philemon and his wife, though old, found their love, ever increasing for each other, and one day, when two of the Olympian Gods visited the earth their extraordinary affection, and the purity of their love, so struck the minds of the gods, that the two mortals were transported to the Olympian Gardens, and finally, as a reward for their example of supreme earthly love, they were changed, when locked in each others arms, into two everlasting trees with branches intertwining.

HUNTING MARABOUT IN ABYSSINIA (Feb. 9).—Two marskmen with their negro helpers, travelling through the interior of Abyssinia in search of birds who supply the market with their marabout feathers. The picture shows how the birds are decoyed with bait, how they are shot, how the feathers are plucked and sorted, and finally packed for shipment.

VITAGRAPH.

THE LAW OR THE LADY (Feb. 5).—Lincoln Hallett is on trial. His chief backer is Tim Creegan, a political boss. Judge Calder, who is to try the case, is an especially upright man. He is in love with Hallett's daughter, Rose. Hallett and Creegan are afraid of the Judge's decision. Creegan insists that they must bribe him. He tries and fails. Then he advises Hallett to use his daughter as a weapon, making her believe that her father is the victim of a conspiracy. Innocently she tries to persuade him to decide in favor of her father. He refuses and insists upon doing his duty. Later on, she overhears Creegan and some confederates plotting to abduct and perhaps murder Calder.

She sees that she has been deceived and at once goes off to warn her lover. She gets there in time. Creegan's tool, Harkin, who brings a decoy message to Calder, is arrested with his accomplices, and turns state's evidence, to Creegan's horror and dismay. Judge Calder turns up in court the next morning, alive and well. Creegan is arrested for conspiracy. The judge passes sentence on Hallett. The latter has now come to a realization of his crime. As he goes to prison, he leaves his daughter's future in the hands of the man who condemned him, because he has found him fair and just, a man of honor, who will do his duty at all hazards.

UMBRELLAS TO MEND (Feb. 6).—Mrs. Niceman has five umbrellas which are needing of repair. She instructs her husband, "Bunny," to take them to the umbrella hospital on his way to business. He has several previous business matters to a tend to and, he reaches the umbrella shop abo noontime. He delivers them and enters the resta rant next door to satisfy the inner man. Seate at one of the tables, he orders his meal. In th meantime a fussy old maid takes a seat next him at the table. She carries a pearl-handle umbrella, which she evidently considers a ve good one, and to keep it from getting away fro her, she has it fastened to her wrist with a rubb band. Mr. Niceman, in a hurry to get back his office, absent-mindedly seizes her umbrell which refuses to go with him without its owne She is convinced that it was "Bunny's" intent to steal it and she does not hesitate to accuse hi creating a scene, from which Mr. Niceman hu riedly takes his departure.

On his way home that evening, Mr. Nicem stops in the repair shop and gets his umbrella Boarding a street car, he is seated, comfortab reading his paper, when the old maid whom he m in the restaurant, enters and takes a seat ne to him. She recognizes him and her eyes lig on the five umbrellas. She concludes he has stol them, as he tried to steal hers. She tells him and when he denies it, makes such a fuss, a poli man is called and Mr. Niceman is arrested.

He is taken to the station house and his wi is notified of his dilemma. She hurriedly comes his assistance, explaining his possession of t "rainshedders." The sergeant accepts her e planations and honorably discharges her husba The scrappy and crabbed old maid is horri chagrined, her mortification greatly intensified the laughter from those who followed them to t police station.

THE PICTURE WRITER (Feb. 7).—Chiabos, young Indian, is looked upon by his fellow memb of the Wampos Tribe, as being afflicted w genius. He has an ardent admirer, Honitas, w loves to watch him record the events of his peo in pictures and colors. He presents her w specimens of his art, which she prizes as gr gifts. Her father, the Chief of the tribe, lea of her love for Chiabos. In anger he calls young Indian to him, denounces him as a worthl fellow, and banishes him from the tribal doma Honitas, the Chief's daughter, is sudde stricken. Chiabos learns of Honitas's malady, hastening to the camp, asks to be her nurse. father is pleased with this offer, and he ent upon his duties. After a fortnight, the girl led from the tepee, restored to health.

From caring for Honitas, Chiabos contracts disease and dies, happy for having sacrificed life for the one who was so ready to sacri all for him, and who had been the one inspirat of his life's purpose, in the portrayal of life pictures. The Chief and Honitas mourn him the bravest of the brave: they follow his b to the burial cache and decorate it with flowers of the field, as emblems of honor and l

HER BOY (Feb. 9).—Far up in the mounta Mrs. Ballor's two sons, Tom and Harry, are gaged at their distilling, constantly in fear being pursued by the revenue officers, and arres as moonshiners. Harry is taken ill and du his sickness, the revenue officers learn of the cation of the still and are in pursuit of the brothers. In the Film Business the Superlative is dead. Words like "Gorgeous," "Magnificent," "Gigantic," have lost their meaning, and convey no more to your mind than the Illustrious "Tongues of Babel."

Little wonder, with some thirty manufacturers clamoring for your attention, each with the "Best," "Greatest," and the "Grandest" two, three or four times a week!

The success of AMERICAN FILM is not based on Empty Praise or Plain Hot-Air--AMERICAN prosperity is the result of painstaking work, careful study of the markets and an organization capable and efficient.

AMERICAN SUCCESS is not contingent upon miscellaneous "feature" pictures, but rather a standard grade of excellence week in and out calculated to make you want each and every AMERICAN RELEASE.

SOME OF OUR FEBRUARY OFFERINGS

"THE BEST POLICY"

(Release Feb. 1. Approx. Length, 1,000 feet. Western Comedy.)
A tale of three train robbers retiring into the bush to divide the swag. It's "double-cross" upon "double-cross." Screamingly funny. A bully good story with a laugh in every picture.

"THE REAL ESTATE FRAUD"

(Release Feb. 5. Approx. Length, 1,000 feet. Western Soc.-Dr.)
A charming, delightful story centering about the efforts of two real estate sharks to swindle an inexperienced but pugilistic young man and how that attempt was frustrated by the "boss's" own stenographer.

"THE GRUB-STAKE MORTGAGE"

(Release Feb. 8. Approx. Length, 1,000 feet. Western Drama.)
A stirring Western tale of a salted mine and a young mining engineer's devotion to truth.

"WHERE BROADWAY MEETS THE MOUNTAINS"

(Feb. 12. Approx. Length, 1,000 feet. W. Social Drama.)
A delightful Western drama centering about the infatuation of an Eastern playwright for a mountain girl, combining a touch of the effete East with the rough, whole-souled ways of the West.

living presence of companionship. One day, while out with his father and mother, a strange stray dog, lame and hungry, takes kindly to little Ronald and comes up to him for sympathy, which is readily given by the little fellow, and there seems to be a mutual feeling sprung up between the two. When Ronald enters the automobile with his parents, the dog follows the fast moving vehicle. He will not be separated from his new found friend, and the boy takes him into his home and makes him his "fidus Achates;" they are inseparable.

Ronald is taken sick. His case baffles the skill of the specialists, and Mr. and Mrs. McCumber are in despair. The one and only hope for his recovery is rest, the fever and delirium making it impossible for him to secure it. Finally the doctor gives him a soporific. The parents and nurse are ordered from the room. "Jean," the dog, who has made several attempts to enter the room and watch his little master, has been ejected, but all being quiet, the dog makes another effort to get near the boy. The doctor, falling into a deep reverie, does not observe the faithful canine's entrance. The physician glances toward his young patient and beholds him sleeping peacefully and quietly, his arm around his dear old "Jean," whose head rests on his master's breast. Calling Mr. and Mrs. McCumber into the room, he cautions them to maintain quiet, pointing to the bed where they behold a picture which fills their hearts with joy. The doctor whispers that the crisis has passed and their boy will recover.

BATTLE OF POTTSBURG BRIDGE (Feb. 5).—Bartlow joins Stuart's Confederate brigade. A year later the Federals are holding Pottsburg Creek Bridge near Bartlow's old home. Bartlow plans to burn the bridge and interrupt the Federals' line of communication. To aid in the scheme a party of Stuart's brigade attack the sentries to hold their attention while Bartlow accomplishes his mission, but on the way to the bridge, Bartlow is discovered by a sentry and badly wounded. He manages to get ashore and reach his home.

Jessie, his sister, dressing in a suit of his clothes, finally reaches the bridge, sets fire to it and escapes.

In the meantime Stuart's men have drawn the Federals in force across the bridge. Quickly retreating, the Confederates blow up the end of the bridge. The Federals thus are caught between two fires, and to save their lives are obliged to jump into the water and swim for shore, where they are quickly made prisoners by Stuart's men who are waiting for them along the banks.

THE SWIMMING PARTY (Feb. 7).—Dick, who is refused permission to accompany the swimmers, plans revenge. When the boys are in the water he hides their clothes.

When the boys come out and find their clothes missing they are in a quandary. A scouting party sneaks through the woods and appropriates a quantity of women's wearing apparel, found hanging on a clothes line.

Dick, unable to restrain his merriment, makes his presence known and is run down and caught by one of the boys. As punishment for his mischief he is thrown, fully dressed, into the water.

FLORAL PARADE AT SAN DIEGO, CALIFORNIA (Feb. 7).—Opening scenes show several thousand jackies from the United States warships, parading in their white uniforms. The passing of the sailors is preceded by a number of beautiful girls who are seen throwing roses in the roadway.

The final scenes show the Battle of Roses. Handsome flower decked floats and carriages, filled with California's beautiful girls, are pelted with flowers by the officers of the warships.

THE VAGABONDS (Feb. 9).—The wanderers, Big Jim, his sweetheart Nell and Nell's grandfather, the fiddler, are much disturbed over a quarrel between Big Jim and Nell. Big Jim in a burst of temper rushes away.

Tom and his sweetheart, Jane, are soon to be married. Tom shows Jane his savings. While walking along the road. Tom and Jane pass the old fiddler and his granddaughter. Seeing that Tom is rather observant of her charms, Nell cannot restrain the temptation to flirt, and she waves her hand to him.

Later on, Tom returns to the camp of the vagabonds and becomes much enraptured by the coquettish ways of the girl wanderer. Tom is so beguiled by the dancer that he leaves his sweetheart and follows the girl.

Big Jim, who has gotten over his fit of anger, returning to camp, asks for an explanation of Tom's presence. Nell makes light of Tom and shows very plainly her heart is in the sole keeping of Big Jim. Tom clearly realizes his position and forces Nell to make a declaration, the results of which so astound the infatuated Tom that he apparently loses all reason and, wandering from the camp of the vagabonds, he roams over the fields all night. The next morning Jane finds him and, womanlike, forgives her recreant lover and they start life anew.

ALKALI IKE'S LOVE AFFAIR (Feb. 6).—Alkali Ike is in love with the daughter of Ranchman Brown, who is very much opposed to the match. Alkali, to prove that he is brave solicits the help of two of his cronies, who are to disguise as hold-up men and waylay Ranchman Brown. The hold-up occurs, but when Alkali pulls the masks off the highwaymen he finds they are not his friends, but two of the most desperate bad men of the country. Alkali makes his get-a-way with the girl, leaving father to take the bad men to jail, where he is presented with a bag of gold as the reward for the capture of the bad men. Alkali Ike wins not only the hand of his beloved but the bag of gold as well.

THE MELODY OF LOVE (Feb. 8).—Maurice Eaton, a young musical composer, is engaged to marry Isobel McIntyre, a society belle. Eaton has composed a wedding march for their approaching nuptials but on the eve of the marriage he is stricken with a fever, which leaves him blind. The composer now realizes that he can never marry Isobel and tells her that the match must be broken off. Some years later the musician is forgotten and Isobel becomes engaged to a wealthy young society man. On the day of the wedding the church organist is taken ill and the church officials are in a quandary, when one of them remembers of a blind musician who lives in the neighborhood whose services might be obtained. Eaton, ignorant of who is to be wedded, is pressed into service and plays the wedding march he had composed for his own marriage. The bride, unable to place the familiar music, wishes to see the organist. In the semi-darkness of the organ loft she is unable to distinctly see the face of the organist, but Eaton easily recognizes the voice of his former sweetheart. The girl nearly faints when she at last sees who played the wedding march, and turning to her husband, begs to be taken away. At last the church is empty and the blind musician, left alone in his sorrow, bursts into tears.

HER BOYS (Feb. 9).—The widow Morton has two sons, Jim, a boy of seven, and Joe, a little fellow five years old. Jim, feeling that he is a burden to his mother, runs away. Joe is adopted by Judge Gordon and his wife and some years later finds him a young lawyer. His opportunity comes one day when the widow Morton asks his services in behalf of a young man who had befriended her and who is now in trouble. When the prisoner is discharged he shows the old lady a Bible he has had since boyhood. Widow Morton recognizes her long lost son, Jim, and Joe recognizes the Bible as similar to one given him by his mother. There follows a happy reunion for the little family, when the boys and their mother learn the whole truth.

THE DEPUTY AND THE GIRL (Feb. 10).—Jim Black has a daughter, Edna, who is engaged to marry Frank Shaw. One evening Jim and Frank leave the cabin together and later lay in wait for the stage-coach, soon due. After the robbery they separate in order to throw the posse off the trail. Jim is finally trailed down by the sheriff and posse and surrenders, while a deputy is sent to Jim's house, where it is suspected Shaw has retreated. The deputy is met at the door by Edna, who gives the deputy her word of honor that Shaw is not in the house. The deputy, taking her at her word, mounts his horse, but has not gone far when a shot from the cabin brings him to the ground. The girl turns on her lover with a look of scorn. Shaw then makes his escape and the girl looks after the wounded man. The next morning Shaw is captured and confesses that he shot the deputy. And it is not until the deputy is well on the road to recovery that the girl confesses she lied to him. The story ends with the hint that a love affair has started between them.

the maid and after discussing the situation she timidly resolves to investigate, taking with her her husband's revolver. Finding the door unbolted, she secures it just as the little boy returns with his toys and vainly rattles the door knob for admittance. Frightened nearly out of her wits, she retreats with all haste to her bedroom and locks the door. Shortly after her husband enters the front door; in the hallway he stumbles and upsets the little table lamp, the noise of which adds more terror to the frightened Mrs. Lane and her maid. Groping his way up stairs he tries the door knob of their bedroom. This is the last straw and the poor women are on the verge of collapse, but upon hearing the voice of Mr. Lane they are greatly relieved and welcome him with open arms. They relate the terrible incident to him and all start out on a tour of investigation, only to find their little son on the stoop fast asleep, nestled beside his companion, the family dog.

THE CORSICAN BROTHERS (Feb. 9).—Fabien and Louis are twins and so close is the tie that binds them that the emotions of one are immediately shared by his twin brother. Consequently, when Louis falls in love with Emilie de Lesparre, Fabien at once follows suit. Emilie and her father return to Paris and Louis decides to follow. Fabien remains home with his mother.

Arriving in Paris, Louis receives a warm welcome from Emilie, much to the chagrin of M. Chateau Renaud, who, thinking he had won Emilie's love, sees in Louis a rival. His fears are soon realized, for Emilie turns from him. Out of revenge he decides to compromise her, and to this end, he induces her, under a pretext, to attend a Bohemian supper to be held after a masked ball. Not content with this, and in order to still further humiliate her, he makes a wager with one of his friends that he will bring her there by four o'clock. He had not foreseen, however, that Louis would attend the supper.

On the stroke of four, Renaud and Emilie enter the supper room. Emilie is terrified to find herself in such company and, seeing Louis among the guests, asks him to escort her home. Renaud, furious at Louis' interference, strikes him and a challenge follows. Louis and Renaud meet the next day and Renaud quickly runs him through.

The thrust that pierces Louis' breast is felt by his brother Fabien in Corsica, who at once fears for Louis' safety. His fears are realized that evening by the appearance of Louis' spirit. Fabien swears to avenge his brother's death and leaves for Paris, where he meets Renaud and, on the selfsame spot where Louis was killed, he kills Renaud in a fierce encounter. His brother being thus avenged, he rides to the home of Emilie and comforts her with the news that Renaud is dead and Louis avenged.

THE CITY OF DENVER, "THE QUEEN OF THE PLAINS" (Feb. 10).—Denver, perched upon the edge of the great Western prairie and facing those grand old Rockies. The stock yards with hundreds of cattle; the buffaloes in the park; the handmaids of the city cleaning their regal queen for her daily task; the public baths, the Municipal Theater and the public playgrounds all give an added sparkle and interest to this interesting and instructive picture which closes with a magnificent run of the entire fire department of the City of Denver in action.

VON WEBER'S LAST WALTZ (Feb. 10).—Two young people at a concert are listening to Von Weber's waltz. Some days later at a dance this same Von Weber waltz is the immediate cause of trouble. Of course they must always dance the waltz together and it so happens that another young man at the dance has put down his name for this waltz on the young lady's program. She feels that she must fulfill the obligation and of course her boy lover is more than a little put out. The result is the breaking off of their engagement. She tries to play it on the piano and finds that she cannot remember it, so decides to buy a copy. The youth hears a street violinist playing it and being near a music store, enters with the intention of buying a copy of it. And it so happens that the two young people come together. When the two young people meet in the store the proprietor understands the situation, and sending the girl to the window to listen to the violinist below, he tells the boy the story of his own mistake. The girl turns to listen and by the time the story is finished, they are both ready to forget their quarrel.

SELIG.

THE GIRL HE LEFT BEHIND (Feb. 5).—A chemist has invented an apparatus for illuminating purposes. He falls asleep over his work. A letter comes to him from a company offering him a price for his invention. He goes to the company's office where in excitement he mixes the wrong gases. There is an explosion.

Dejected he returns to his garret and there finds the cause of his failure. He prepares to return to the company's office when he is met at his door by friends who have been searching for him for years. The president and directors of the company are summoned to the inventor's garret where a successful demonstration is made and Abel is reunited to "The Girl he Left Behind."

"THE WIDOW OF RICKIE O'NEAL (Feb. 6).—Rickie O'Neal decided to end his life in the river. But the water is too cold so he left his clothing near the water, shaved off his beard and is now living the simple life. He becomes a caller at a neighboring ranch controlled by the Widow Manning, who decides to give the boys a dinner, but they are slighted in order that Rickie may have all the attention. In fact, the Widow Manning can only see in Rickie the love light of her long lost John. This even angers the hired girl and she leaves.

The boys remembering the widow over the range felt sure that she would be glad of the place and at once one of them goes for her. When Widow O'Neal drives up Rickie makes his escape through the rear. The hearts of the boys are touched and they decide to give the poor widow a Wild West show benefit. Securing a disguise Rickie attends. The money comes in by the handful. Rickie decides to seek his first love as the money looks to him like "easy life." He eventually becomes the idol of the Rickie home again.

THE HORSESHOE (Feb. 8).—Through Cupid's agency, Barton Sumner finds himself minus the services of a stenographer. Minnie Rogers is doing the daily rounds of employment bureaus seeking a chance to earn a living. She accidentally stumbles across a horseshoe which she tacks above the door leading to her lodgings. In the end, of course, everything turns out happily for all concerned. In this particular instance Barton Sumner finds his long awaited stenographer ,and Miss Rogers finds her ideal employer—but what's the use of spoiling the pleasurable delight of this story by telling all that happens before witnessing the picture.

A MYSTERIOUS GALLANT (Feb. 9).—Col. Houston calls upon Miss Prudence Calhoun and while courting on the sofa, the elderly Southern couple are assisted by Iva Dawson, who hides unseen behind the sofa. Iva puts an arm about each of them and then again hides. They in turn seem angry at each other at such forwardness and separate.

Prudence, Iva, Senator and Mrs. Dawson now come in. The ladies removing wraps, and the Senator leaving the room and going to bedroom, where he takes off his wig: He then leaves. Iva then cautiously enters bedroom, tries on wig and calls Sally to help her with Senator's clothes.

Sally now enters parlor with card, and Prudence and Mrs. Dawson tell her to usher the party in. Sally returns with Iva dressed as a man and they do not recognize her. Iva finally sits down, pulls off wig and causes much amusement. Senator returns to bedroom, finds his wig gone and leaves in anger. Iva plans to play a joke on the Colonel and the women agree to keep the secret. Then she kisses them just as the Senator enters, and sees it. He leaves in a rage. He meets the Colonel in the hallway and tells of a man kissing the women in the parlor and they hurry to the parlor.

In the meantime, the women have left the parlor and when the Colonel, and Senator enter, they find it empty. They go to the garden and there find Iva and Prudence embracing and then leaving. The Colonel in a rage follows them, while Mrs. Dawson appears and finally explains to the Senator that the man is their own daughter, which greatly amuses him.

Iva and Prudence sit on a bench and kiss, as Colonel rushes up and demands an explanation. An argument follows. Then Colonel on his knees places ring on Prudence's finger. Iva does the same. Senator and Mrs. Dawson enter in background. Prudence finally accepts the Colonel. He then turns to Iva to call "him" out and settle it. Iva then unmasks herself and Colonel forgives her.

FIRST AID TO THE INJURED (Feb. 9).—This educational film demonstrates the methods employed by the United States Government in rescuing and giving aid to unfortunate victims who find themselves injured, entombed or cut off from all escape in the vast mines of our country.

LUBIN.

A CURE FOR JEALOUSY (Feb. 5).—Bob Pettibone is jealous of his wife. His school chum, Jack Nevin, arrives and is amused at an affectionate farewell of the Pettibones. Mrs. Pettibone hears her husband telling his friend that he is in doubt as to whether his wife is a trifler or not. The friend is persuaded to flirt with the wife and report to the husband. Wife overhears the plot and astounds the friend by being very flirty. Husband goes home and catches pair in what he considers a more than friendly conversation. He is so enraged that he throws a bisque figure on the floor. The noise startles couple. Mrs. Pettibone, who calmly picks up the broken figure, throws it out of the window at her husband's head. Nevin's wife calls and Pettibone comes in front door in time to see his friend embracing a woman in the hall. He gets a sword from the wall and chases his friend, who runs out of the window. Husband comes down stairs, sees two women, does not know what to make of it. Wife scolds. Nevin returns and explains to his wife what he had in store for Pettibone. All explained, ends happily.

TRICKED INTO HAPPINESS (Feb. 7).—Dick Walton, a superintendent of the Robson Shoe Factory, is in love with Mildred Mason, the stenographer. Mildred had promised to marry Dick. Jane, Mildred's older sister, is also secretly in love with Dick. Will Emmet, traveling salesman for the Robson concern, is also in love with Mildred. While Dick is examining a machine he is struck in the head and blinded. He is taken to the Mason home where he boards. Will Emmet calls to see how Dick is, and persuades Mildred to elope with him. Dick calls for Mildred and Jane finds Mildred's letter in which she wrote that she could never marry a blind man. She impersonates Mildred and answers his call. Dick asks her if she loves him enough to marry a blind man. Jane consents and they are married. A year has passed very happily and a little babe has arrived to cheer Dick and Jane. Robson has given Dick a pension and has also tried to have his sight restored. In the meantime Mildred is paying the price for her treachery as she learns, too late, the man she has married is a gambler. Mildred returns home. A noted eye specialist has arrived, and through the efforts of old man Robson, an operation is decided upon. This is successful and as the bandage is about to be removed, Jane hides behind the portières. Mildred, who has just arrived, stands in amazement and as Dick looks around he sees Mildred and clasps her in his arms. Mrs. Mason brings Jane from her hiding place and tells Dick of all Jane's noble sacrifices and of Mildred's treachery. Dick listens in amazement and awakened to Jane's unselfishness, clasps her to his heart, while Mildred stands with bowed head.

WHAT FATE ORDAINED (Feb. 8).—Tom Scott and Ida Brown are lovers. Tom loses all his money. He tells his sweetheart of his misfortune and suggests that the engagement be broken off as he cannot endure the thought of making her a poor man's wife. Ida is very much angered at the idea that Tom should think she is inclined to marry for money. However, Tom insists and Ida breaks loose. She is quickly picked up by a rich man much older than herself, while a wealthy widow, Mrs. Smith, determines to get Tom Mutual friends all advise marriages of convenience. It means money, and money is happiness, perhaps, but after a ball they dream and the logical outcome is pictured to them. Love overrules all else and the worthy sweethearts are reunited.

AN ANTIQUE RING (Feb. 10).—Joseph Simpson is a candidate for governor. Jim Dixon is on opposition ticket and he and his party bribe John Matthews, Simpson's confidential man, to invent some damaging incident in his employer's social life. Simpson has purchased a valuable antique ring, which he intends to present to his wife on her birthday. Simpson discovers that there is a stone loose and instructs Matthews to take it to the jeweler. The clerk plots with Kitty, the stenographer, to join him in the plot. The girl agrees. Matthews then insinuates to Mrs. Simpson that her husband is flirting with the stenographer and offers proof. Mrs. Simpson sees the ring and card. Matthews then 'phones to the press that Mrs. Simpson has eloped with him. Simpson is at the club watching the ticker and reads the associated press report of his dishonor. He rushes home and there finds his wife and Matthews in a very confidential situation. The clerk has really become frightened and is pleading with Mrs. Simpson to save him. Explanations follow and the worthy husband and wife are reconciled.

CHAMPION.

AVIATOR AND AUTOIST RACE FOR A BRIDE (Jan. 29).—William Crane, an autoist, has lots of admirers, among whom Bertha Monroe is the chiefest. Crane calls on Bertha for a spin in his machine. Bertha's mother, knowing Crane's reckless proclivities, is adverse to her daughter's acceptance.

Now the terminus of their drive found them at the Aviation Field, where a number of flying men held forth. Among these was the dare-devil Lee Hammond himself. Lee was a great admirer of Bertha Monroe. Lee knew Miss Monroe's daring spirit, and his quickly given invitation to her for a flight was readily accepted by her. Before Crane realized what had happened, she was up in the air.

In rage he dashed after them in his auto, but he soon came to grief, and was compelled to alight to tinker with the jarred mechanism. Hammond also alighted so that he might also pay his attentions to his fair companion. Soon, however, Crane was rushing on the scene, and what might have proved a tragic ending was averted by the clever girl, who proposed that the question of right to her be settled by a race. The race came off, the Aviation Field being selected for it. Then both machines, aero and auto, leaped forward like things alive, at terrific speed.

At last the stamina of the thiing of the air begins to count. The last lap had been made in a sensational flight; then came a startling culmination. The man-bird swooped down where the fair judge was standing, and the life and soul of the bird, Lee Hammond, reached out, clutched her, and bore her triumphantly aloft.

A DIVIDED FAMILY (Feb. 7).—Arthur Gleason is the spoiled child of his mother. His father takes him to task. The mother flies to the aid of the son. The result: the boy leaves home and the parents separate.

The boy goes to sea. The father changes his name and throws himself heart and soul into his profession—the law. We see the poor mother as a housekeeper in a wealthy home of aged people, where the old man is a roue of the deepest dye. Thus is the life of Mrs. Gleason made more wretched, the attentions of this scoundrel being horribly disgusting to her. The antiquated wife of this roue becomes foolishly jealous and is blind to the fact of Mrs. Gleason's innocence.

Thus, one day, when she comes upon the husband forcing his unwelcome attentions on the housekeeper, she flies into a terrible passion and attacks the woman. The result is, the poor creature defending herself against the attack, chokes the ancient dame into unconsciousness, believing she has killed her.

The son returns to his old home, only to find strangers installed there. The young man has now given up the sea and joins the police force. It comes about that his mother is arrested and brought into his station. The son goes forth to find a lawyer to save his mother. Now the lawyer turns out to be his own father.

The trial is gone through with. A happy reconciliation is finally brought about, and father, mother and son are again brought together.

ECLAIR.

THE HANDS (Feb. 8).—The Superintendent of an asylum for the insane brings his friends to visit his establishment, where they see the poor inmates and pity their fate. One of them, a dangerous maniac, who has strangled his own wife, is standing before them. He watches a young woman of the party, and unnoticed, follows her when she leaves the room. The visitors are now in the Superintendent's office. A keeper comes in to tell him that the maniac in question has disappeared. The young woman remains alone with her husband. Suddenly turning round, she sees the maniac looking through the window, and faints. Her husband leaves the room to call for help. When she regains consciousness, the maniac is about to seize her. Almost crazed with fear she rushes out, followed by the maniac. She reaches a pavilion and is able to lock herself in. The maniac tries to break the door down. Unable to do so, he goes round the pavilion, enters through an open window and noiselessly springs on the helpless young woman. Happily the Superintendent, with a few keepers, arrive in time to save the young woman.

ARABIAN POTTERY (Feb. 8).—This very interesting subject shows us the Arabian method of making pottery, without molds; the drying in the sun and decorating of same, then baking, and finally, the removal from the furnace after thoroughly hardened.

THANHOUSER.

THE TROUBLE MAKER (Feb. 6).—A poor but happy young married couple moved to a fashionable suburban colony in the East. They hired a social secretary to educate them and be their sponsor with the "Four Hundred." The Secretary was a man of an old family, but much embarrassed financially. The wife studied her "society lessons" and welcomed persons, more or less in society, who were brought to the house by the secretary.

The husband did not find the new game interesting or exciting, and showed it. He and his wife at first bickered mildly, then quarreled violently, and in time there was a divorce.

The secretary saw his way clear to a fortune. He made love to the divorcee, and she was flattered by his standing in the world of fashion. She agreed to marry him, but his perfidity was made clear to her by himself, unwittingly. Brokenhearted the woman decided to go back to the village where she had once been so happy.

On the train, en route home, she entered the dining-car and was given the only vacant seat, one at a table. Across the way was her former husband. He too was going home. When they first came to the city they had eaten in a dining car. Now they were again in one, but things were different.

There was no one to meet her at the depot, and she was forced to accept the invitation of her ex-husband to drive her home. They went past the little church where they had been married and the husband called her attention to it.

"We have both made mistakes, let's forget them and start afresh," he said, and the woman consented. So hand in hand they re-entered the church, and were married all over again.

THE SIGNAL CODE (Feb. 9).—A most jealously guarded book is a naval signal code. So important is it, that the volume is always weighted with lead, so that in case of capture, it can be sunk.

A foreign adventuress, received in New York society under the title "Countess," was really a foreign spy. Her accomplice, also presumably noble, saw a chance to get a signal code by her fascinating a naval officer. The Countess was invited by the naval officer to visit his ship. There she chanced to see the signal code, and asked him as a proof of his love to permit her to retain it until the next day. He refused, but she laughingly slipped it into her handbag. The young officer did not want to publicly disgrace the girl, and foolishly believed that he could trust her.

The adventuress' actions were observed by a sailor. He followed her to her rendezvous with her fellow conspirator. The two were off their guard for a moment. This gave the sailor a chance to make a quick substitution. They found it out later, when they looked for the code book and found a brick. The sailor returned the book, thereby repaying a debt of gratitude, and the secret of a gallant officer's weakness was securely hidden in the breast of a grateful common sailor.

IMP.

THE HELPING HAND (Feb. 5).—John Clinton, an old mechanic, who is struggling to support his wife and pay off a mortgage on his little home, meets with a sad blow. He is discharged from a job he has held for years for the reason that he has reported too late for work. To add to their misery the man who holds the mortgage calls and insists on a payment, an instalment being due. There is a deficit of $20 in the family exchequer in the payment of the claim.

Clinton reads in a newspaper an account of a man who has sold his body to a medical society to be delivered after his demise. He conceives the idea of raising money that way, but his proposition is not regarded favorably when he broaches the subject to the superintendent of a medical college. He abandons hope and wanders aimles about.

When passing a handsome residence from whi two richly dressed women emerge and enter automobile, he discovers a bag well filled w coin, which one drops. He does not hesitate moment, but immediately gives chase to the car. the meantime the loss of the money is noted a the women return in search of it. They m John on the road and he surrenders the b to the owner. She is delighted over the recove and rewards him by bestowing upon him a bill large denomination. He is now happy to th he can pay the installment and hastens home share the good news with his wife.

Walking through the park he sits down on bench to rest. This bench is under a tree a a park employee is in the branches pruning the Thugs see the old man counting the money a spring upon him. In the struggle he drops t wallet on the bench beside him. The employ sees the fight and the wallet, and with his lo shears reaches down and picks it up. The man overpowered, the thugs look for the purse. find it gone. They disappear, after giving John parting blow.

The man in the tree drops the purse near Clint and he finds it. The installment on the mortga is paid and the old man is in ignorance of t hand that assisted him in his hour of need. (Co righted 1912 by Imp Films Co.)

MRS. MATTHEWS, DRESSMAKER (Feb. 8). John Matthews is a common laborer, happy in t possession of a wife and child. He dies in h ness, so to speak, being stricken at work. T wife has been a dressmaker before marriage a thrown upon her own resources, she resumes t occupation. She works for the wealthy, who not always pay her promptly. She finishes dress for a Mrs. Baldwin, the wife of a rich ma and depends on the money to buy the necessari of life. Her little girl becomes ill and she sen to Mrs. Baldwin, asking for the wage due h The wealthy woman ignores the request, thinki the woman can wait. The child becomes wor and a physician is called. He prescribes me cine and the widow goes to the pharmacy to obta the drugs. The prescription is filled, but as s has no money the medicine is withheld. It is a bottle and the widow is desperate. Watchi her opportunity she steals the medicine, thinki her action unobserved. She is apprehended, ho ever, and arrested. The husband of the ri woman intercedes for her, seeing the injustice the act and his wife, filled with remorse, mak a tardy reparation for her remissness. (Copyright 1912 by Imp Films Co.)

THE TEA INDUSTRY IN THE UNITED STAT (Feb. 10).—Down in Summerville, South Carolin the tea plant is cultivated so successful that the product is marketed at a profit. The pla is grown both in the open and under shelter; the operations of weeding, pruning, cutting, sor ing and packing are shown and the picture giv one a vivid idea of what is necessary in the m nipulative sense for the cultivation. The old wa of cutting the tea leaves was by hand; the fi illustrates a machine, resembling a reaper, doi the work. (Copyrighted 1912 by Imp Films Co.)

WHO WEARS THEM? (Feb. 10).—There is doubt that domestic work palled upon Harry French He hated the job of helping his young wife pa their belongings preparatory to moving from the Harlem flat. But he intended escaping pettico thraldom for a time. In the apartment belo there was a card game threatening and Har determined to make one. So he feigned madnes alarmed his wife and made his escape. Joini the party, he won largely and was happy in h success.

Mrs. French got wind of Harry's whereabou and surprised him in the act of deception. Whe he returned laden with the spoil, he was greete with a broomstick attack, deprived of his winning physically sat upon and informed that his bett half "wore them." (Copyrighted 1912 by In Films Co.)

when Morris comes home with airy notions, and a feeling of shame for his father. He wishes to go into business with his chum and Solomon gives him the money. Morris becomes infatuated with his partner's sister, to whom he becomes engaged. He refuses to live with his father and takes a handsome apartment, where he gives a dinner in honor of the prospective bride. Solomon is not invited, but thinks it an oversight on the part of his son, and attends with Rachel. Angered, and thinking himself humiliated, Morris disowns his father. The old man denounces his son and his associates and departs. Later Morris's chum ruins him, his fiancée deserts him, and Rachel prevails upon Solomon to go to Morris and bring him home. With his false pride shattered, Morris meekly and humbly realizes that his place is with his old father, and that Rachel is far dearer to him than the heartless woman he thought he loved.

THE MAN UNDER THE BED (Feb. 3).—An escaping convict is wounded by the prison guards and enters a residence. The woman of the house is on her knees saying her prayers when the desperate man enters her bedroom. Her back is toward him, but she sees him in a mirror and is petrified with fear. The convict, thinking himself unobserved, stealthily hides under the bed. The woman fears to give an alarm, and endeavors to still her trembling nerves, awaiting the momentary return of her husband. At last he arrives, and she then fears for his safety and, declining to open the door, begs him not to disturb her, as she has a headache. This unusual conduct arouses his suspicions, and finding the coat and hat the convict wore, he secures his revolver and demands instant admission. Upon her refusal he breaks down the door just as the pursuing guards rush in through the window, and his wife falls unconscious to the floor. The convict is dragged from under the bed, and is discovered to have been dead for some time.

BISON.

WAR ON THE PLAINS (Jan. 23).—The emigrants are seen fighting the hordes of redskins. The hero rides to the settlement for help and engages in a thrilling duel with pursuing Indians. The settlers swoop down on the unprotected Indian village and burn it up. The savages seeing the flames, hurry back and fall into an ambush. They are attacked from the rear by the emigrants and from the front by the settlers. In a wild scene of carnage the surprised Indians are mowed down by the hail of bullets, horses and riders falling in tangled masses.

THE RANCH GIRL'S LOVE (Jan. 26).—In an absorbing card game scene the ranchman stakes his all and loses. The soldier of fortune recovers the money, and after a thrilling duel, in which he wounds the gambler, he exposes the latter's dishonest playing.

LUX.

FICKLE WOMAN (Feb. 2).—Lord de Vere and his nephew have the good fortune to be "on the spot," when the dainty Mrs. Dupont meets with an accident. Turning a sharp bend in the road, the car overturns, and its fair occupant is thrown into a ditch. From this embarrassing dilemma she is rescued by the two. The hospitality of Castle de Vere proves much to her satisfaction, while the knowledge of the fact that Mr. Dupont has been "wafted hence" causes great satisfaction to the trio. Algy and his brother Rudolph are both led to believe that they are accepted suitors. Their surprise is great, however, when their noble uncle interrupts the duel, to which this rivalry has given birth, and introduces them to their future aunt, yours truly, Madame Dupont.

THE SKIVVY AND THE MAT (Feb. 2).—A screaming adventure of an industrious skivvy and a dirty mat. Her efforts cause much sorrow in the neighborhood attendant upon the ruination of much valuable wearing apparel. In vain Sally Maria searches for a satisfactory spot in which to beat her mat in solitude. Finally she places it upon the line in the kitchen, which gives way, bringing down the wall with it and causing further chagrin in the immediate neighborhood of the Skivvy and the Mat.

GAUMONT.

THE WATERMAN'S BRIDE (Feb. 10).—A canal picture depicting the joy followed by despair of desolate loneliness on the part of a waterman. While plodding his weary road in harness drawing the heavy canal boat along the waterway, the waterman meets his love. They marry and enjoy the ceremonies that a wedding on a boat roof can only make possible. The pair feast beneath the starry sky until the bride persuades her happy husband on the night of their wedding day for a walk on the moonlit shore. Midst the happiness of their embraces she suddenly dies. The husband has her clad in her wedding gown and wearily plods his way, dragging the cumbersome boat down the canal.

THE RED MOUNTAINS OF THE ESTEREL (Feb. 10).—This subject shows scenes of the rock-bound coast of Theoulle, France; the balsam-clad, white cap sprayed Bay of Agay, and the rocky, desolate projection of Dramont point.

CALINO AND HIS BOARDER (Feb. 13).—Calino decides to take a boarder. The gentleman turns out to be a huntsman. All goes well until pay day when the roomer refuses to get out of bed to pay his bill. He says that his pocketbook is in one of his trunks in the garret. Up goes the anxious Calino and his officious mother and sister only to find, upon ransacking each trunk, a furious African lion emerge. The hungry beasts pursue the trio in full haste and the complications and situations encountered are unusually comical. Calino never pays the board bill.

ZIGOTO, KING OF DETECTIVES (Feb. 13).—Everybody behind the scenes is busy making up the clever danseuse. Midst her hustle to get ready she has time, however, to receive a valuable necklace from her stage Johnny, an English lord admirer. In her excitement to respond to her cue, she rushes from the room, dropping her pearls in an undergarment, and returns to find to her alarm, that the jewels have disappeared. She consults the aid and ability of the famous detective, Zigoto. This noted sleuth commissions his two cleverest subordinates, Detectives Fuzzle and Summer. The former takes a map, on a bench under a side window of the theater, the other uproots every thing and person in his search. In the meantime the lord buys the actress an exact duplicate. Summer spies him, mistakes him for the thief, and leads him as prisoner to the detective bureau. Fuzzle finds the necklace, which had been dropped from above as the maid was shaking out the undergarment. With his prize in hand, he also reports to the bureau, arriving simultaneously with his comrade. Surprise, joy, humiliation, all ensue.

NESTOR.

WIDOW WINKS (Jan. 29).—Widow Winks has set her cap for Deacon Blinks. Deacon Blinks is equally determined to espouse the obliging widow. Willie Winks is determined to have some fun.

With Willie constantly on the job, the deacon gets all that's coming to him. The widow, too, is not forgotten by her impish offspring, and goes through a rigid ordeal. Willie's pranks, however, fail to shake the determination of the seasoned lovers, who swear to be true to one another.

RAVAGES OF A FIFTEEN MILLION DOLLAR FIRE (Jan. 29).—The onlooker is taken to Broadway and Wall Street, New York City, and views the Equitable Building still burning. The entrance to building is shown in Arctic attire; also striking views of northeast corner (location of deposit vaults, containing nearly two billions of dollars) are seen in all their rigid and majestic grandeur. The spectator is then taken to the top of the Trinity Building, also to the highest point of vantage of the United States Realty Building, and from thence he looks down upon the smoldering ruins.

THE MAN FROM THE FOOTHILLS (Jan. 31).—Tom Evans is out of work; his wife Jennie is sick. He obtains work on a ranch and upon request is given part of his salary.

Jim Hoover, the foreman, has gambled and lost. Neither Tom nor the ranchman observe his entrance. Jim sees the open safe and slips behind a bookcase. Tom exits, but in his hurry leaves his coat on the chair. The foreman snatches up the coat, and as the ranchman, Col. Foster, is closing the safe, he throws the coat over the ranchman's neck, tieing the sleeves, takes the money from the safe and runs out.

Tom hears the noise from the outside, and turns just as Jim comes out. He sees the bag of gold; holds Jim up with his gun and commands him to drop it. He obeys and runs, and as Tom picks it up, the ranchman rushes out, sees Tom with the gold and, not having seen who took the money, accuses Tom. The cowboys do not believe him. The foreman sees how things are going, returns and accuses him. They quarrel. Tom finally shoots the foreman in anger and then mounts his horse and rides away, followed by the boys. They eventually capture him and bring him back to the ranch.

In the meanwhile his friend at the ranch has gone to Jennie, found she needs a doctor, has gone for one, and then brought him to the ranch to see the wounded foreman, and also to get the foreman's wife to go to Jennie. The friend tells the doctor to make the foreman believe he is dying, and he may then confess to the theft. The doctor does so, and Jim confesses. The physician then returns to Jennie, and later as the boys bring up Tom and the ranchman, shows them the confession of the foreman. Tom's friend returns from his cabin and brings the following note from the doctor—"It's a boy and weighs nine pounds. Both doing fine."—Dr. Thorpe. Ranchman and boys congratulate and ask his pardon.

DESPERATE DESMOND AT THE CANNON'S MOUTH (Feb. 3).—Claude Eclaire becomes a scout and Rosamond a Red Cross nurse. Desperate Desmond, assisted by ten wild men, springs a trap. Claude places Hector, a dog, in a drum and pushes it down the hill to the barracks. The troops arrive just in time and Desmond surrenders.

On learning of his chief's capture, Gomgotz starts in pursuit of the scouts. After a sharp skirmish, Gomgotz realizes the superior fighting strength of the enemy and resorts to foul means. Attaching a telephone apparatus to a kite, he sends it in the direction of the soldiers. Claude and Rosamond, busy with the kite, fail to notice the telephone, of which Desmond makes good use, telling Gomgotz that the troops are without ammunition. The wild men, therefore, make an energetic attack, put the soldiers to flight, save Desmond and capture the lovers.

Claude is buried up to his neck in a hole and left there to perish with a house placed over his head.

The lone house lures some bandits, who convert it into a deposit vault. In counting their gold, a coin drops and disappears through a crack in the floor. They look for it and—Claude is unearthed. After telling his story, the good-hearted robbers give him a rifle and, thus armed, Claude goes in search of his beloved. He finds her tied to a tree, and, while Desmond hobnobs with Gomgotz, Claude releases Rosamond and both dash away. Desmond quickly gives chase, but in the jungle, Brutto, the big gorilla, decides to aid the lovers by striking the villain on the "coco" with a cocoanut. Desmond takes the count, and Claude has no trouble in making him prisoner. At the barracks, the cigarette-smoking fiend is tied to the cannon's mouth preparatory to getting a blowing finish. Just as the order to "fire" is given, the lovers embrace. Curses on the luck!

REPUBLIC.

MOTHER'S OLD ARMCHAIR (Feb. 10).—Norman Wallace marries Bess Franklin. After the wedding when they are looking over the many gifts, they see the one Bess's mother has given them. It is an old-fashioned armchair. A note on it reads: "When in trouble seek solace from the old armchair; it will never fail you; never part with it.—Mother." They move into a little home of their own and find great comfort in the old chair.

A little baby comes to bless their union. One day, Norman rushes in, greatly excited; he has inherited a large sum of money. They buy a new home, and as Bess is arranging the furniture she has the old armchair placed near the fireplace. It jars on Norman's artistic sense and he has it removed to the attic.

As years go on, he becomes indifferent to Bess. Norman plunges in the stock market. Suddenly everything turns against him and he knows unless he can get into a friend's office in a few minutes all will be lost. He rushes madly from his office to the elevator, just as the elevator boy is closing the door; he tries to force his way in, the elevator quickly descends and catches him, crushing his legs. They are compelled to sell their house and furniture. When the men come to the attic to see if there is anything there they are about to remove the chair, but Bess pleads with them and they allow her to keep it.

Bess and her family move to poor quarters. She tries to make a living, but is not successful. Things go from bad to worse. The landlord gives them two hours to pay the rent or go out of the room. In despair, Bess kneels at the old armchair and in raising herself from the floor, putting her hands on the arm of the chair, it breaks. She discovers a chamois bag with a note on it, saying "From your mother." She opens the bag and finds it full of money—enough to start them in life again.

THE RECKONING (Feb. 11).—Frank Shields and some miners are working a placer mine. Frank writes a letter, asking his brother to come North. Bob sets out for the North. He encounters Bart Murray, a bully, and a fight ensues. Bob is killed by one of Bart's blows.

The news is heartrending to Frank. He arrives at the roadhouse and the first one he encounters is the man he is looking for. Not knowing his man, he allows him to get away from him but is informed by Kate Shepard and her father of Bart's identity. Bart meets a messenger and asks him for a lift. The messenger allows him to take a position on the sled behind him.

Frank meets Kate and together they come to the top of the hill. Frank sees in the distance Bart getting on the sled and the killing of the messenger. Bart makes away with the money package.

Frank tells Kate to return to camp and warn the men and in the meantime he will take the trail of the murderer. Frank wounds Bart, causing him to drop his gun. He draws his sled alongside of Bart's and then ensues a battle. Frank is the victor and causes Bart to kill himself by his own weapon. Frank secures the stolen money and sinks on the sled exhausted. He is later picked up by the miners, who took the trail after being notified by Kate. He is carried in the house and placed in a bunk, and under Kate's care he finally recovers from his injury and is rewarded by winning Kate for his wife.

THE NURSE (Feb. 6).—There is an old saying which tells us that we cannot know people fully until we have lived under the same roof with them. If the wife in this story had known it she might never have entertained the friend who came to visit her: for it is this same friend, the chum of girlhood days, who opens the first chapter of an intrigue which wrecks the happy home. But there is a Providence which presides over such matters, and which in this case sends a representative to earth, so to speak. This envoy is a little daughter of the couple, through whom fate pulls her strings in such a way that before the picture is finished her little arms are drawing her separated parents together into loving embrace.

A WAITER OF WEIGHT (Feb. 10).—We would not so much despise the titled foreigners who come to this country in search of marriageable fortunes if the parents of the daughters were not themselves so foolish in taking the chances they do. So disgusting is the persistency of the newly-rich in the hunt for title that the average man is satisfied when he hears of a case where the hunter is stung.

And stung they are, very often. This picture shows what a waiter with a Bordeaux twang can do in the marrying line, and he almost proves living argument that clothes makes the man—that is, so far as the parents of the girl are concerned. There's a young artist on the courtship job, however, and he not only sees through the waiter's clever scheme, but schemes a niftier scheme to beat him to it—and he does. The waiter loses all his weight with the family.

AMERICAN.

THE BEST POLICY (Feb. 1).—Three gentlemen are seen forcing their way through the thick semi-tropical growth of Southern California. The dilapidated trio bear the names of Boggs, Briggs and Boswell.

They camped. They slept—or pretended they did. Boggs and Briggs, determined to appropriate all they had, thus leaving Boswell free. But Boswell overheard and, while the older robber went away to place the treasure in a hollow tree, Boswell bitterly upbraided his companion. So, Briggs relenting, the pair decide to give the old man the double cross. Proximity of the rangers prevented Briggs and Boswell from retiring very far into the underbrush; hence old Boggs overhears and decides to double-cross both of them. So he leaves the treasure in the tree and places in his vest a false package. Then Briggs held him up and secured what he thought was the treasure. Finding it all his own, he sees no necessity for sharing it with Boswell. A chase ensues. Boswell catches Briggs, sits upon him and removes the loot quite handily. And then—they discover the gross fraud perpetrated upon them!

Meanwhile, Boggs has lodged himself comfortably against a tree. He draws from his shirt the real loot and examines it long and earnestly, looking up with a pleasant smile just in time to sight down the wrong end of a gun barrel. The law catches tight hold of poor Boggs's collar, and Briggs and Boswell are left alone to speculate on the folly and futility of material things.

THE REAL ESTATE FRAUD (Feb. 5).—Jack Stevens sees the advertisement of a Western land agent. As he is reading the ad his mother receives a letter from her brother, saying that he has left her $7,000. They decide to invest it.

Jack arrives at the office and meets Mabel Mittler, the stenographer. She likes the boy and is interested in his conversation. The agent returns and to him Jack tells his errand. The girl listens in horror when she hears him paint in glowing terms the property she had heard him refuse to undertake to sell that very morning. The agent suggests they go to visit the tract and the girl is on the point of warning the boy, then changes her mind.

The return of the agent and his attitude tells her that he has achieved his object. Her employer tells her to fill out the necessary papers. Jack draws his checkbook from his pocket, when the telephone rings. The agent tells her he will be right back and to take the young man's dictation in a letter to his mother.

"Dearest Mother—I am paying $7,000 on a fine piece of land and will have to give a mortgage on the little home for another thousand. It won't be long until I send for you.—Your loving Son."

Now she turns to the boy and implores him not to sign the letter or the check and tells him that the land is worthless. Furiously angry, he destroys the letter and the check and rushes from the room. Down the street he went, meets the agent and the owner laughing heartily over the simpleton they have landed. He blurts out his opinion of their methods and carelessly implicates the girl. The agent hurries to his office and orders her from his office. Down the street she wanders. The land owner accosts her, but she refuses to have anything to do with him. The boy has witnessed the affair and with one well-directed blow knocks him down. Then Jack sent a telegram to his mother, saying that he didn't get the land, but got a wife.

THE GRUB STAKE MORTGAGE (Feb. 8).—Jack Burton, a young mining engineer, is in love with the foreman's daughter. She loves another suitor, Jim Blake, a young proprietor. Failing to find any promising prospects, Jim salts a prospect hole he has been digging and invites the old foreman to investigate it. The old man finds it bearing quartz, and readily agrees to mortgage his little home to grub stake the proprietor share and share alike. He asks his employer for the money and as his home is clear he readily takes a mortgage on it and gives the foreman the money.

Jim takes the money. Then came an accident. The old foreman is caught in a blast and killed. Then comes a note from the superintendent of the Face Quartz Mining Co., informing her that the mortgage on her little home is past due. She goes to the mine and offers her share in the claim for an extension of the mortgage. The superintendent offers to investigate the claim and if found valuable to cancel the mortgage on the home. He sent the young engineer to investigate it; but it was found to be of no value. Jack returns to the girl and she tells him to go to his employer and report the truth. Quick to act in all things the superintendent summons the sheriff and evicts the orphan girl from her home.

In the meantime Jack has hurried to the bank and drawn out his balance. He arrived at his sweetheart's home too late to prevent the eviction, for she has already gone. His savings are just enough to pay the mortgage, which he takes up and then hurries to seek her. She wanders to the prospect hole. Jack Blake finds her and gloating over her loss, tells her that it is Jack Burton's fault that she is homeless. Jack comes up and enraged to hear abuse given his sweetheart, he flings Jim from the girl. In a fight that follows Jim loses his balance and falls to his death into the hole. Jack leads his sweetheart back to her home and when she tells him it is hers no longer, he takes the canceled mortgage from his pocket and slowly tears it up. Then they turn to face a new future—together.

MAJESTIC.

AN OLD LADY OF TWENTY (Feb. 2).—Florence Davis comes to New York to prepare for rehearsals for the leading part in "An Old Lady of Twenty."

She rents an apartment in a studio building. In the adjoining apartment, Mr. Robert Armitage, a young artist, is hanging on the wall some of his latest efforts. He pounds a nail through the wall and on the other side a shower of plaster falls upon Flo. She screams in terror, and Armitage realizes what has hapened. He proceeds to make apology, and, after doing so, exclaims, what a "dear old lady." Flo, who has reached the mature age of twenty, conceals her amusement at the effect of her successful makeup. Armitage begs that she allow him to make a sketch of her in her quaint costume and she consents. The time has come when Flo wishes to see what effect her appearance, in proper person, will have upon the young artist. She sends him a note by the landlady to the effect that her daughter is coming to town, and as she has an important engagement, she would like him to take care of the little girl until she returns.

An hour later, Armitage hears a knock on the door in the next apartment, and he goes into the hall and is confronted by a dainty vision of youthful loveliness. His surmise, that it is "the dear old lady's" daughter is confirmed, and he shows the girl her mother's note.

LUCKY MAN (Feb. 2).—A very late 'phone call summons Smith to his club to join a party of business acquaintances and Mrs. Smith, despite her protests, is left alone. She decides to try and 'forget her troubles in sleep. She wakes up with a start. Her hand goes to her once soft little chin—it is bearded. She flies to her mirror and perceives that she is the possessor of a well-grown moustache and vandyke.

A GAME FOR TWO (Feb. 4).—John Hartman, a most learned writer on subjects far beyond the ken of his wife, further aggravates matters by collaborating with a "blue stocking."

The collaborator is Mrs. DeWitt Turner, a widow of mentality, whose literary work appeals strongly to Hartman.

Hartman's wife is not at all unaware of the widow's semblance of attractiveness, and resents very bitterly the hours her husband spends over his collaboration.

The last straw is laid upon his wife's delicate shoulders when he breaks an opera engagement at the sudden call of the widow, who has a bad habit of receiving sudden inspirations at very uncomfortable times for Hartman's wife, and commits her to the care of a young bachelor, that she may not lose her evening at the opera. Smithers, the bachelor, is an easy-going young fellow and Bess decides that the time is ripe to give her complacent husband a severe jolt. Despite Smithers' ineffectual protest and resistance, Bess fairly forces the young fellow to allow her to have supper after the opera in his aparement, unchaperoned, but unknown to Smithers, leaves a note for her husband, which he received upon his late return, telling her intention to sup with his friend Smithers, and that if he is a wise husband, he will call for her. Now Hartman, despite his literary absorption, is only human, and he remembers that Smithers is a rather attractive young fellow.

The results are beyond her wildest hopes. Her husband, inflamed by jealousy, attempts to force his way past the hall-boys in the building, and Smithers, in the fear of meeting him, and unable to beat a safer retreat, makes a hurried departure by the fire-escape. Now, Smithers' apartment is in the same building as the widow's. They are separated only by a wall, and the at-times fair "blue stocking," innocent of cosmetics and other artificial aids to beauty, is preparing to retire for the night, and rather exulting over the uneasiness which she infers her evening with Hartman has inflicted upon Bess. She is about to raise her window, when she beholds a man's face peering through the glass. She flies into the hall and beats upon the door of the next apartment, crying for help. Bess, who has locked Smithers out on the fire-escape, lets her in, and the widow retreats into a clothes-closet before the sudden entrance of Hartman. Without a word reproach to his wife, Hartman seeks Smithe thirsty for the blood of the friend v has led his wife into a compromising situati The search leads to the kitchenette, and Bess umphantly locks him into that 2 x 4 room, then, performing a like service for the widow h stuffy clothes-closet, and Hartman attempting sleep on an ironing-board, pass a pleasant ni until the return of Smithers' valet in the morni who releases them all, to the consternation of widow, that the man she has been angling for sho see her in such a condition. Hartman returns his home and finds his wife's room has evide not been occupied. Unable to comprehend what all means, but only feeling that his heart is bro at the thought that Bess has left him for that fernal Smithers, he goes to his library with intention of destroying the work, which he f has been responsible for his loss, and finds th comfortably curled up in his big chair, still in evening gown, with mussed hair and flushed fa his wife.

squalor of her surroundings and offers her work in his studio. The girl accepts.

One day, the artist paints her as she stands, in her rags. It is pronounced a master work.

Another day the girl dons the satins and silks of the models, and bids him paint her in those raiments. His trained eye notes the distinct contrast, and he paints her in fine feathers.

The portraits, with their contrast and realism, are masterpieces, and quickly establish the artist's reputation. At an exhibition of the Art League it attracts the attention of the President, who becomes curious to know the model. He meets her, and exhorts her to leave the life she is leading. The girl ponders his advice, sees the truth of it and the fearful trend of her life and asks the artist to marry her. He tells her he cannot.

The girl, resolved to return to a life of honor, returns to her miserable home. In her absence, the artist realizes that he really loves the girl, and goes to seek her. He enters in time to frustrate the maddened cobbler from wreaking his drunken vengeance upon the girl for leaving him, and leads her out into that life which through all the years she had dreamt of.

THE DEFENDER OF THE NAME (Jan. 28).—John Potter is the son of one of the most distinguished and courageous families in old Virginia. The stirring news that Sumpter had been fired upon volleys its pregnant purport into the homes of the South. John volunteers to serve. Disguised as a Union soldier, John starts on his mission of securing the Union forces' plans. As he steals through the Union lines he comes upon a squad of Union soldiers, and in their midst a Confederate spy. A sharp order and from the barrels of twelve guns the prisoner's punishment is meted out to him. Like a blow it dawns upon John that, if detected, that would be his fate. His courage fails him and he turns toward the Confederate lines. He runs to his home, and bursts in upon his sister, who alone is awake. A few brief words and she knows all. The boy, desperate in his shame, runs into another room; there is a muffled shot—a thin wreath of smoke tells its grim tale. She determines to accomplish her brother's mission.

She manages to get into the Union lines, secures the plans and when she reaches her home, where her dead brother lies, she places the plans in his pocket. The Confederates find him and he is buried with military honors.

GREAT NORTHERN.

VENGEANCE vs. LOVE (Feb. 3).—The story opens in the private room of a Russian public benefactor who has been arrested by order of Count Alexis on a capital charge. His wife is praying for his safety before a cast of the Virgin Mary, and she turns away and sinks into a chair prostrated with grief. There she is found by her son Paul, who attempts to console her. A servant hands him a note from the secret society of which his father was a member, intimating that his parent has been shot by order of Count Alexis. The shock also kills the mother. Paul vows to be avenged on the count, and to this end seeks the aid of the secret society. The president gives him a revolver, accompanies him to a hotel where the count and his daughter Lonja have just arrived. Paul, seeing Lonja, is struck by her beauty and falls in love with her. Later on the same evening, the two members of the secret society are introduced to the count. They discover that complications have arisen in their plan, inasmuch as Paul is in love with Lonja, with whom he dances during the evening. The anarchists remind him of his vow and he promises not to forget. He goes in search of Lonja and succeeds in finding her alone, but his fellow-conspirator calls him away. She, thinking something is amiss, follows, and overhears the details of the attempt to be made on her father's life. She writes a note to Paul requesting his presence in the concert room. She tries to keep him until after midnight, when the crime is to be carried out, but he sees the hour is approaching and slips from the room. Meanwhile, Lonja has discovered his absence and follows, determined to prevent bloodshed. Paul opens the door and creeps inside and is about to shoot, when his aim is diverted by Lonja, who thus saves her father's life. Paul determines to commit suicide. Meanwhile, Lonja pleads for her lover's life, and in this she is successful. Then leaving her father, she goes in search of Paul, whom she finds about to put a bullet through his brain. Again she prevents loss of life, and entirely repentant, Paul embarks on a new life.

AS A THIEF IN THE NIGHT (Washington—Feb. 1).—John Lee and his wife quarrel. Their home is broken up and John starts for the West. On his way he meets Joseph Smith, an old college friend and attorney. After five years he returns East. The lawyer takes his wife to the theater when Lee breaks his way into his wife's home disguised as a burglar, and thus for the first time he meets his own son. While they are talking his wife returns, and discovering the supposed burglar, tries to telephone for the police. Lee prevents her from 'phoning and she discovers his identity. She hesitates, looks from her husband to her boy and her love for the latter breaches the wide gap between herself and the man she had once loved.

THE RUNAWAY SLAVE (Belmar—Jan. 29).—This film shows the escape of a Negro slave from a cruel master, and ends much like Uncle Tom's Cabin.

THE FIREMAN'S DAUGHTER (Hepwix, Jan 29).—Myrtle is the daughter of old Sam Chippen, one of the oldest members of the London fire department. John Jason was a married man and the captain of Sam's company. But Jason had few scruples and when he tried to take advantage of pretty Myrtle, Sam interferred and struck his superior, for which he was thrown out of the department. Then Jason's house caught on fire and his children were in danger. But Myrtle saw the blaze, gave the alarm and rescued the children. She was given a medal for her deed and her father won back his old position.

THE BOY TRAMP OUT WEST (Oklahoma).—Benny decided to go out West and fight Indians. He was abused by a railroad guard when trying to "beat" his way and thus he met his friend, Bill. He befriended Benny and later Benny returned the favor and prevented Bill from committing a robbery, and thus Benny was adopted by a ranchman and Bill found a home.

LITTLE TOM'S LETTER (Clarendon—Feb. 2).—Little Tom had been away to boarding school and the first thing he did when he got back was to get his big brother Jim to write Mabel and tell her. Edward, Mabel's lover, found the letter addressed to his sweetheart and signed, "Tom." An awful mess resulted and finally an open break occurred between the lovers until it was all explained by Jim.

THE MAN MONKEY (Cricks & Martin—Feb. 2).—This film shows the effect of monkey nuts. They turn a man into a monkey and make him do apelike stunts.

A SEASIDE INTRODUCTION (Hepwix—Jan. 29).—At Brighton in England strolled a society miss. Along the sands she wandered, until off came her shoes and stockings. Along came a "Johnny" and after they had paddled in together, he stole her shoes. Another came by, learned her plight and hastened down the beach and stole a pair of shoes from another woman. But her escort and "friend-husband" happened along and the other fellow came near meeting his Waterloo. There being naught left, he removed his own footgear and the fair miss slipped the big shoes on her bare footsies and made for home. And thus did their friendship begin, and now they live happily ever after, we hope.

PORTS OF THE CASPIAN SEA (Comerio—Feb. 4).—Along the Russian border, between the continents of Asia and Europe, lies the Caspian Sea. Its ports show the meeting between the races of the East and the West. In this film we see Petrovosk, Geok Trepee, Hasabeth, Kravodnosk and a few minor towns and villages. You see camel caravans. You also see a railroad station with a queer equipment of trains and engines. You see ancient marts, coast views, harbors, boats, etc.

THE STAGE STRUCK CARPENTER (Clarendon—Jan. 29).—Bill 'Awkins is a stage carpenter. Bill always wanted to act. One day the leading man was taken sick and Bill was given twenty-four hours in which to learn the part. How Bill tried to learn the lines and how it gave him a marvelous nightmare, could not be more cleverly told than in this photocomedy.

NATIONAL CHRONICLE (National).—In this National Chronicle, No. 1, we have first a view of the Emperor and Empress of India (King George V and his Queen) when they landed at Bombay previous to the late Durbar. We then see the Emperor presenting colors to six regiments on the Durbar field. Next we are privileged to witness the finale of the Durbar polo tournament, in which the Enniskennings won from the Dragoon Guards. We then see the Royal pair showing themselves to the populace on the walls of old Delhi, both robed in the coronation regalia. Following comes a review of 50,000 soldiers, including cavalry, infantry, artillery, etc. A steeplechase race is next caught. Then we journey to the coast of North Africa, and there we see the "S. S. Delhi" of the Pacific and Oriental Line, on which the Royal party journeyed to the Durbar, being wrecked en route. A rugby game of football between a French team and an Irish team closes the events, supplemented by a fashionable exhibition, in which beautiful women display the latest modes in women's apparel.

THE HEAT WAVES (Hepwix—Feb. 1).—Smith feels the heat most horribly. He spies a milk cart, and 'neath the cool downpour of the spout he bathes his fetted brow. He places ice cream on his head, climbs into an ice-chest, into a water tank, takes the water intended for hogs in a pasture, drinks copious draughts of stout and at last explodes into vapors because of the act.

A FIGHT WITH A FIRE (Hepwix—Feb. 1).—A mother leaves her children at home while she takes her husband his noon meal. The children upset a screen; it falls into the fireplace and the house is soon ablaze. The Fire Department rushes to the house, starts the hose going, and when the baby is missed the sister goes bravely to its rescue, taking it down the ladder from a window assisted by a fireman.

A BLAZE ON THE SEA (Savoy—Feb. 3).—Allegro wanted his daughter Rosa to wed his friend Piedro, as old as himself. The wedding was not a merry one, for Rosa had a sweetheart who had gone to sea. After her marriage her sweetheart came home and was met at the dock by none other than her husband, who it turned out was his own father. They loved more deeply than ever, and on being discovered one evening, Piedro took his wife to the ship, put out to sea, lashed her to a mast and set fire to the vessel. Thus did they both perish.

DOLLY'S BIRTHDAY PRESENT (Clarendon—Jan. 31).—Dolly found a man beating an old horse. Dolly made him stop, and furthermore made her papa buy the horse. The poor beast was such an awful looking specimen that the stable man hated to attend to him, and little Dolly did it herself. One day the pony ran away with her. But her old comrade was grateful for all she had done, and he made off after the little cart. On and on they ran like mad, until they came to a pond, and the pony, out of sorts, plunged into the waters and drowned. The cart began to sink and Dolly would have perished too had not the old horse kept on. Into the lake he swam, right out to Dolly and she climbed onto his broad back and the old horse took her back to land and home.

PIK-NIK DINES (Acquila—Feb. 2).—Pik-Nik starts forth to dine with the wife of another man and while just beginning to partake of the dinner at her home he is rudely interrupted by the entrance of her husband. There is a fine hubbub, a long and funny chase. Pik-Nik succeeds in catching hubby and his comrades in a trap and then he hastens back to the home and enjoys his meal in peace.

A SPORTING OFFER (Clarendon—Jan. 29).—Sir Henry could not bear Charlie Lovelorn, for he was persona-non-grata about the place. Then the young man got into Sir Henry's debt. Sir Henry offered to cancel it on condition that Charlie would wed the first woman he met who would have him. He accepted the challenge and his sweetheart on learning of the plight of her lover disguised herself as an old hag. After meeting several women, all of whom turned him down, Charlie met the hag, and was accepted. He soon learned that it was his sweetheart, and her daddy was surprised at the trick played upon him.

HIS DUTY (Deutsches Biograph—Jan. 30).—A old German sea captain has an inebriated so At sea the old man had him placed in irons. Th son breaks his bonds and sets fire to the shi He is caught and the old captain, whose word law at sea, orders him to shoot himself, which l does.

THE ROMANTIC ISLE OF RUEGE (Deutsche Biograph—Jan. 30).—First we are given a view (a steamer passing along and then we see the sho of the Isle from the ship and see Binz, one of t principal towns. Sassnetz, Steubenkammer, ar Hertha Lake are among the other points of i terest shown.

THE SECOND SHOT (Deutsches Biograph-Feb. 3).—In this photodrama a lover's quarrel depicted, jealousy of one man over a woman cau ing the breach between him and his rival. Th decide on a pistol duel, one man to fire the fir shot and the other to fire the second shot, if t first misses. The first shot was fired, but t rival decided to wait until some future time to fi his. And thus the years went by, and each ti he met his adversary he tried to get up coura to fire the shot, but could not. Then he want to give him another chance and he let him take second shot at him, this occurring after the oth had married and had a child. But again the sh went wide of the mark and on the entrance of t wife, the quarrel ended where it was and th the second shot was never fired.

SAXON BOHEMIAN MOUNTAINS (Messter). The Elbe River is something like the Rhine, f on its banks are many castles of old and its sid are lined with steep mountains. It is navigab the greater part of its length and here in th film the modern and the ancient meet in the sho ing of the steam dredges at work digging out t channels. Steamers of queer type ply up and dow its course.

FRIGHTENED FREDDY (Clarendon—Jan. 31). A burglar enters a house. Freddy, a policeman, sent to capture him. He holds up a girl in h "nightie." Freddy follows up the ladder and in the room, and when the other girls come and h up the burglar Freddy falls out of the window top of the miscreant. Then the police arrive a Freddy is congratulated for having made the captu

CARDINAL FARLEY IN NEW YORK (Fe eral).—This film shows the landing of Cardi Farley at the Battery, the drive up to the cat dral with several near views of His Eminen many views of the crowds and the other dignitari and a night view of the cathedral with its 50,0 electric lights outlining the big edifice.

SCRATCH WHERE IT BITES YOU (Meisters Feb. 4).—As the count finished dressing he play with his pet collie dog. The count arrived at t palatial home. Then he felt a creepy sensati Fido had given up one of his live little board and it was making itself known to the cou It drove him from the dinner table, from t house, got him into many a mess and not un his arrival home did he find and destroy the ca of it all.

SMITH EATS SALT HERRING (Meisters—F 4).—Smith had a craving for salt herrings and stopped on the way home and partook of sever Then came the natural result—thirst! He star in to drink all the water he came upon. Beer copious draughts did no good. Kerosene and troleum and the fire department had to be cal out. A bathtub of water, a fish aquarium, a what not!

THE MAJESTIC

Comedy pictures are the cleanest, most wholesome, good, hearty, laugh compelling pictures now being produced, and in response to the many complimentary letters and requests for more comedies received from exhibitors throughout the country, we will release

3 Majestic Comedies Next Week

FRIDAY, FEBRUARY 2nd---A SPLIT COMEDY REEL

"An Old Lady of Twenty"

A dainty bit of sentiment that mingles laughs and rose leaves and the scent of lavender in enticing and bewildering fashion.

Approx. 630 feet.

"Lucky Man"

A whimsical conceit which satirizes cleverly a feminine weakness for the attributes of masculinity.

Approx. 335 feet.

SUNDAY, FEBRUARY 4th

"A Game for Two"

A society comedy drama taking the sex problem as a basis and working out in a series of clever comedy scenes that makes it almost farcical, and yet throughout the characters are involved in a dramatic situation that is ever liable to plunge them into tragedy. Approx. 990 feet.

FRIDAY, FEBRUARY 9th	"Honor Thy Father"	DRAMATIC
SUNDAY, FEBRUARY 11th	"Arresting Father"	COMEDY

The Majestic is Sincere in its determination to give the exhibitors the class of pictures that will prove to be the best money-making pictures in the market, and all we ask in return is that they make it an imperative point to see that their exchanges provide them with

THE PERFECTION CONCAVE SCREEN.

We make this Broad Assertion that if you have a short throw from a high elevation, you can not secure a uniform picture without a concave screen.

You produce "big-footed, pin-headed" actors, tapering buildings, and incongruous fitful pictures all through: Why do it? It costs no more to secure the best results that money can buy, by using with which it is impossible to produce any other kind of picture than one which must be symmetrical, uniform, clear and expressive. BE A BOOSTER ROOSTER

"PERFECTION CONCAVE SCREENS"

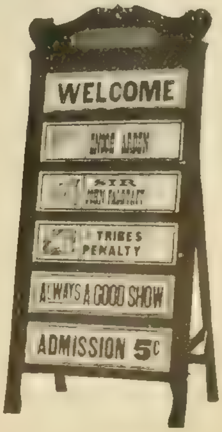
Do you know there's lots of exhibitors
Sittin' round in every town,
Growlin' like a broody chicken,
Knockin' every good thing down?
Don't you be that kind o' cattle,
'Cause there ain't no use on earth,
You just be a booster rooster,
Crow and boost for all you're worth.
If your show needs boostin', boost 'er,
Don't hold back and wait to see
If some other feller's willin'—
Sail right in, this country's free;
No one's got a mortgage on it,
It is yours as much as his,
If your show is shy on business
You get in the boostin' biz.

If things don't jest seem to suit you,
And the worl' seems kinder wrong,
What's the matter with a boostin'
Just to help the thing along?
'Cause if things should stop again,
We'd be in a sorry plight,
You just keep that horn a-blowin'
Boost 'er up with all your might.
If you see we've got the right thing
For to make your business go,
Send us in your order promptly
That's a cue to let us know
That you're not going to knock it,
Just because it ain't your shout,
But you're goin' to boost a little,
'Cause we've got the best thing out.



VE WILL FURNISH YOU WITH ALL BACK POSTERS (36 PER WEEK) FOR $1.00 PER WEEK.

Which Would YOU Rather Pay?

This man is on a 220 volt circuit and as his moving picture lamp only requires 35 volts at the arc, he formerly used a rheostat to reduce the voltage. In this way he paid for about 3 times as much "juice" as he actually needed.

Then he figured he needed this money more than the Lighting Company and he bought a

FORT WAYNE COMPENSARC

Now he gets a clearer, whiter, more intense unflickering light and his bills are only about 1 3 what they were before. The machine has three adjustments and the circuit can not break for even an instant in passing from one to another. No delays, no bother, no waste, no danger, no heat.

Send today for our 22 page booklet "Compensarc vs. Rheostat." It tells you how you can get a much better light at 1 3 your present cost.

Gentlemen:

Replying to yours of recent date asking me to give my opinion upon the machine that I am using in my De Luxe presentations, I respectfully submit the following:

I selected your Machine, the "Motiograph", in preference to the others, because I found the principle therein envolved answered my purpose better than any other machine on the market and I have never regretted for one instant my choice. I am not in the habit of giving any testimonials to anyone, but if this will do you any good, you may use same.

It may interest you to know, that during the recent agitation against Motion Picture Theatres of Minneapolis, I made every conceivable fire test in the presence of the officials with the most satisfactory results. It was impossilbe to burn more of the film than that which covered the aperture plate. I then took a piece of the film and protruded same from upper magazine; I lighted it with a match; it burned to first roller and there withered and died not injuring or effecting the film beyond that point. The same test was conducted with the lower magazine and several other tests of an equally satisfactory nature were all made with the result that the officials of the Fire Dept. in the city, were very high in their praise of the instruments which I use.

Respectfully yours,
Rothapfel

ARRIVING IN THE WEST

DODGING THE SHERIFF

Refused the payment of his debts unless he marry, Bobby Trevor quits his uncle's luxurious London home to seek his own fortune in Western America. A fight in the town saloon culminates in a shooting affair, and Bobby, fearing that he may be implicated, flees with the guilty ones. Soon a placard is posted offering a reward of $1,000 for the finding of Bobby Trevor, and a wild time he has evading the Sheriff. But when at last he is led to the Sheriff, by a fair captor, it transpires that he is only wanted to inherit his late uncle's entire fortune.

BETTER THAN "THE TWELFTH JUROR"

"THE SILENT WITNESS"

is our latest and best "mystery sensation," AND YOU KNOW HOW STRONG EVEN OUR MOST ORDINARY "MYSTERY SENSATION" IS. When we call this better than "The Twelfth Juror" it must be SOME film! SOME feature! SOME money-getter! It's as sure-fire as the day is long—we ask you to send us a "kick" if it's not all we claim it to be.

RELEASED FRIDAY, FEB. 16
ENGAGE HIS SERVICES TO-DAY

"SURELOCK JONES, DETECTIVE"

is the slickest laugh proposition that you ever booked into an appreciative "house." Laugh! Laugh! Laugh! —that's all your house will do. Roar! roar! roar! Smile! smile! smile! Scream! scream! scream! Here is the very funniest detective ever seen on a film, or on a stage for that matter, and you MUST let your patrons meet him.

BERLIN, Wednesday.—An incombustible cinematograph film, which will lessen the possibility of panic in moving picture theatres, was demonstrated recently before the Berlin Chemical Society, and is now reported to be a success. The invention is greeted with enthusiasm in Berlin, where several panics have occurred at film shows, the latest of which happened yesterday, passing off fortunately without loss of life.

LUBIN FILMS

RELEASED WEDNESDAY, FEBRUARY 7th, 1912

Tricked Into Happiness

Dick Walton, by an accident in the machine-shop, is struck in the head and deprived of his eyesight. His sweetheart, Mildred Mason, writes him a letter saying that she cannot marry a blind man, and elopes with Will Emmet, who has been Dick's rival. Mildred's sister, Jane, fears that the fact will be too heavy a blow for the unfortunate man, so she impersonates Mildred and marries him. Dick, however, recovers his eyesight just as Mildred returns, having found to her sorrow that her husband was unworthy. Explanation proves to Dick that all is for the best, and he is made happy.

RELEASED THURSDAY, FEBRUARY 8th, 1912
Length about 1000 feet

What Fate Ordained

Tom Scott, by a freak of circumstances, loses his fortune, and consequently tells his sweetheart that it is impossible for him to marry her. The little girl is angry at the idea that she would marry for money, but accepts the attentions of a rich old man; finally the true lovers come to their better senses, and love triumphs.

RELEASED SATURDAY, FEBRUARY 10th, 1912
Length about 1000 feet

An Antique Ring

Joseph Simpson and Jim Dixon are rivals in the election for coming governor. Dixon and his party bribe Simpson's confidential clerk, Matthews, to invent a social scandal which, with the co-operation of the office stenographer, comes pretty near wrecking Simpson's political chances and his family happiness. The plot, however, is nipped in time, and the worthy candidate is exonerated.

RELEASED MONDAY, FEBRUARY 12th, 1912

'Tis An ill Wind That Blows No Good

Roger Pierce, tired of society life, goes out into the world and takes a job as a workman. He marries the daughter of the gate watchman without informing her of his social position. After awhile he takes her to his parents' home, where she is treated so coldly that she runs away and lives in seclusion and poverty. The poor lodging house takes fire, and after four years the husband arrives just in time to rescue his wife and child.

"THE LAW OR THE LADY."
MONDAY, FEBRUARY 5th.

The question, to obey the law or the lady, confronts a young judge. He decides to honor the law and fulfill the obligation of his office. The lady honors him for his integrity, and marries him.

Costello

2 ON 1 { UMBRELLAS TO MEND. "IDEAL, THE DIVER." } 2 ON 1
TUESDAY FEBRUARY 6th.

Bunny

Two sure things—the first a comedy with "Bunny" in the lead and Flora Finch a strong support. It's a case of laugh, either way you take it. The second is "Ideal," the beautiful mermaid, in her phenomenal diving and deep water swimming, that would make a fish, or Old Neptune, look green with envy.

THE PICTURE WRITER.
WEDNESDAY FEBRUARY 7th.

A young Indian, ignored in life by his tribe, is honored in death by his despisers, as a self-sacrificing and noble hero, glad to number him among the bravest of all the brave.

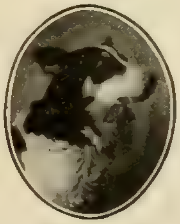
Miss Case

HER BOY.
FRIDAY FEBRUARY 9th.

Mrs. Maurice

A mountain mother would rather see her boy dead than dishonored by the law. The strange stoicism and ethics of the exiled mountaineers.

PLAYMATES.
SATURDAY FEBRUARY 10th.



"Jean" Dog

The boy and his dog are great friends; the faithful animal stands by his little master and playmate. They are inseparable through health and sickness. A pretty story that appeals to the heart.

TRADE MARK

Thomas A Edison

In what other business can you start with such small capital, such a small pay-roll and such great promise of big returns as the moving picture business offers?

TRADE MARK

Thomas A Edison

Success and big profits await every good motion picture show that opens. Short-sighted exhibitors who try to economize by starting with a cheap machine are the ones who fail.

Start with the best machine first —get and build for the future as well as for the present. The Edison Kinetoscope, projecting the clearest, steadiest pictures, without flicker, long pauses or dead stops, builds up a permanent, night-after-night patronage that keeps the profits coming home. Besides, the Edison is the simplest and most economical to operate—you don't throw away a big percentage of your income on repairs—and it will outlast any other motion picture machine made. Write us to-day for complete information and copy of the Edison Kinetogram.

CAST.

Thompson, Keeper of a Small Confectionery Shop	Marc McDermott
His Wife	Mrs. Wm. Bechtel
Nora, His Daughter	Gertrude McCoy
Harry Valentine, a Theatrical Star	Robert Conness

A father who leaves home on account of his nagging wife, secures a position as head waiter in a restaurant. His daughter follows suit a few years later and is accidentally taken there to dine by a theatrical star. She is recognized by her father in time to prevent a false marriage, and a happy family reunion follows.

"Hogan's Alley" WEDNESDAY, FEBRUARY 14th

CAST.

His Wife	Alice Washburn
Mikey, Their Son	Yale Boss
Mr. Schmidtburger	Harry Eytinge
His Wife	Louise Crolius
Fritzy, Their Son	Philip Tannura
The Policeman	Bigelow Cooper

Habitues of Hogan's Alley

This picture, constructed for laughing purposes only, tells of a battle royal between a Dutch and Irish family who came to blows from a fight originating between their boys over a disputed marble. In the bedlam of excitement the boys are found eating the same apple, and the dumb-founded parents see the folly of their conflict.

"At the Point of the Sword" FRIDAY, FEBRUARY 16th

(By Emmett Campbell Hall.)

CAST.

Francois de Villary, an Outlaw	William Randall

Gaston, in Love With Editha	Benjamin F. Wilson
The Suitor Selected by Editha's Father	Richard Neill
The Priest	James Gordon
A Retainer	Charles Sutton
A Sentry	Guy Hedlund
Editha's Maid	Jessie McAllister

A drama of romance and chivalry depicting the adventures of an outlaw who in gratitude aided a lady fair with her true love. After a furious combat with her heartless father, her lover arrived with aid and the marriage ceremony was performed at the point of the sword. Full of the spirit of the times.

"Curing the Office Boy" SATURDAY, FEBRUARY 17th

(On one Reel.)

CAST.

The Office Boy	Yale Boss
His Boss	James Gordon
Stenographers	Gertrude McCoy Bessie Learn Clara Adams Grace Morrissey

A short, bright comedy showing the tricks that a number of mischievous stenographers put on the sleepy office boy and how it worked out. Delightfully refreshing.

"The Little Delicatessen Store"

CAST.

Mr. Swissburger	William Wadsworth
Mrs. Swissburger	Mrs. Frances Hulette
Their Daughter Lena	Jeanie McPherson
Jakie Schmidt, The Errand Boy	Edward Boulden
Customers	Alice Washburn Yale Boss

Another comedy of types dealing with Mr. and Mrs. Swissburger, their daughter Lena, and the errand boy Jakie Schmidt. Good, wholesome fun and plenty of it.

Facts and Comments

ARBITRARY tactics of corporations supplying electricity are nothing new, and many an exhibitor has suffered from the high-handed methods of these gentry. Exhibitors in Atlanta, Ga., seem to have fallen upon particularly evil days in this respect. It appears that they are required to make deposits of from twenty-five to one hundred dollars, and that the least delay in making weekly settlements is followed by a turning off of the current. There is a movement on foot in Atlanta to have the present private monopoly, known as the Georgia Railway and Electric Company, superseded by the establishment of a municipal power plant, and the city electrician of Atlanta, who is a believer in municipal ownership of public utilities, after a thorough investigation of conditions, says that the monopoly treats the moving picture men as if they "were fakers and mountebanks," when as a matter of fact they have "over $200,000 invested in photoplay houses alone in Atlanta and are men of established credit." In furtherance of his argument favoring municipal control of electricity, the city electrician draws a most interesting comparison between Atlanta and Pasadena, California, where the city supplies the electric current. In Atlanta, with a population of 160,000, the rate is per Kilowatt hour, ten cents; in Pasadena, with a population of 34,000, the rate is five cents. There is no doubt that in the vast majority of cases municipal ownership of electric power would work to the distinct advantage of exhibitors.

THE grievances of scenario writers have reached an acute stage. These grievances are ably voiced in a letter which is printed on another page of THE MOVING PICTURE WORLD, and which, we have no doubt, will be read with the deepest interest by all of the craft. Much of what the author writes is only too true. It is one of the mysteries of the business that the most important labor is shockingly underpaid. We would laugh at the builder who would pay more to the hod-carrier than to the architect, and yet that is just the policy pursued by some film-makers, among them, we grieve to say, companies of high reputation. The price of the lunch served gratuitously to actors who are employed on an outdoor production greatly exceeds as a rule the miserly stipend allowed to the man "who gives to airy nothing a local habitation and a name." There cannot be any lasting and appreciable improvement in the quality of the pictures; there can be nothing like a well-sustained average of merit, without good scenarios, and there cannot be any good scenarios without a decent price. The proposed minimum price of sixty dollars is surely not excessive; it represents about five per cent. of the cost of an ordinary production.

The big companies, it seems, would consult their own best interests by paying good prices. A clever and capable scenario writer will always prefer a large concern with an established reputation and the most facilities. The scenario writer takes a just and natural pride in his work and wants to have the most made of his idea. There is a great pleasure in seeing a perfect rendering of one's ideas by capable directors and actors. Such a pleasure is quite apart from the question of dollars and cents, and has often consoled the author for the meanness of his compensation. If the old-established companies with their magnificent resources will not pay fair prices, the scenario writer is compelled to submit his product to some concern of lesser merit. The result in too many cases is unsatisfactory to the playwright, though the minor company may pay the better price. It certainly would be a splendid idea to blacklist those companies who are notoriously stingy. If a scenario is not worth more than five or ten dollars, its proper place is the waste-basket.

IN some countries in Europe the censoring authorities have gone mad, and are vieing with each other in rendering absurd decisions. The censor board of Stockholm, Sweden, has just put its ban on a feature reel entitled "The Great Moment." The central idea of this play is the heroic sacrifice of a mother to save her own child from death by fire. The censors forbade its being shown in Sweden on the ground that the child which is saved is not the legitimate offspring of the mother. These strictures came after the film had been approved by the authorities of almost every country of Northern Europe. The preposterous decision of the board has evoked such a storm of protests in Sweden that the board has called three special censors into consultation, and it is expected that a new decision, reversing the former one, will shortly follow.

ON another page we print in full the text of the decision of the Supreme Court in the case of The Greater New York Film Rental Company again the Motion Picture Patents Company. The plaintiff the case had entered into an agreement with the defen ant, whereby the defendant was empowered to revoke the defendant's license upon two weeks' notice. The canc lation of the license was of course tantamount to the d struction of defendant's business. When the defenda attempted to enforce its rights under the original agre ment the plaintiff asked for a temporary injunction, r straining the defendant from exercising its rights und the agreement. The matter came on for argument befo Justice Bijur at Special Term of the Supreme Court. Tl Court was asked to issue a temporary injunction pendi the determination of an action for a permanent injun tion. Justice Bijur held the matter under advisement f about a month and has now handed down a decision den ing the prayer for a permanent injunction with cos against the plaintiff. In his decision the learned justi does not enter into any of the points raised by counsel f the plaintiff touching "monopolistic tendencies." H holds to the plain fact that there was a voluntary agre ment between two parties legally competent to enter int an agreement, and he cannot, he says, on a motion for permanent injunction, relieve the plaintiff of its oblig tions and liabilities contained in the agreement. Inc dentally we may say that THE MOVING PICTURE WORL with its old-fashioned ethics of journalism, does not b lieve in printing merely the speeches of hired counsel, b when it comes to recording the important thing, the d cision of the court, it will be found at its post of duty.

Studio Saunterings.

By Louis Reeves Harrison.

WHILE visiting the Rex studio the other day my attention was drawn to the difficulty of reconciling the varied though not necessarily antagnistic elements in the production of successful photolays by a remark made by Joe Engel. It was offered in unkind spirit, was a frank expression of honest opinn; but, for all that, it was just in truth and intention. I ink it came from misapprehension. Mr. Engel said that was opposed to accepting scenarios from playwrights account of their connection with a photoplay periodical. He is absolutely right. A play should be accepted or jected on its merits when it comes from an individual nnected with a publication, and this applies equally to ose associated with studios, as actors and directors, or some other salaried capacity. A photodrama is, in fact, t worth producing unless it has intrinsic merit irreective of any influence brought to bear in its favor.

Now Joe Engel is an enthusiast in his business; he beeves in it, lives in it heart and soul, but I am going to ke him by the arm and call his attention to something. hen the week is over, when its work and anxieties are t behind by those participating in them, a double satisction ensues. First there is the gratification of someing creditable accomplished. Second, the reward is re and immediately forthcoming. Leading him away om the scene of studio activities, I will pilot him into other sort of experience.

A successful play is a rare one. Its starting point is hat is called an inspiration. There are thousands of otoplays produced every year, and, in order to conuct a new one, the author must depend upon the faculty the imagination for his own starting point. The agination has its limitations. It has always seemed to that it depends largely upon experience, and there a lot of preliminary simmering necessary before an thor gets his ideas into shape. The hardest study of subject is done before a word is written, and its crude rm is the product of what might be called creative agination.

Now the author seats himself before the blank page and constructive imagination is set going, with results ually unsatisfactory. He may see the play from beginng to end, but its arrangement for acting, so that its l effect will be impressed on the audience, is not easily omplished. There are a dozen ways of presenting it. hich will be most effective? It may require days of nstruction and reconstruction before a finished result forthcoming. All this cannot be conveyed in scenario m, but that is the required form and the author makes rough draft followed by the brief one usually subtted.

Does the author go to a desk and get a pay envelope? s he any assurance that he will ever receive a penny his labor? He takes his bare skeleton down to the dio, or mails it, with full knowledge that it will not vey his meaning unless the one who reads it can put nself into the author's place, assume his point of view l study the subject with his profound interest in it. is is a good deal to expect, and I doubt if one in a ndred scenarios convey from the playwright's mind to t of the director the full meaning of the play as originly devised. The usual result is a rejected manuscript l a discouraged author, who turns to some field where can get returns.

hen Joe Engel took me by the arm and led me down where playwright Taylor was rehearsing a photodrama with charming Miss Leonard as a central figure, the outspoken statement of Mr. Taylor was, "We want fine plays." There is no doubt about it. I believe that live wires in the producing business are after the best the market affords and I know that audiences will have to have them or interest in this form of entertainment will lapse until the photoplay becomes a cheap sideshow in variety performances, a mere entre acte.

For the past two years I have been trying to bring about the best possible relations between producers, who are sure of handsome weekly returns for the present, and those who work hard for small compensation obtained at a risk—the photo playwrights—to the end that the business shall not be a get-rich-quick and short-lived fad, but a well-established fine art, steadily growing in popular favor. I have written on the subject with full realization that the finished play fails often because it is a complete product. The novelist commands his own medium of expression, but he who would tell a good story on the screen must combine with others, and they very often improve on his conception through the skill of setting and presenting his idea. Quite as often an erroneous interpretation results in failure, but failure is assured unless the play itself is well worth the time, labor and money expended on its production. Are all the plays worth while? Is it not true that most of them are not? What is the reason?

The studio playwright has the fairest sort of trial in the world because he is given ample opportunity to demonstrate his competency. That competency is not determined by a "write up," and the output from one source, whether fairly good or mediocre, is very apt to become monotonous to picture show audiences. Any newspaper writer who makes a broad effort to bring about finer understanding between producers and original playwrights who dare place their product in the open market, has the larger interests of the business at heart, though his motives may easily be misinterpreted.

Every bright, original or strong photodrama that has emanated from outside playwrights has put tens of thousands of dollars into the pockets of producers and exhibitors, while the amount paid for the scenario has seemed to me to be out of all proportion to the work and ability involved. No newspaper man can make it or unmake it, and I would advise shutting out any newspaper writer who attempted to sell his script by other influence than that which any dramatist should have the privilege of using—that of explaining the merit of what he has to offer. The scenario is a bare skeleton. It does not tell the story as an author would write it, nor does it give any idea of the work preceding its formulation. It is little more than a homely little seed, which must be planted and developed to blossom forth in full flowering, and it is not the easiest thing in the world for a director to determine whether it will be a flower or a weed.

The simplest way to get good photodramas is to make a business of getting them. Put the matter of selection into competent hands and play no favorites. The question of quality is of larger importance than the reputation of this or that company; it is a question involving the survival of what is thrown on the screen as a form of popular entertainment. Many exhibitors who have succeeded are building larger theaters, but not to exhibit photoplays. Why? Think it over. We must unite in effort and that is what I have been consistently advocating in these columns.

The Average Patron.

By William H. Kitchell.

DO you know him, Mr. Manufacturer? You think you do. Enough said. If you are well enough acquainted with Mr. Average Patron to understand his likes and dislikes in photoplays, and the why, and are trying to keep his patronage by catering to his taste, you are of the elect and need read no further. Otherwise, it is otherwise.

There are manufacturers and manufacturers. To the latter category belong the class who turn out the films that Mr. Average Patron goes to see. For Mr. A. P. understands the distinction. There are manufacturers who do not. If you are of the latter type, you do not know why Mr. A. P. grunts with disgust when one of your much-advertised titles appears on the screen, and why he is so overcome with surprise if the story happens to be a live one that he exits immediately after the love-tableaux, and takes to drink. He would, anyhow. You are releasing films several times a month the sight of which would change the president of the Young Men's Christian Temperance Union into a habitual "souse." If for this reason only, you deserve elimination.

But there is hope for you.

If you have never done so, Mr. Manufacturer of Junk, take a week from the studio and go from one photoplay theater to another, and try honestly to get into the mind, so to speak, of the gentleman aforesaid whose nickles and dimes supplied you with the mahogany roll-top and the 1912 model motor car. You will get results, and it will pay in dollars.

Of course, Mr. Average Patron has an elusive personality. In "select" neighborhoods he may even have a liking for cowboy plays and low-comedy. At a certain theater in the tenement district of New York he is said to prefer three-reel dramas and "costume stuff." But these are unsafe leads. In the average neighborhood—which includes anywhere from Fort Yukon to Key West—Mr. A. P. is the plain man of common sense who earns money six days in the week and spends some of the surplus at a photoplay theater when he is so inclined, or his wife will allow the extravagance.

Some manufacturers appear to imagine that Mr. A. P. is either an unwashed barbarian incapable of either education or refinement, or else a long-haired scientist who is a composite expert on handwriting, mind-reading and art, which he may be, but not at a picture show. When Mr. A. P. cares to make a study of illegible handwriting, or meaningless drama, or artistic "posing," he can indulge his hobby elsewhere. At a photoplay theater he expects to be interested or amused—preferably both. There is a golden mean between ignorance and omniscience, and Mr. A. P. has attained it. Some manufacturers would do well to go and do likewise.

It is not difficult to look into the psychology of Mr. Average Patron. He—the A. P. of to-day, and not yesterday—has traveled a little, and read and thought a good deal more; and he is not to be deluded inside with impossible lithographs illustrating miracles in melodrama. He will know if you are "stringing" him with the revamped story of a story you revamped for his benefit only six months ago, and he will resent the imposition. Moreover, if you show him a daily run of four reels, with the "first run" a conventional yarn with an unhappy ending, two others without titles and patched beyond recognition, and the other a "commercial" a year old—he will not only resent the imposition, but he will lay the blame where it belongs, upon the manufacturer whose trade mark he recognizes upon the leader or tail-piece. The Exchange Man does not enter into the proposition, because Mr. Average Patron has a hazy impression as to the middleman in the film industry. But he knows who makes the films.

And being a traveled man and a reader, Mr. A. P. can give more than one producer points upon how to make good films —or, rather, upon how not to make bad ones. An hour in any average picture show will be enough to convince any producer of the fact. Go into one, Mr. Manufacturer, and watch the expression on the face of Mr. Average Patron while one of your films is being shown. Above all, listen to his comment as he whispers to Mrs. A. P., or a friend, his opinion as to what is going on upon the screen. If you have mis-spelled a word in a leader, he knows it. If you have given a Roman emperor a toga of yellow, and robed a contemporary beggar in a gown of purple (as was perpetrated in a recent colored release), he will be able to inform you that at the epoch pictured nobody except the emperor was allowed to wear purple and that the ordinary Roman seldom dyed his shirt. If Mr. A. P. was unaware of the fact, little A. P., Jr., who attends high-school, would be qualified to make good the omission.

And he knows geography, and natural history. You ca not fool him by labeling a leader "Treed by the Wolf" and then show the hero with the lost child in the branch of an apple tree, with a sheep-dog in the foreground wagging his tail and barking frantically at nothing in particula Mr. A. P. knows the difference, and it is the trivial error, i fact or commission, that often shows up strongly to hi In a "Klondyke" story release of last winter, the hero Dawson writes a letter to the States asking his wife to me him at Nome. Now, Nome is far north of the Yukon, an about as convenient a rendezvous in this case as Patagon would have been. And Mr. A. P. has an intimate knowled of Alaska, for his brother lost six toes and the family sa ings in a prospecting venture above the Circle.

Another disturbing trait of Mr. Average Patron is his i stinctive sense of the ludicrous. A much-advertised "fe ture" reel released recently by a prominent producer was pathetic melodrama in which the erring son returns hom not for the fatted calf, but to rob the parental safe. It "g across" finely, with appropriate music by the pianist—un Father came out of his bedroom clad only in a revolver ar a night-shirt! The conclusion was an immense success, b not from the producer's point of view. Even the pianist—who was an A. P.—helped it along by switching fro "Where Is My Wandering Boy To-Night?" into "The Shi that Father Wore," or music to that effect. It is a sho drop from the sublime to the ridiculous, and many manufa turers take the fall frequently to the disgust—and often t delight—of the Average Patron.

There are manufacturers who would consider a day no and then spent with the Average Patron in a photopl theater as wasted time. These are the men who see twen photoplays a year—including their own output—and who a vertise each forthcoming release in superlative metaph that does not even impress the printer. These are the m who, judging humanity by themselves, imagine Mr. Avera Patron to be deficient in brains and everything except t necessary nickel of admission into a moving picture theat

But if this type of producer is not acquainted with M Average Patron, Mr. Average Patron is well acquaint with him; and the day is dawning when Mr. A. P. will d cline to continue the acquaintance.

JOHN BUNNY'S DOUBLE.

The Mt. Vernon, Ill., News prints the following story:

"While down at the lumbermen's convention in Cairo last we E. W. Peters, who is frequently taken for John Bunny, of t Vitagraph Motion Picture Co., lost his hat.

"He went into a hat store to get a new lid, and while in the he heard several of the clerks talking about him, and they call him 'Mr. Bunny.' One, braver than the others, approached M Peters and asked him if he were Mr. Bunny, and Pete bashfu acknowledged that he and Mr. Bunny were one and the same, al that his company had come to Cairo to get some data for a moti picture called 'The Liar.' The news was soon spread about t town and Pete was interviewed by half a dozen newspaper m and had to finally admit that he was just kiddin' the clerks a that they couldn't take a joke."

JUNGLE PHOTOGRAPHY BY THE KEARTONS.

Mr. R. Kearton and his brother, Mr. C. Kearton, both whom are well known to all lovers of natural history, ha succeeded in obtaining some fine films, showing elephan tigers, birds, butterflies, etc., which were photographed East Africa, India, and Borneo. These pictures are n being shown in London and may truly be described as markable. Among the noteworthy are some pictu of the Indian jungle, in which a tiger is to be seen slinki along, ants and other insects in their natural state, and herd of bison in a glade. The pictures taken in Borneo clude a wonderful portrayal of an orang-outang swingi about in the trees.

Tremendous Success of New York Exhibitors' Ball.

LARGEST GATHERING OF MOVING PICTURE PEOPLE EVER KNOWN ENTERTAINED AT A SPLENDID SOCIAL FUNCTION AT THE PALM GARDEN, NEW YORK CITY, JAN. 29.

TRUE to the prophesy in our issue of Jan. 27, the entertainment and ball given by the Motion Picture Exhibitors' Association of Greater New York turned out to be the biggest event of its kind that the film business has ever known. The affair took place at the Palm Garden, 58th Street and Lexington Avenue, New York City, on the night of Monday, January 29th. When things were at their height there were no less than 2,000 people on the floor, which, so far as we know, is the largest gathering of moving picture people that has ever been. All records have been broken and the New York exhibitors stand before the trade to-day as one of the strongest organizations of the kind in the business. All credit and honor is due the loyal workers and the entertainment committee for the splendid manner in which this rousing event was brought to such a signal success. Especial praise should be accorded to Dr. Oscar I. Lamberger, chairman of the entertainment committee, for his indefatigable work for nearly two months in connection with the festivities.

The large crowd was representative of the best element in moving picture circles. To those absentees who expected the affair to be largely a matter of female cigarette smokers and "turkey trotters," it is a pleasure to state that there was not one of them in sight; just a great big gathering of ladies and gentlemen who were able to conduct themselves as such and knew enough to quit when they had enough of ——well, never mind, but "Enough's enough" seemed to be the motto. All hands certainly did have a good time and film men were agreed that it was the biggest thing of the kind that ever happened.

Every branch of the trade was represented: exhibitors, manufacturers, actors, supply men, cameramen, operators, darkroom people, exchangemen and all. Besides these, there were a number of distinguished city officials and theatrical men among the number. Among the ladies were hundreds of charming costumes to grace the occasion and it is possible that if your genial scribe were of the female persuasion, a couple of pages, at least, would be devoted to the detailed description of some of those aesthetic creations. One of the most pleasant features of the evening was the cordiality with which the association members welcomed their guests and made everybody feel at ease from the moment they entered. The entertainment committee and the loyal workers were on the job every minute of the time, looking after the comfort of their large party, and everything went without a hitch. It was like a three-ring circus; something doing all the time and everybody happy.

The evening began with a high class vaudeville entertainment mixed with moving pictures not yet released. No licensed pictures were on the bill, but the independent pictures were given a good showing and won many admirers. The vaudeville numbers were furnished by motion picture players and our old friend Len Spencer introduced the acts as they appeared. The olio consisted of:

1. Overture—"Princess"—Columbia Phonograph Company Orchestra.
2. Eclair Film—"Alcohol."
3. Pete La Mar, Edison Phonograph Yodler and Mimic.
4. Imp Film—"The Worth of a Man."
5. Popular Ballad, "Killarney and You," William Corcoran.
6. Bison Film—"War on the Plains."
7. Song—"The Nightingale," Delphine Warner.
8. National Film—"Lieutenant Ross and the Stolen Battleship."
9. Charles M. Seay, Comedy Entertainer (Edison Co.).
10. Harry Benham (Thanhouser Co.), "Tosca's Goodbye."
11. Leo Herbert White (Powers Co.), Dramatic Recitation, "The Old Light."
12. Thanhouser Film—"As It Was in the Beginning."
13. Little Marie Eline, the Thanhouser Kid, in Recitation. "The Two Marionettes," "Little Orphan Annie."
14. Maurice Costello, of Vitagraph Co. of America, Recitation and Stories.
15. John Bunny, Vitagraph Co. of America, Humorous Monologue.
16. Farce—"The Tables Turned," by Champion Players: Miss Zarah St. Clair, Mrs. Madge Orlemond, Mr. Frank B. Coyne and Mr. Thompson.
17. Champion Film—"For Her Father's Sake."
18. Film Production—"Just a Plain Rehearsal," by the Powers Co. (Powers Players): Jack O'Brien, director; Miss Frichie Powers, Mr. Bud Williams, Mr. Victor Hugo, Mr. Dane Wall, Mr. Ned Sullivan, Mr. M. White, Mr. Leach, Mr. Nicholas, Miss Leach.
19. Introduction of the Officers: Sam Trigger, president; Harry J. Jacobs, vice-president; Sidney Ascher, secretary; Arthur D. Jacobs, treasurer; Dr. Lamberger, Chairman of the Entertainment Committee; H. W. Rosenthal, Chairman of the Reception Committee; Tobias A. Kappler, counsellor.

When the preliminary bouts were over, the decks were cleared for action. The dancing began about 10:30 and at daylight the next morning it was still going on. Fred Hyland's excellent orchestra of fifteen pieces furnished the music until four o'clock, and after they quit the various guests took their turn at the piano and finished out the night. Every guest upon departing assured the committee that they had the time of their lives and wished the Exhibitors' Association every success in the world, and there is no doubt that the exhibitors have made a great impression on the trade.

As special guests of the evening a party of well-known New York office holders were present, including Borough President McAnneny (and son), City Clerk Joseph A. Scully, Comptroller Sohmer, Sheriff Julius Harburger, Samuel Martin, Chief Inspector of the License Bureau; Senator John C. Fitzgerald, Commissioner Robinson of the License Bureau, Commissioner Thompson, Deputy Commissioner Wright, Hon. Timothy D. Sullivan, and the following Aldermen: Levine, Keenealey, Comiskey, Boles, White, Folks, Willett, Pendry, and Alderman Gelbke of Brooklyn.

To give a detailed list of those present would be almost an impossibility, but among those present were many well-known exhibitors and film men other than those mentioned in the lists. Boxes were occupied by the leading film manufacturers and supply people in the trade. Those represented and present were as follows:

Gaumont Film Co.—Mr. Herbert Blache, Mr. Balladur.

Melies Film Co.—Mr. Doré Hoffman.

Reliance Film Co.—Miss Jane Fernley, Miss Gertrude Robinson, Mr. Jas. Kirkwood, Mr. Henry Walthal, Mr. J. C. Graham, Mr. George Terwilliger, Mr. Jas. V. Ritchie.

Sales Co.—Mr. J. E. Brulatour.

Simplex Machine—Mr. Frank Cannock.

Moving Picture World—Hugh F. Hoffman (Sherlocko), Archibald (Watso) MacArthur and H. C. Judson.

One exhibitor came clear from Youngstown, O., just for the occasion, Mr. C. W. Deibel, proprietor of the Dome Theater of that city. That's what we call a "Real Feller." John Bunny was so pleased with his devotion that he made a pal of him and took him where the bullets were flying thickest.

Bernhardt and Rejane.

World's Greatest Actors in Their Greatest Plays Will Be Shown in Pictures.

For several months the daily and the trade press have given brief mention of the fact that the Divine Bernhardt and the versatile Rejane have been induced to give a version of their favorite plays before the moving picture camera. The Moving Picture World is now authorized to make the announcement that the French-American Film Company, Times Building, New York City, will presently release a two-reel production of "Camille," with Bernhardt in the title role, and a three-reel interpretation of "Mme. Sans Gene," with Rejane in the principal part. These pictures are remarkable in more than one respect. They are the product of the famous Society Film D'Art, of Paris, and were enacted before the camera by nearly all the actors and actresses who appeared in the first productions of these respective plays on a French-speaking stage.

Mme. Bernhardt has always regarded her rendition of "Camille" as her best character portrayal. But it was with great difficulty that she was induced to repeat her performance for motion pictures. She did consent, however, and entered into the task with such enthusiasm that it was only with great difficulty that her efforts were made to conform to the limitations of the camera. The result is a remarkable motion picture, through the agency of which thousands will be able to see the world's greatest actress in her favorite roles who have never before witnessed her performance on the speaking stage.

Of Rejane in "Mme. Sans Gene" as much may be said. This subject is in three reels and is equally remarkable with "Camille." Mme. Rejane is less widely known to the American public, having appeared in America but once and that several years ago. A more critical review of these pictures will appear in a later issue of the Moving Picture World.

The rights to exhibit "Camille" and "Mme. Sans Gene" in America have been secured by the French-American Film Company, of which Mr. M. A. Anderson, an old theater manager, is the president. The reels will be offered together to state rights men with a stipulation that they shall form an evening's entertainment and shall be used only in first-class houses. With the possible exception of the well-known Dante pictures this program will form the most pleasing evening's entertainment that has yet been offered to seekers of amusement in this or any other country. Appropriate music has been prepared for these subjects and a fine line of advertising will accompany the pictures. Their appearance will set a new standard in the motion picture exhibition business and give a wonderful impetus to the feature picture in America.

PROJECTION ROOMS IN PARISH HOUSES.

The Rev. E. Boudinot Stockton, who edited the "Odyssey of Homer" for American production by the Monopol Film Co., is a dyed in the wool picture fan and his enthusiasm takes very practical form. He is an ardent advocate of motion pictures in the church lecture room, and two parish houses, now being built for Episcopal churches, will have projection rooms conforming to the newest regulations of the Underwriters as the result of his suggestions. Reversing the usual rule, Dr. Stockton preaches what he practises.

NEWS FROM CANADIAN NORTHWEST.

E. A. Schultz, traveling representative of the Enterprise Optical Manufacturing Co., of Chicago, writes as follows concerning the picture business in northwestern Canada:

"It is really a pleasure to see the Winnipeg of to-day as compared with the city of eighteen months ago, with respect to the picture business. There are at the present time fourteen moving picture houses in Winnipeg. Eight of these houses are using Licensed service, two Independen film service, and the other four are using mixed programs that is to say, part Licensed and part Independent at the same time. I saw here some of the best equipped operating rooms I have seen for some time. The majority of the houses are using mercury arc rectifiers on 220 volts alternating current The operating rooms are nice, large and roomy.

"In speaking of the theaters separately, I called on Mr Rogers, of the Colonial Theater, on Main Street, and while Mr. Rogers' experience in the picture business is limited, I am safe in saying that the Colonial is one of the most up-to-date houses in the country. It has A No. 1 projection. The Colonial Amusement Co. is contemplating building a new house on Portage Avenue. The beautiful Starland Theater, next door, is also enjoying a nice business, and the proprietors of this house are building a new theater in St. Paul, Minn., which is to be finished by the first of February.

"The Bijou was formerly the old Sullivan & Considine vaudeville house, but is now running straight pictures. Bob Scott is the manager, and he puts up a very fine show. In fact the projection in Winnipeg is hard to beat, with one or two exceptions.

"Ed Walker is building a new house in Sault Ste. Marie. It will be named the Orpheum. It will seat 750. Licensed film service will be furnished by the General Film Co., of Detroit. Mr. Walker is installing a 1912 Motiograph machine. Admission will be 10 cents, for a program of three reels and one song.

"There are three other houses in Sault Ste. Marie—the Gaiety, the Bijou, and the Lyceum. The Gaiety is the only house using licensed service, and while the projection was very good in all the houses, it is to be regretted that the films generally were in very poor shape. Notwithstanding this, business seemed to be very good.

"Regina, the capital of Saskatchewan, has four beautiful moving picture parlors, and another house is to be opened in thirty days. Mr. Gordon, manager of the Lux and the Majestic will be the owner and manager of the new house. As Mr. Gordon has considerable experience and knowledge of the business, there is no question that this new house will make good.

"The Moving Picture World is a welcome visitor to each and every house every Tuesday morning, and the Operator's Handbook is also found quite frequently."

AMERICAN PRODUCES WESTERN COMEDIES.

The American Film Mfg. Co., while always appreciating the value of Western comedy, has never before announced so many offerings of a strictly laugh-provoking nature as at present.

The Western studios of the company are deserving of much praise for their success in corralling the elusive laugh, so much sought for and so dangerous from a producing standpoint. As in literature, the true comedy is a jewel and proportionately hard to get. The American, however, has been particularly fortunate in its selections of scenarios, and promises a fine line of Western subjects for the future. "An Assisted Elopement," "From the Four Hundred to the Herd," "Society and Chaps," etc., are, as their titles indicate, essentially Western pictures, but containing that touch of the East which makes a combination highly desirable and difficult to secure.

A notable feature in these releases is the wonderful California backgrounds. With as fine a bit of natural scenery surrounding the studio in La Mesa, Cal., as exists anywhere, the producer has added here and there glimpses of those magnificent winter homes, gardens, etc., that have made Southern California famous as a playground for the rich.

MIRROROIDE SCREENS GIVE SATISFACTION.

A letter from the John H. Genter Company, manufacturers of the "Mirroroide" screen for picture theaters, advises The World that a screen shown in an illustration printed in a recent issue of this paper coming from Mr. Probst, of Durango, Col., was a "Mirroroide," and that Mr. Probst is highly pleased with it. The Genter company have overcome the fault in their screen caused by the seam and report having sold 500 screens, of which number they have had to replace but three. Considering the rough usage in shipping, they consider this a good record.

CHICAGO LETTER.

By Jas. S. McQuade.

I. W. LINN, special representative of Pathe Freres, has sent in his resignation to that firm, to take effect March 1. Mr. Linn regrets keenly the circistances which compel him to take that step, as it severs th cordial business relations which have extended over the pt four and a half years. Constant travel on the road, M Linn finds, has made serious inroads on his health and, fowing the advice of his physician, he has decided to eage in activities that will not require travel.

While connected with Pathe Freres, Mr. Linn was manar of their branch office in Birmingham, Ala., for one year a a half; manager of the New Orleans office for one year; mager of the Chicago office for one year, and special reprentative for the same period. The duties of his last positin have called him to all the important cities of the United Stes and in parts of Canada.

Mr. Linn has not yet decided on the line of business he w follow, but is considering several attractive propositis that have been made him.

Big Boost for Pathe's Weekly.

J. W. Peters, manager of the Hulsey theaters in Galvesto Tex., is rather proud of the support given moving pictus by the Evening Tribune of that city. Whenever any piure subject is worthy of special mention, the Tribune ges it liberal space, as is shown by the following excerpt th gives a boost to Pathe's Weekly, which showed the bning of the Equitable Life building in New York:

That Galvestonians are this week seeing at the Casino Tater actual moving pictures of the great fire which on Ja 9 destroyed the Equitable Life building in New York, eailing a loss of $18,000,000, is certainly a credit to the erprise of the film producers of the country. This fire, wch was fought under the most trying conditions in the hrt of the financial district of the world, with the temperatu below zero and a 60-mile gale of wind blowing, is comple in all its details and speaks much for the enterprise ohe men who handled the camera.

The firemen in action with all the modern fire-fighting eqipment which the metropolis affords, the wind-driven stams of water, the struggling horses and slush-covered stets and the men themselves covered with ice, make thlling scenes, to say nothing of the actual view of flame an smoke as they burst from the doomed skyscraper. Pple in Galveston are witnessing this scene with all its ling reality without the attendant discomfort that was exrienced by the spectators in New York on that date.

This picture is a part of a weekly service that might be w termed a "news service" that a well-known firm of film mers produce. Scenes of live interest from all over the wld are shown as part of this feature every Wednesday an Thursday, and it is safe to say that there are thousands of eople who watch for them, they faithfully portraying the sces of the stories which the Associated Press carried thugh the columns of the newspapers at the time of the ocurrence. As in the above instance, the people of Galveon are seeing the fire before the ruins are cooled."

anager Peters concludes his letter by stating: "This is mely to give you an idea that we Southern people here do not let the grass grow under our feet." If exhibitors in otr cities throughout the country could gain publicity of a e nature when a feature film is run, what a boost it would be or the moving picture industry!

Moving Pictures for Schools.

a recent Sunday issue of the Chicago American-Examin two full pages were devoted to the subject "Why Our Scools Are All Wrong." Articles written by leading educars throughout the country were employed to show the dects of the system at present prevailing, and suggestions fo remedying them.

n article under the heading "The Beginning of the New Ecation" concluded as follows:

nother sign of progress on the educational horizon is th adaptation of the moving picture to the uses of the tener.

Moving pictures have long since taken a firm hold on th popular mind. There are a number of reasons for this,—, th vivid realism with which they portray both tragedy and comedy, the large amount of action which they compress into a brief period of time, and their small cost to the public.

"That wonder is the mother of learning is an axiom with all progressive educators, and this fact leads to the belief that results of far-reaching importance will follow the introduction of the moving picture machine into the schoolroom.

"Already the cinematograph is being used with marked success in medical schools to portray the mode of procedure in difficult operations. The National Society for the Prevention of Tuberculosis has prepared a series of films showing the dangers of the Great White Plague and how they may best be avoided."

A Magazine for Patrons of Independent Pictures.

E. J. Ryan, of the Photoplay Magazine, a Chicago publication copyrighted by the Photoplay Magazine Publishing Co., and designed especially for Independent manufacturers and exhibitors, and their patrons, returned recently from a visit to New York. While in the metropolis, Mr. Ryan called on Independent manufacturers, in the interests of the magazine, and he reports that he was cordially received by all of them and assured of their hearty co-operation.

No. 1 of Vol. II, being the February issue of this year, contains a gallery of Independent picture stars and various scenes from photoplays, the illustrations being neat specimens of the engraver's art. There are 29 photoplay stories, several good special articles and appropriate verses in the issue. Independent exhibitors should do all in their power to aid in the sale of this magazine to their patrons.

Tom Quill Enters Educational Field.

FILMS FOR PUBLIC SCHOOLS
A CARTOON SKETCH OF TOM QUILL A CHICAGO BOY. GEN. MANAGER OF THE WORLD'S BEST FILM CO. HE HAS OPENED THE EDUCATIONAL FIELD FOR FILMS IN THE PUBLIC SCHOOLS THROUGHOUT THE COUNTRY

Tom Quill, general manager of the World's Best Film Co., has branched out into the educational field. He will travel throughout the country and interest superintendents and principals of public schools in scenics, travelogues, and literary and historical subjects. The accompanying cartoon shows Tom in urbane attitude, offering, with pleased countenance, the moving picture, which is destined to make school life a delight instead of a burdensome task.

Chicago Film Brevities.

Louis G. Marcus, acting manager of the General Film Co.'s branch at Salt Lake, and Miss Gertrude Levin, of Pueblo, Colo., were united in marriage Tuesday, Jan. 16th, in the latter city. Mr. and Mrs. Marcus will be at home after Feb. 1st in Salt Lake City.

The Paragon Theater, at 51st St. and Prairie Avenue, has been closed, for remodeling and the erection of a new front. The interior decorations when completed will give a very handsome appearance, and the front will be of modern and attractive design. An indirect lighting system will be installed in the theater. The Paragon is owned by Mrs. Berman, who purchased the Woodlawn Theater, this city, a few days ago.

A. K. Greenland, traveling representative of the Gaumont Co., spent a few days in Chicago last week.

Martin Rosendahl recently purchased the Majestic Theater in Duluth, Minn. The Majestic was formerly known as the Star for years. Ellis Dorfman was the owner. The Majestic is now being remodeled.

James R. Brannan, of the New Savoy, Evansville, Ind., was a visitor here last week. Business has been quiet in the Indiana city during the cold weather, but is gradually picking up. Mr. Brannan also owns and operates the Colonial in Evansville. He states that he did excellent business with "Cinderella" at the Savoy.

J. E. Sherwood, who operates the Fairplay, the Grand, and the Gem theaters in Madison, Wis., was in Chicago Friday and Saturday, Jan. 26 and 27. Mr. Sherwood informed me that he had featured the Cardinal Farley split reel at the Fairplay on Jan. 26. His manager wired him that the business was exceptionally large for this subject. Mr. Sherwood has his booking done at the G. F. Co.'s branch, 117 N. Dearborn Street.

J. R. Freuler, of the Northwestern Film Exchange, Milwaukee, was in the city Monday and Tuesday, Jan. 29 and 30. He reports business as being very fair at the present time, although the cold snap hurt considerably. Several theaters in Milwaukee closed down during the cold spell. They are expected to reopen shortly. Mr. Freuler informed me that the Butterfly, an Independent house seating 1500 people, which is furnished service by his exchange, is doing very nicely. Very high-class service is run at this theater, including 21 first-runs weekly. As many as five films are on a program at certain times. The admission for matinees is five cents; for evenings, ten cents.

MORMON PICTURES IN DEMAND.

The Great Northern Special Feature Film Company Find Ready Sale for State Rights on This Subject.

Mr. Charles Abrams, manager of the Great Northern Special Feature Film Company, is almost the busiest man on Fourteenth Street. Since the announcement that this company would release "A Victim of the Mormons" on the State rights plan, he has been bombarded with requests for territory and inquiries regarding that picture. A clerk and several stenographers have been engaged during the past two weeks with this voluminous correspondence and considerable real business has been transacted. Rights have already been sold for several territories and offers sufficient to complete the list on this subject are under consideration. Last week Manager Abrams spent a day in Philadelphia exhibiting some of the Great Northern features and reported very satisfactory results.

One thing that has tended to rouse interest in this picture is the antagonistic attitude of the so-called Mormon church, which has given the subject the widest publicity and tended to rouse great public interest in the picture. Copies of this picture have just been received from Copenhagen and are now ready for distribution.

A splendid complement of advertising matter will accompany "A Victim of the Mormons." Handsome three-sheet and one-sheet posters in four colors have been made and attractive circulars for use of the exhibitors have been printed. Those who are fortunate enough to obtain the territorial rights for this picture may congratulate themselves upon securing a genuine feature and one that will swell box office receipts to record-breaking figures.

Future releases of the Great Northern Special Feature Film Company will be announced later, but we are in a position to say that a finer line of feature pictures has yet to come to our notice.

A KLEINE SPLIT REEL. February 6th.

The Kleine-Cines release for February 6th is a split reel, the subjects being "Besieged" and "Jenkins, a Conquering Hero." We desire to call special attention to this matter owing to the fact that the titles were so displayed in the Kleine advertisement on page 411 of the last issue of the Moving Picture World as to appear to be one subject instead of two. The subjects appeared properly in the Calendar of Licensed Releases on page 404 of the same issue.

LEVI COMPANY DAMAGED BY FIRE.

A fire which originated in the ground floor store of the building occupied by the Levi Company at 1560 Broadway, New York, early Sunday morning, January 28th, extended to the upper floors of the building and very nearly wrecked the Levi plant. So serious was the damage that ten days will be required to straighten matters out before work can be resumed. This will delay the production of Levi's new movable slide, which novelty was about ready for distribution at the time of the fire.

No Injunction Against Patents Co

Justice Bijur, of Supreme Court, Holds the Agreement Between Greater New York Film Rental Co. and Motion Picture Patents Co. Valid and Enforceable.

JUSTICE BIJUR, sitting at Special Term for Motions in the Supreme Court of New York, has denied the application of the Greater New York Film Rental Co. for a temporary injunction against the Motion Picture Patents Co. The opinion of the justice, accompanying the decision, is printed in full below:

Greater New York Film Rental Co. vs. Motion Picture Patents Co.—This is an application for a temporary injunction pending the determination of an action for a permanent injunction. Plaintiff is a rental agency of moving picture apparatus. Defendants are respectively (1) the company which holds patents covering a large part of the field of the moving picture business; (2) a number of manufacturers who have assigned their patents to the Patents Co. and have taken back licenses therefrom; (3) a rental agency of a character similar to the plaintiff's, in which it is alleged that the other defendants are interested and through which they are said to be endeavoring to drive plaintiff and others out of business.

On January 20, 1909, plaintiff executed with the defendant, the Patents Co., a license agreement under which it was privileged to lease from the manufacturers, apparatus covered, by the patents in question, and to sublet the same to sublicensees for exhibition purposes, provided such sublicensees were also licensed by the Patents Co. The nineteenth clause of the "conditions of license" of this agreement provides "that the licensor may terminate this agreement on fourteen days' written notice to the licensee of its intention so to do." Defendant Patents Co. having elected by appropriate notice to the plaintiff to terminate the license, this action is brought, directed first against the Patents Co. forbidding it from terminating the license; second, against the "licensed manufacturers," requiring them to continue to supply apparatus according to the terms of the license.

Plaintiff's theory is that the license agreement prepared by the Patents Co. must be strictly construed against it, and that when so construed the nineteenth clause (which plaintiff's cousel happily designates as "breathing") means that the license may be terminated only for cause. Plaintiff further endeavors to show that no genuine cause, namely, breach of the provisions on its part, existed; and that therefore there was no right to terminate the license. In aid of its interpretation of the language of the agreement plaintiff alleges that the arrangements between all the defendants constitute a combination in violation of the Federal Anti-Trust Act and of the several statutes of this State against monopoly; and that the fact that this combination is effected through or concerning patents of the United States is no justification of the monopoly which it is claimed goes beyond the necessarily monopolistic privileges involved in the very grant of a patent. Plaintiff further shows that at the time of the execution of the agreement the president of plaintiff corporation was assured by the general manager of the Patents Co. (defendant) that plaintiff "would not lose the license so long as the patent was in force unless it violated the terms of the license."

There is also cited in the affidavit of one Swanson a statement made by a member of a committee of the Patents Co. to a committee of rental exchanges. This is to the effect that after being requested to insert in the agreement a clause that it might be canceled only for cause, the member of the Patent Co.'s committee said that the plaintiff "could rest assured that no man's license would be taken from him unless it was for cause and that if he lived up to the terms of the agreement it would continue throughout the life of the patent, and that if there were any violations of the agreement asserted (sic), that the man would have a fair and full opportunity of making explanations before his license was taken away." The Patents Co.'s representative, however, insisted that not a word in the agreement would be changed.

Without entering into minute details of the defense, it may be said that defendants substantially traverse all the contentions of the plaintiff. They claim, further, that whatever remedy may be appropriate against the Patents Co., the licensed manufacturers should not be directed to continue to supply the plaintiff with goods, first, because they hold no contractual relation to the plaintiff, and, second, because a mandatory injunction should not issue in a case like the present.

Plaintiff offers some proof that there was an actual agreement between the licensed manufacturers and the Patents Co. to supply goods to the licensees of the Patents Co., and claims that the very terms of the license itself are sufficient to indicate beyond a doubt that such an agreement exists. This agreement, it is claimed, would, under the doctrine of Lawrence vs. Fox, inure to the benefit of the plaintiff. In view of the conclusion at which I have arrived, it is not necessary to decide the many interesting questions of law above indicated, although I deem it fair to say that my inclination is to agree with the theory advanced by the plaintiff thereon.

On the crucial and determinative question, however, whether the license agreement is terminable on fourteen days' notice at the arbitrary election of the Patents Co. or terminable only for cause, I am unable to accept the plaintiff's interpretation. The language of the first few lines of the nineteenth section, which I have quoted hereinabove, is clear and unequivocal. From the context I find that the license is terminable on fourteen days' notice at the will of the Patents Co.; or, in the event of a violation by the licensee of any provision of the license, the licensor may, without terminating the license, "suspend" the licensee and direct the manufacturers not to lease pictures to the licensee; or, at the election of the Patents Co., it may on such violation terminate the license immediately without prejudice to its rights to recover damages from the licensee. The three options thus accorded to the Patents Co. are clear and consistent.

Repeated, careful reading of the rather complicated agreement reveals no other clause or provision at variance with this interpretation. As the contract in this respect is unambiguous and complete, no evidence of the circumstances surrounding its execution or of oral communications attending it are admissible to vary its terms. Indeed, the two conversations set out in the moving affidavits to which I have alluded indicate rather that plaintiff's president understood perfectly what the license meant, namely, that it was plainly terminable on fourteen days' notice at the arbitrary will of the Patents Co., and that plaintiff unsuccessfully endeavored to secure the elimination of that provision. The oral assurance claimed to have been obtained by him that this provision would not be enforced is in distinct variance of the terms of the written agreement, and consequently, under familiar rules of law, unavailable to affect the written instrument. Similarly the presence of oppressive terms in the contract of the condition of business duress which plaintiff pleads cannot be availed of to vary the contract as made, however persuasive they might be in an action to be relieved of the obligation of the contract. Nor, as intimated above, can these elements be considered to the extent of permitting the plain language of the agreement to be interpreted as meaning something else. Motion denied, with $10 costs. A Selig Ranch Picture.

With the Boys of the Diamond S" Has Many Fine Features.

Reviewed by Jas. McQuade.

A COMPANION to Selig's well known feature film, "Ranch Life in the Great Southwest," will be released Tuesday, Feb. 27. The first named subject was the most striking of its kind, up to the time of its release, as the most expert cowboys in the world were engaged in its making; the second, entitled "With the Boys On the Diamond S," has even still more thrills and dare-devil exploits, as our old friend, Tom Mix, the man of steel muscles and rock-ribbed torso, and Frank Maish, the world's champion lassoer and rough rider, are to the fore in some amazing feats of skill, strength and horsemanship.

It would seem that all the demons of the plains, in horseflesh, had been collected for the occasion, as the wild bronchs attempt to throw their riders in the most cunning and diabolical fashion. Watch that fellow swinging swiftly around in a circle, of which his own body is the radius. He is trying his best to make the rider dizzy, and then with a downward plunge of his head and front quarters and an upward heave with his rear, shoot him from the saddle with the force of a mighty catapult. But he fails in this particular case. Bucking bronchs of all types (remember that a bronch is a wild horse which has never been trained to the saddle, and that a broncho is a domesticated bronch) are seen, and many a rider bites the dust after a long and desperate effort to retain his saddle.

Some remarkable bulldogging feats are performed by Tom Mix. Bulldogging a wild steer is hazardous at all times, but Mr. Mix makes the feat extra hazardous. While his horse is at full gallop, in pursuit of the steer, at the proper moment, Mr. Mix jumps from his mount and lights on the neck of the steer, or on the ground, to one side of the animal. In either case he must avoid the long, sharp-pointed horns with his body and be skillful enough to seize them in his hands. Then he twists the animal's neck and forces the creature to the ground. In one instance we see Mr. Mix light on the neck of the steer, causing the animal to turn a complete somersault its full length. The spectator expects to find him crushed and limp, but he emerges from the dust a victor and body whole, while the steer gets up and trots off none the worse for its rough experience.

But there is an additional thrill in these bulldogging feats, and it is furnished by Mrs. Mix. She seizes a monster steer and after a tremendous tussle, which lasts several minutes, succeeds in throwing him.

A Record Breaking Throw and Tie.

Champion Woman Bull Dogger of the World.

There is another big surprise in store for everyone who views this film. For the first time they will see an automobile used instead of a horse, in lassoing, roping and tieing steers on the plain. This is done most successfully, and in one instance we see Tom Mix bulldog a steer from the machine, while it is going at high speed. The lassoing feats and daring riding performed by Frank Maish will also make many eyes open in wonder.

"Broncho Busting."

"Bull-Dogging."

The march of 1,000 long horns, the last of their kind on the plains, is shown as they are being driven to the nearest station, for shipment to market. Another scene that will be appreciated by many shows sunrise on the plains, with thousands of cattle resting or browsing. This is finely photographed and the same can be said of the entire film.

Continuous action, of the liveliest kind, marks the doings of the boys on the "Diamond S," and their stunts include all that are worth while in the depiction of life on the plains of the Great Southwest.

"THE LOVE OF JOHN RUSKIN" (Vitagraph).

(See illustration on color insert.)

There are some things that are sacred, even from the hand of the most circumspect of picture makers. In this category we would include such bits of human experience as the matrimonial episode of John Ruskin. But, since the picture man has seized upon that unfortunate and, to the sensitive soul of Ruskin, most painful affair, and dared to interpret it by means of the photoplay, it may be commented upon in these columns. We will not discuss the question of propriety as related to this and similar subjects, but merely record personal impressions received upon viewing the picture.

It is on record that Ruskin married a beautiful woman with whom he was deeply in love; that the painter, John Millais, became a member of the Ruskin household; that Ruskin's wife and Millais afterward became so enamored of each other that Ruskin released his wife from her obligations to him that she might be happy with Millais, and that he afterward remained as a guest where he had formerly been the host.

The eccentricities of genius and the greatness of the persons involved have led the world to speak in whispers when discussing this peculiar human document. By what means the change of heart in the woman and of relations to her of the men was wrought, none but the most irresponsible mind would venture to define. We doubt that it is a matter of even the most vague report. Whatever those means may have been, we shall always hope to believe them only such to which persons of the high character of those involved would resort.

It is unfortunate that the Vitagraph has at least suggested, if it has not actually portrayed, the brazen libertine and his equally heartless paramour in their shameless assignations, flaunted almost in the face of the trustful, unsuspecting husband.

Were such the truth, it were better left to the purifying influences of Mother Earth,—buried deep in the tombs of the now deceased participants in that unhappy affair. If not, then why cast the odium of an untruth upon their defenceless memories?

We feel a deep sense of humiliation that even a suggestion of dishonor should be cast upon great names at such an early day.

SUCCESS MOTION PICTURE COMPANY.

Col. Jack Lawrence has arrived in New York with his cowboys and expects to begin making pictures within a few days. Our readers will do well to look out for further information in regard to his operations. Releases will be announced by the Success Company immediately.

"THE BURGLAR'S LOVE" (Great Northern).

The Great Northern release for this week is an interesting dramatic subject entitled "The Burglar's Love." Two burglars are shown engaged in nocturnal pursuits of livelihood, when one of them, upon entering a lady's chamber with felonious intent, is so impressed by the sleeping beauty that he replaces the stolen property and gets away. The following day he manages to meet the young lady and strikes up an acquaintance which ripens into love. Things run very smoothly until one evening he takes her to a picture show at which is shown the unmistakable likeness of himself in the act of stealing a lady's handbag at the races. The girl is deeply offended and turns the young man down cold. He is obliged to leave her in disgrace. Later the young man and his pal, the more hardened burglar, quarrel over the photograph of the girl and part company. The following night the amorous young burglar surprises his pal in the act of burglarizing the chamber of the girl. He compels his pal to give up the plunder, which is immediately returned to the girl. This act so gratifies the young lady that she restores her lover in favor. The picture is acted in the usual excellent manner common in Great Northern subjects and abounds with beautiful scenic effects. A decided novelty is the reproduction of the picture show.

Advertising for Exhibitors

Conducted by EPES WINTHROP SARGENT.

HERE is an embarrassment of riches this week, but before going on we want to give by way of contrast a flyer that is as effective as the kick of a legless mule. This was not submitted for criticism but c es from our own balliwick. It reads:

> To whom it may Concern:
> PLEASE TAKE NOTICE that the
> KINGS HIGHWAY
> —:CASINO:—
> BY SPECIAL REQUEST WILL RENDER DAILY MATINEES.
> If you wish to spend a pleasant afternoon, pay us a visit and you will always see a good show.
> We will endeavor to procure the best releases from the leading Photo-Play Studios.
> One visit to the CASINO will surely make you a steady patron.
> Raffle for a Beautiful Prize
> will be held
> every Friday Evening at 9 o'clock
> COUPONS GIVEN DAILY.

here isn't a word here that is calculated to make business. There is no sm or argument and the phrasing is not well done. Matinees are given, nc rendered, and that "special request" is overdone. Suppose that it had st ed with the statement that "there are more patrons than seats at the K s Highway Casino" going on to explain that that is the reason why m nees have been decided upon that those who can attend in the afternc may come then and leave the evening seats for those who cannot. A he start that sounds like big business.

Ve will endeavor to procure the best releases" is an excess of modesty. S we have arranged to obtain the newest and best of the Licensed ph plays; the pick of the thirty-six weekly releases. That's more definite th the half promise and it's an argument that should pull. And tell that if person once visits the Casino he'll become a steady patron because he wi always find the smartest releases, the best projection and the most att ctive house. And the word raffle is unpleasantly suggestive of the bar ro . Make it a gift contest and tell what the prize is. "Beautiful prize" co eys absolutely nothing.

Style in Reno.

e Grand Theater, Reno, submits some samples of the house program, ap rently just started since the advertising space is not yet taken. It is six page railroad folder with a type page 6 x 3 inches. A one-inch sp top and bottom is given over to advertising, the back page to the ho ad and the front to the house details. The other four pages have ea one of the four reels with cast and musical program after this style:

> "HOW SIR ANDREW LOST HIS VOTE"
> Edison Comedy
> An Adaptation of Richard Harding Davis's Well-Known Story, "In the Fog"
> CAST OF CHARACTERS

ir Andrew	Marc McDermott

> MUSIC
> 1911 Popular Airs: "Dear Delighful Women," "Oh You Beautiul Doll," "Mad House Rag," "Love Me," "By the Sascatchewan," Come Back Virginia," "When I'm Away."

d here is the way the Reno manager meets the matter of program. t y give a hint to the Casino:

> Our new booking contract with the General Film Company will lace before our patrons the best selected programs exhibited anyhere in the United States. Watch this page for announcements f the coming big attractions.

re is some "bite" to such a statement.

Using Cuts.

Surprise Theater, South Bend, Indiana, now uses cuts to illusa its inexpensive but very effective program and a line or two of ader ing at the bottom of alternate pages probably cuts the cost. There are more pretentious programs, but none that "get it over" better for the cost.

Straight Talks.

re has been some fuss down in Birmingham, Ala., about the cheap ville theaters that called forth a series of "Direct Talks to Mothers)thers," from H. M. Newsome, who conducts the Princess and The e U. It is a pity that they cannot be given here in full, for they are sound and sensible as the one quoted will show. Each runs across two columns, is set in ten point type and falls from nine to eleven inches. It must be borne in mind that the five-cent picture theater is not meant in this article, but the very cheap vaudeville show with one or more reels and several acts. Here's the talk:

> "THE DIFFERENCE"
> To-day's talk will be short and concerns the "Moving Picture Shows" and the "Five Cent Theater" with the aim in view of drawing the dividing line between the two and despite the fact that the general public usually refers to each in the same manner, there is a marked and unmistakable difference—in truth, the one similarity lies in the price of admission.
> Probably the best and most direct method of showing you this difference will be to make the talk a local one and say that there are in Birmingham two FIVE CENT THEATRES. One visiting each of these places sees moving picture subjects, which are followed by a comedy sketch, songs and vaudeville acts—all for a nickel.
> When you visit the MOVING PICTURE SHOW, of which there are five in Birmingham: The Princess, the Amuse U and three others, you find the whole and undivided efforts of the management directed to producing the latest and highest priced works of the world's best Motion Picture Play Companies, Dramas of historical and domestic subjects, plays that have plots that are carried out by men and women who stand at the head of the Theatrical Profession.
> It is probably fair to say that of these five "Moving Picture Shows" the Amuse U was formerly a "Five Cent Theater" offering its patrons vaudeville. The public did not rave over the idea, so early last summer the vaudeville feature was done away with and the house devoted to Moving Pictures exclusively with the exception that occasionally a singer of note and reputation is heard between the pictures.
> This series of talks is prompted by the fact that recent agitation which confused the two made it, in the estimation of the writer, necessary.
> This is our fourth and final talk on the subject, unless more becomes necessary. We have what we know to be an amusement institution of worth to the public, places of amusement where those who care to spend a five cent piece may go and see the best dramas of the day done in pantomime, and we have a thousand and one arguments in its favor, and not one against it.

Turning to the Hustlers.

That man Winstock has been doing things again. It's not often that a photoplay theater can boast of a State Governor as an extra attraction, but it goes to show that if you go after anything hard enough you'll land things worth while. This newspaper clipping tells the story. It is taken from the Portland Oregonian:

> For several days past the People's Amusement Company has been exhibiting at the People's Theater, this city, an educational film showing the trip which the Western Governors made to the East. An invitation was extended Governor Oswald West to attend a performance and see himself as others saw him through the medium of motion pictures.
> The matter was taken up by the Governor himself and Melvin G. Winstock for the theater, and yesterday arrangements were consummated by which Governor West agreed to appear at the Peoples Theater Friday evening, January 19, and to deliver an address on his remarkable trip.
> Before consenting, however, to comply with the request of the People's, he named a condition, which was that he would do this if the People's Amusement Company would give a benefit performance for the Portland Baby Home. The management very promptly took the Governor at his word and has notified the committee of the Baby Home, consisting of Mrs. D. C. Burns, Mrs. Henry Ladd Corbett and Mrs. David Honeyman and other benevolent ladies of this city, of the arrangement and asked for their co-operation.
> Governor West has agreed to be at the theater for the 8 to 9 o'clock show and arrangements will be perfected whereby a representative of the Baby Home will be in charge of the box office of the theater for the benefit performance.

If you can't get a Governor perhaps you can land the Mayor, the Health Officer or some civic official to lecture a film to fit. That's advertising that counts.

The Princess Celebrates.

The Princess Theater, Leadville, Colorado, celebrates its first anniversary by the publication of a little booklet of eight pages and heavy card cover. In a chatty yet dignified way the manager, Arthur B. Cundy, reviews the past year and looks into the future. There is a little chat about the films, in which each independent company is treated separately and given individuality in the minds of the patrons. Their specialties are pointed out, their accomplishments conservatively lauded and the newcomers welcomed into the fold. There is a page given the vaudeville attractions, another to the February films, a straight, simple talk on the safety of the theater, an allusion to the music, an appreciation of the Swanson Film Company and a sincerely worded page of thanks to the patrons.

The booklet will be read from cover to cover by anyone interested in the pictures and it leaves the patron with a far better idea of the pictures and the feeling of intimacy with the house. It will serve as a model to others who may be contemplating a celebration, but it is too expensive to be generally distributed, we imagine.

Does the Truth Pay?

J. M. Blanchard, manager of the People's Theater, Sunbury, Pa., whose adroit work we have frequently commented upon, writes:

> Does it pay to tell the truth? I say "Yes," and I have a standing offer that reads: "If not as advertised slip to the box office on the way out and get your money back." We give three reels for ten cents and have as opposition a five cent house costing $25,000, and yet we get the business. Our house is plain, but it looks as though it was built to stay. Audience room 42 x 110 feet, twelve foot foyer, twenty foot lobby, seating capacity 700. We were told the Pathe Durbar picture showed 1,000 elephants and so, when we found it did not, we used this ad. What do you think of it?

PEOPLE'S THEATRE

"Delhi Durbar" is not what we have advertised. It is a very ordinary picture. The camera man overlooked the elephants. Perhaps he was at lunch when they passed, but we have our regular three reels, which are always good, well served with a dressing of good music in a large, well-ventilated room, comfortable chairs.

To-day Essanay
G. M. Anderson in The Tenderfoot Foreman
Lubin, The Blacksmith
Pathe, The Horse Thief
Delhi Durbar (?) "No Elephants"

Now and then an advertisement such as this makes talk and calls attention to the policy of the house. Now and then something like this helps, but it should be used cautiously and only with good reason.

Real Plate Work.

We have added to our collection of classy invitations an engraved double sheet from the Criterion Theater, Rutherford, N. J. It is printed from a copper plate in readable script and should draw to the house the attention of the better class of patrons. The wording runs:

Messrs. Vick, Collins and Lawrence request the honor of your presence at a Private Inspection and Performance of the Criterion Theater
the opening of which marks a new epoch in amusement in Southern Bergen County
Ames Avenue near Park
Rutherford, N. J.
Tuesday evening, January twenty-third
Nineteen hundred and twelve at eight-thirty o'clock
This invitation will admit yourself and guest

The private view is a strong appeal to pride and the "yourself and guest" is another telling point. It reads better than "admit two" and while meaning the same thing conveys the suggestion of power, since the recipient is also permitted to do some inviting. The house replaces an older one of the same name and our personal good wishes go to the hustling management.

The Personal Note.

Samuel M. Moscow, manager of The Scenic Temple, Portsmouth, N. H., writes: "Looking through your department in The Moving Picture World I find many valuable suggestions which help me immensely, so I enclose this ad, which is the regular form I use for the local paper. To my mind nothing will bring your patrons in closer touch than an ad of this sort."

Ever since this department was started the writer has noted with pleasure the response of the live wires who not only make use of the ideas exploited here but who express their appreciation in the more practical form of contribution of their own suggestions. This willingness to give as well as take speaks well for the body of exhibitors and we believe that this interchange of ideas is invaluable in raising the standard of advertising—and so the standard of the photoplay business, throughout the country.

To get back to Mr. Moscow's suggestion, we reprint the sample he sends, because it so closely represents the personal note that all managers should strive for. In the original it appears to be pure reading matter. It runs:

PREMIER SCENIC.

PERSONAL.

Dear Patron:—

No doubt you will be surprised to hear from me at this time, but as we are featuring something special for Monday and Tuesday, naturally you should know about it. The picture of which I speak is a Biograph subject entitled the "Call of the Wilderness," portraying all the terrible sufferings endured by our forefathers in the early days.

You realize of course how beautifully we present a story of this kind and when you reach the part where the settlers defend the stockade from the Indians' attack it certainly makes one sit up and take notice.

Do you remember the funny little fat man, John Bunny? Well, he is in a picture to-day, called "In the Clutches of a Vapor Bath," and if your sides don't ache from laughing I shall be greatly surprised.

Then we bring you right back to a heart throb when we show "Actors' Hearts." It is a dandy story, which will strike a responsive chord in you and make your pulses quicken.

And by the way, the Edison tale of "Two Flats" is worth the price of admission alone. It is a comedy drama of the poor section of a large city.

The "Strike on the Ranch" puts a finishing touch upon an exceptionally strong bill. You know, of course, that it is not the subject itself that you care so much about. For I have heard you say that we have the brightest, clearest and best pictures that you have ever seen, and when the P. S. Trio sings the songs which fi into the story, then you just live right through the whole drama You really can't help it.

Oftentimes you have brushed a tear from your eyes withou thinking, you must admit.

There really isn't anything more of importance to write a present, so promising you, your friends and neighbors an enjoyable afternoon or evening, anytime that either of you care to hono me with a visit,

I beg to remain,

Yours very respectfully,
Premier Scenic Temple.

P. S.—Mr. Sullivan wishes to be remembered to you. He i singing "Navajo Rag" and "The Straight Road" and thinks tha you will like them.

A Suggestion to Manufacturers.

There is one thing that strikes us forcefully in looking over the w ly programs sent in. Wherever possible the cast of characters is usec nd where these casts are to be had those reels gain greater prominence nd more space. The Edison, Selig and Vitagraph subjects are played up ve the others and this greater importance cannot but have its effect upo the spectator. Since the real success of a film is due, in the final disse on, to its popularity with an audience, it seems strange that all compani do not give casts. It is not sufficient that the cast shall appear on the lm. Give it in the advertising that the manager may have it in advance c the reel and make full use of it. The belief that by withholding name the player is prevented from acquiring the "big head," which in this ase means asking for more salary, is a relic of three years ago. Use sts and get a couple of hundred feet of extra advertising each issue.

TELLING TITLES.

How They Can Polish a Picture is Illustrated by the Sax Company.

When the moving picture business was in its infa cy, titles and sub-titles of pictures were considered unimpor nt. Producers were so engrossed in perfecting an efficient w king organization in their studios and factories, that the mportance of titles was greatly minimized. So much so, at a clerk or a stenographer was usually detailed to do the v rk.

To-day, with the gradual development of the import ce of this great industry, every factor which figures in the inished moving picture story is handled by experts. T les are given close attention. In the Solax organization he title is held as important as the production itself. The eason we hold that a title exists at all, is because it sup ies the missing link in the photographic story. They are he thoughts which cannot be conveyed by a series of p tographs.

The following is a set of titles of "Memories of '49,' the release of January 26, which is somewhat out of the ord ary run. These titles were written in verse and almost tell the whole story of the films:

MEMORIES OF '49.

Sub-Titles.

1—An old pioneer of the days of yore,
Sits before his cabin door
2—And dreams of the time, now far away,
When the Indians fought for the Western sway.
3—When a boy he spied the redskins' track,
Two prairie schooners, eager to attack.
4—The reds are on the warpath, men:
Your horses, quick, we may save them.
5—Then began a deadly strife for might was then right and little orth a life.
6—A little maid then fearfully fled
With God's protection by Angels led.
7—And he was chosen by God's will
That little maid to protect from ill.
8—And many years later, the maid grew tall,
And with a kiss became his all.
9—His life near spent, he knelt at the grave
Of his darling wife that God to him gave.
10—Awakening then he lightly smiled
And wiped from his eye a tear.
For her voice seemed to whisper that God to her
Would soon take the old pioneer.

Lillian M. Rubenstein, former associate editor of the bin Manufacturing Company bulletins, has recently succ ded Giles R. Warren as scenario editor of the firm. Mrs. R benstein is a successful newspaper and magazine writer a is the author of numerous photoplays.

The SCENARIO WRITER

CONDUCTED BY EPES WINTHROP SARGENT

That Copyright Matter.

WE ARE pained to perceive that Louis Reeves Harrison, for whose skill and experience we entertain a profound respect, has entered into the copyright discussion and, like the infant in the soap ertising, declares that he will not be happy until he gets it.

r. Harrison, like all scenario writers to whom the copyright matter ns to appeal, blandly ignores the clear provisions of the law and de- es that it is an outrage that the Register of Copyrights should not ac- for registration the work of his and other pens, although the Register pointed out that the law forbids him from accepting for registry any ter that has not first been published. A "book," the technical classifi- on under which the scenario comes, must be printed and offered for . The "dramatic composition" which Mr. Harrison and others assert to the proper classification for the scenario, must be played in some place re admission is charged. Properly, the scenario is not a dramatic com- ition within the meaning of the act, but a sketch of such a composition.

ut suppose that Mr. Solberg gave heed to the plaint of the scenario ter and accepted for registration all scenarios written. And let us fur- grant, for the sake of argument, that the Gwump Film Company is a ionest corporation, stealing the works submitted to it for purchase and among the works so stolen is one of Mr. Harrison's.

t is now proven that copyright is no preventive of theft, though many clamor for copyright regard it as the sole remedy. The copyright has not scared the Gwump Company any more than it would scare any er well-informed person. The Gwump Company takes the Harrison pt without any regard for the copyright line and Mr. Harrison looks r the ground.

e finds that there is no protection granted under the law. He has a l stating that a copy of the scenario was registered with the Library of gress on a specified date and that he has been granted all rights to h a product for the first term of 28 years.

ut it is up to him to obtain that protection. He has precisely the same ht to sue as was his under Section 2 of the act before the matter was yrighted. The only difference is that now he must sue under the terms the Copyright Act and not at common law. He is bound by certain d restrictions instead of being left free to follow the more elastic com- n law practise and if it can be shown that he has invalidated his copy- it in any way, through improper entry, for example, he finds his case wn out of court.

ut if the matter may not be traversed he must still prove his right to matter for which copyright protection is claimed and must prove that production was made from his script. He may win the case only to e it appealed again and again until, some years after, he comes into the ted States Supreme Court. Even if he wins, the protection that he ught he procured for a dollar has cost him hundreds, though the costs against the Gwump Company, and all this bother over a principle—and cript that might have brought $50 in the beginning.

he sole value of a copyright lies in its attestation that this script is that which you claim protection and that on a certain date it was in existence. common law the same result can be gained by showing the script to witnesses.

ugh F. Hoffman, of this staff, cleverly points out that an absolutely l government registration may be obtained for little trouble and at a of two cents. Here is his scheme:

ake your carbon copy and permanently bind it together with staples, lets or paste, stepping the pages so that two one cent stamps may be ked to cover all the pages. Stepping merely means cutting away parts each page as is done in indexing ledgers, for instance. Fold the carbon ets on the back, write your name and address and slip it in the post without an envelope. Presently it will be delivered to you. The post e cancellation will show the date, the stamps will prove that all of the ets were in existence at the time the matter was mailed and you have ured your registration with little trouble. It is as fully protecting as copyright registration and you retain the copy yourself.

pinions seem to differ on the copyright idea, the Rev. E. Boudinot ckton declaring that to copyright a script is an insult to an editor; a ht we would more readily accept had we not seen the sworn affidavits ny companies now require the author to sign, but he very sanely points that it is foolish to sue and that the possible loss of a script may well charged to experience. As he writes: "registration doesn't say and sn't prove anything about its originality. It doesn't prove anything ept that on such a date I declare such and such a production to be property. The real protection of the scenario writer lies not in the geyman copyright, but in the innate honesty of every decent man." mitting that there are some who are not honest and who may plagarize matter sent to their companies to be sold elsewhere, to their own fit, he argues that this number is so small as to be unimportant.

ince this department was instituted there have been about a dozen ect charges of theft preferred, not a single one of which has been stantiated. In one instance no name was signed to the script and no er of inquiry was mailed by the author. He saw his product on the een, cried aloud to heaven to witness his wrongs and not until he was ed to write the company did he learn the real facts of the case and find t it was not the dishonesty of the company, but his own carelessness. y liked his story, produced it and then waited for him to come along claim the payment.

t is undoubtedly true that where producers write their own scripts as as put on the work of others they are now and then influenced in ir own work, consciously or otherwise, by the scripts they have read, but these happenings cannot be avoided by copyright, are not the conscious work of the companies and the stories are so greatly at variance that infringement cannot be proven if, indeed, infringement exists.

With all proper respect to Mr. Harrison and those of his opinion, the fact may be restated that registration of copyright for scenarios save as published books cannot be had under the present law and if it could be had, a copyright would be as useful in the prevention of theft as an icebox at the North Pole. The copyright of the published story or photoplay is right and proper since that is required by law, but copyright for the unproduced scenario is not only unnecessary but deprives the author of his common law rights without giving him other safeguard in exchange.

"Come On In, Fellers!"

A California correspondent wants to know if we don't think that this page would be more useful if correspondents were allowed to contribute for the benefit of other scenario writers.

We most assuredly do. This is what this page was started for and already the scenario writers have responded generously, but there is lots of room for others and all are welcome so that they have something to say and say it briefly. No one man ever is going to know it all and we do not pretend to. We want to hear from all scenario writers, because there isn't even a beginner who doesn't know something that the rest of us do not. You'll get a lot of help out of this column. Why not give a little yourself? Come on in.

Warren Is Working.

Giles R. Warren did not get that two months' loaf he was expecting. Albert McGovern, who recently went from Lubin's to the Powers plant, got him over to town and by showing him that the studio was but five minutes' walk from the West Shore ferry coaxed him from his Jersey fastness.

Mr. Warren's duties will be largely confined to the scripts produced by Mr. McGovern, but it is to be hoped that he will be given opportunity to draw to the Powers office the friends he made among scenario writers during his previous connections.

Nestor Is Leisurely.

Readers are advised that scripts sent to the Nestor Company are retained for two or three months. The organization in California is not complete and action seems to be slow. Those who desire quick action should act accordingly.

About That Affidavit.

Here's a letter that will strike a responsive chord in the hearts of a lot of scenario writers:

> Your discussion as to copyrights brings to mind an issue which I have never seen mentioned in your department.
> Almost all of the film producers, upon buying a scenario, force the author to sign an assignment, conveying title to the purchaser. This of course is as it should be, but it is regarding the affidavit usually attached that I seek information.
> I have never been troubled with the delusion that someone might "swipe" my stories, but, rather, have feared that, through ignorance, I might be guilty of unintentional plagiarism. I neither read everything that is written nor do I see every stage production or photoplay and this, of course, is true of every would-be scenario writer.
> In view of this and the unquestioned truth of that old saw, "There is nothing new under the sun," how can any writer make affidavit to the effect that all ideas included in the purchased scenario are his or her very own. We all do it, but———
> Frequently I am unable to place the origin of my idea and may be, for all I know, infringing on some one's copyright—which brings me to one of my questions: Does the "lifting" of one idea constitute plagiarism—or, would the literary thug have to annex an entire plot to qualify as the defendant in a suit for infringement?
> Is it not true that film producers, in this respect, demand more of authors than do any other buyers of MSS? Do publishers of books, magazines or music require anything of the sort from contributors? Instead, do they not depend upon their readers to detect clear cases of purloining and assume all risks of infringing themselves? Is it not possible that, when a film company acquires the property rights to a scenario and is given common law protection, that it also—regardless of awe inspiring affidavits—assumes all risk of charges of plagiarism? Could it be possible that the shudder inspiring "releases" signed by "us playrights," for the purpose of relieving huge corporations from liability, are all a bluff?
> Taking this opportunity to thank you for the many helpful hints constantly appearing in your ably edited columns, I remain,
> Very truly yours,
> MAY B. HONEST.
> P. S.—My apology for the above signature is—that I wish enlightenment rather than notoriety. It might be added that I am a well-known scenario writer, having had scripts returned by every producer in the country.

We have had standing in type for several weeks a suggestion to the manufacturers that a voucher check be used in place of the formidable bunch of documents that some companies require a signature to. Personally we do not mind signing a bill of sale, but we object to the notarial stunt on the proposition that we won't hunt up a notary and give him a quarter for his attestation when it isn't necessary.

If the writer honestly believes the story to be of his own invention, we believe that he is justified in signing the affidavit—which is ornamental rather than useful at best. It's pretty hard to determine just what is original, for that matter. To take an example, this writer some years ago evolved "In the Land of To-morrow," published in the All Story Magazine, from the title of a novel, "The Port of Missing Men." He did not read the novel, which had to deal with the Sargossa Sea; but conceived the idea of a retreat in the antarctic populated by those whose inventions were a century ahead of their time. Four or five years later the Strand Magazine reprinted from the French the story of an Island in the Indian Ocean, on which lived scientists far in advance of their time.

It is highly improbable that the French author read the All Story Magazine. The writer knew nothing of the French fiction. Who shall say where absolutely original ideas come from?

The signature to an affidavit of this sort is purely a matter of conscience. Let your conscience rule.

Use No Hooks.

From a California correspondent comes a complaint that one of the Eastern companies recently returned a story stamped in three places with a red-inked suggestion that stamps should be pasted on a self-addressed envelope and not be sent loose.

This is excellent advice, but if the old lady who runs this particular scenario room wants to conduct a correspondence school she should not use the stationery of the pupils without their consent. With paper to be had for as little as four cents a pound there is no reason why her kindly disposition should lead her to splash three different bunches of red ink all over someone else's property. If she pasted her stencil over some other woman's dress she would have to pay for the garment. Why should she regard a scenario as less immune from destruction? It is not her property. It is not the property of the company employing her. It is sent in in response to an advertisement asking for submissions and she takes the rubber stamp and smears it all over a page of manuscript. To send it out again in that shape is to advertise at least one rejection. To copy a single page is almost as bad, since typewriter ribbons never run quite the same color days apart and the single page would look new. The entire script must be recopied because a well intentioned old lady is trying to be helpful.

We don't blame the correspondent for being sore, but his letter splutters like a wet firecracker. There is just one way to "get back" at an offending editor—unless you've had training at "roasting"—make them pay for the copying of the damaged script. That's the best way to do it. Simply write and explain that it cost you a certain sum and ask that it be forwarded. That's the best way in the long run, because that costs money.

Why Not This?

Apropos of a recent suggestion in this department, "Bennie from Lubinville" sends one of the new rejection slips, which is reproduced here for the benefit of other scenario editors. To check off the slip requires but a moment and it is a tremendous help to the novice struggling in the dark to gain a foothold. We would suggest that an eighteenth reason be added—"Overstocked with this style of story at present" and that "Too immoral" suggests that some immorality is allowed. "Lacks moral tone" might be better. Here is the slip:

> Herewith we are returning with regret your scenario, as we do not find same available for our use owing to the reasons checked off below; this does not necessarily imply lack of merit as your story indicates talent for writing, and we trust you will not grow discouraged but will continue submitting work to us which we will be pleased to consider and will give same our most careful attention.

Another American Story.

Apparently A. Van Buren Powell, who seems to be a confirmed optimist, writes to explain that he's landed a story on the kindly Kalem editor so that he will not have to "bust" as he promised to do if he didn't.

But the main point of his letter is this in regard to a recent kick about the American:

> Your correspondent who mentions the American's habit of hanging on to scripts has nothing on me. I sent them a Western dramatic scenario October 2, 1911, which I received back January 18th. Its return was not unexpected, as it was one of my first efforts AND it was accompanied by a nice letter and a typewritten sheet of instructions setting forth exactly what was wanted at present by the "Flying A," so I feel that I have no kick coming.

And here's another from the original complainant:

Your comment in the "World" on the letter sent you by the writer on January 9th relative to the holding of a certain manuscript by the American Film Manufacturing Company has just been noted, and while I must confess that it was written somewhat hastily, yet it must be admitted that it is exceedingly provoking to be handed a deal of this kind. Just a word of explanation. The manuscript referred to was fo warded to the American Film Manufacturing Company in this city October 6th, and the writer waited a month and then wrote them a ki note to the effect, that I would be pleased to learn their decision, if had been arrived at. They replied that they had not heard from Western producer. A month later a similar letter was sent and a of their reply is attached. Another month passed and the scenario returned without a word or a rejection slip. From the tone of the le received, the writer is of the opinion that the scenario was lost, but would have been excusable, had I been advised to that effect. The w is not kicking on the rejectment of the scenario, as same has been ported on favorably by another firm, but wishes to be dealt with f and squarely.

THE LETTER:

Dear Sir:

We have your favor of the 7th and in reply advise that the scen "His Big Brother Bill," you submitted to us was sent to our Wes producer on October 8th and we are at a loss to account for his not ha previously reported.

We are writing him about this and will let you hear from us as as we receive his reply. Trusting you are not experiencing any in venience in the matter, we are,

Yours very truly,

Inquiries.

G. H. H.—We do not query the players as to their ages, but Mr. Bou is a young man. Your first question is out of order, too.

Projection Department

Edited by F. H. RICHARDSON.

MISTAKEN IDEAS.—Provo, Utah, writes: "Am starting a new theater and am in doubt as to whether I should suspend the operating room from he ceiling some 30 or 40 feet from the screen, thereby securing a better picture with less current, using a 30 ampere Mercury Arc Rectifier, or put he room in the rear, about 120 ft. from the screen, and thus get a picture with less of an angle but with increased cost for current and a poorer picure. Can you advise me?"

I certainly can. You are very much mistaken in your ideas, Provo. Given a reasonably clear atmosphere, added length of throw within reasonable limits does not in any way affect the brilliancy of the picture. As has been explained many times in this Department, and as is fully explained in detail on page 104 of the Handbook, it is the size of the picture, and not the throw, which determines the necessary amperage. Again I will say that you will get a better picture at 120 ft. with the same amount of current, then you could get at 40 ft. size remaining the same. On the other hand, if you increase the size of your picture you must increase the amperage, if the current brilliancy per sq. ft. is to remain the same. On page 46, November 18th issue, you will find a table setting forth the necessary amperes per sq. ft. of curtain, and I think you will find this table to be approximately correct. I might add that the table has been commented upon and approved by one of the leading English moving picture publications, he Bioscope, of London.

If you hang your operating room 30 or 40 ft. from the screen you will have to use the same amount of current you would for the longer throw and wide angle lens, and wide angle lenses are a notoriously poor proposition. t is very rare indeed that you can get one of these lenses which will give good definition all over the screen, even when the machine is central with he curtain. When throwing at an angle it would be just that much worse. consider 120 ft. as an almost ideal distance to project a picture and I would strongly advise you to locate your operating room at the rear of the uditorium.

OPINIONS.—New York City, writes asking if it will not be difficult to secure a renewal of license if the theater is in a building constructed entirely of wood. License expires April 1st. Location—Borough of Queens; also asking me to express an opinion as to what chance the proposed ordinance has of passing. As to the first query, I would suggest that the brother go down and consult with the head of the License Bureau. Any opinion I might express as to the probability of renewal of licenses in such building would not be of much value. I believe a law forbids the issue of licenses for a theater in such a building, in Brooklyn or Manhattan. Whether this holds good in Queens and the Bronx, I cannot say. The friend an look that point up just as easily as I can. As to the last query, he might as well ask me to express an opinion as to which way the wind will low to-morrow.

APPROVAL.—Mr. W. G. Woods, President and Business Agent, Local Union 162, I. O. T. S. E., of San Francisco, Cal., writes: "It may inrest you to know that this local thinks so much of the Projection Department, issue of January 6th, showing a Power's No. 6 machine in all s details, that it has ordered the same to be framed and hung in the emonstration room for reference, which will be done with all similar diagrams, a number of which we note you promise for the future."

We are glad to have the approval of the San Francisco Local, and to note that they have taken the course they have in reference to the inructions, which we trust will prove of some value even to their best men. o their apprentices and younger men no doubt the instructions will be of eat benefit.

WRONG LENSES.—Canton, Pa., writes: "It has been some little time nce I have had occasion to write you, but there is more trouble in the air ow and I can think of no better way to get at its cause than to consult e Department editor. Recently we installed new condensers. Ever nce then the light has been decidedly bad. Before we placed the new condensers in the machine, the spot was round and very bright; now it has st much of its brilliancy and has taken the shape of a four-cornered star, cross. The ray seems to be smaller at a point about five inches from, an at the aperature. In addition to the light trouble, there has been exssive condenser breakage—it being almost impossible to make a new connser last through an entire evening. The Projection Department for the eck of January 6th was simply fine. Do you expect to write similar ticles on all the prominent makes of machines? I can assure you that I all watch carefully for the next one and hope it will be explained in as od shape as was the Power's Six. Another reason why I enjoyed reading the Department of the week of January 6th was that it was set in that od old eight point, like it used to be a few months ago. I certainly do sh those six point slugs could be thrown in the scrap box just as fast they come off the machine. Guess that will do for my little kick. You y depend upon it that I would at least try to read the Projection Dertment if it was printed in Greek."

The trouble of the friend in Canton is, I think, that he has somehow tten hold of two lenses of very short focal length. If he could bring the mp up close enough to the lenses he would probably find that the spot uld resume its normal appearance. As you moved the arc forward, the ot would keep getting smaller, until it came down to a very small point light, after which it would again grow larger. The spot, I think, is in form of a cross surrounded by a pale blue fringe of considerable width, ich indicates that it is on what is known as the back focus. Lenses of ger focal length is the answer. The Department is printed in smaller e for the reason that we are enabled to get very much more into the ace alloted to us. When the larger type was used the Department consumed a great deal of space; more than could well be spared, and all out of proportion to that alloted to other departments. In order to keep peace in the family, get in the necessary matter, and avoid a weekly scrap with the editorial department, I consented to the use of smaller type. This type is not quite as satisfactory but, even so, it can be read without difficulty. However, in the near future its size may be again increased.

PLASTER SCREEN.—Kansas City, Mo., writes: "In January 13th issue, Attica, Ind., asked about plaster screens. I am using one and find it to be perfectly satisfactory. It is finished with an ordinary coat of plaster paris. About once a week, or maybe once in two weeks, I go over it with a coat of white alabastine, bleached with a few drops of washing blue. Do not get the alabastine too thick or it will not spread good. In case it is too thick, however, leaving a rough surface, go over it with fine sandpaper. This leaves the surface almost as smooth as glass. Frequency of recoating should, of course, be determined by circumstances. While not a practical operator, I take a great deal of interest in the Projection Department. My operator is, I believe, one of the best in every way. If a picture can be gotten out of a film, he gets it."

Your scheme, Kansas City, is excellent, though I hardly think it will be necessary to re-coat the surface oftener than once a month. One thing you neglected to say and that is, that before re-coating, it would be best to wash off the old coat. Glad to hear from a manager who appreciates the work of a good operator—there are altogether too many who don't.

BALTIMORE VISITS WASHINGTON.—Baltimore, Md., writes: "On Sunday morning, January 14, 1912, a delegation from the Baltimore, Maryland, Moving Picture Protective Union, No. 181, I. A. T. S. E., visited Washington, D. C., and were met in that city by a delegation of the Washington Local No. 224, headed by its president, Brother Spellbring. After refreshments were served, Brother Spellbring opened with a little speech of welcome to the 'Boys of Baltimore,' in which he called attention to the benefit of a better acquaintance between the members of the two organizations. The Baltimore delegation invited Local No. 224 to attend the former's ball, which was held on Wednesday, Jan. 24, 1912, and Local 224 invited Baltimore Local No. 181 to their ball, which will be held on Tuesday, January 30, 1912. A large delegation from Washington will attend our ball and we in turn will reciprocate. Refreshments were again served. (Oh! what a jolly bunch!) At night, the Baltimore men were entertained by Mr. "Tom" Moore, who tendered them a box at one of his large vaudeville theaters. His operator flashed a slide of welcome, followed by the Baltimore Local's Union Operator slide, which brought a round of applause from the audience. After the show the boys were again entertained by Local No. 224 until the wee hours. The Baltimore delegation left early the next day well pleased with their visit."

It gives me much pleasure to see operators taking part in such friendly visits. Certainly such things do a great deal of good, in more ways than one. Enclosed with the foregoing article was a letter in which I am requested to warn all operators from going to Baltimore at the present time, as there are several men now out of a position in that city, though the members of the Baltimore Union are, I believe, all employed.

LENS TROUBLE.—Miami, Fla., writes: "What size of condensers should I use on a 57 ft. throw, 12 ft. picture. The line pressure is 200; the current D. C. I use 40 amperes. Have a No. 3-A Stereo lens and cannot get a perfect picture with it; the corners are dark. The moving picture is O. K. I have not broken a condenser in two years, but with the new one I have the above trouble."

I presume you mean a 3-A Edison Stereo lens, which would or should, project a picture 9 ft. wide at 57 ft. It is a 19-inch E. F. lens. On the other hand, if I understand you correctly, you are projecting a 12 ft. moving picture, which would mean approximately a 5 inch E. F. M. P. lens. You have an unusual combination, and my opinion is that your present condensing lenses, while they are all right on the moving picture, are of too short focal length for the Stereo. Presumably, the dark corners could be cleared by moving the lamp ahead every time you shoved over to the Stereo, though this might develop a ghost. If I were you, I would use two 7½ condensing lenses. It is a little difficult to give advice, since you have not stated which picture is 12 ft. After reading the whole letter, though, I am inclined to think it is the moving picture you refer to, particularly as the Edison 3-A lens gives a spread of 3 ft. to every 19 ft. of distance. In asking questions of this kind, operators should be very careful to set forth the facts fully and clearly.

EDISON SHUTTER.—Dallas, Tex., asks how to remove the automatic fire shutter from an Edison Type B machine; that is, how to take it from the revolving mechanism in order to replace the coffer spring, or washer, which is worn out. He also enclosed a clipping from a St. Louis paper, asking me to explain the same. The clipping relates that one E. M. Reel, a moving picture operator of Spokane, Wash., lost a three-quarter carat diamond, valued at $75, same being the set of a ring. The gem was swallowed by a rooster. In the course of events the fowl was killed to grace the said operator's table, and the gem was found."

Presumably Dallas wants me to explain how a moving picture operator managed to own a $75 diamond and a full grown he-hen, all at one and the same time. In the words of the immortal Teddy, I refuse to be interviewed: I haven't a word to say. Possibly Mr. Reel could offer some adequate explanation for so extraordinary a circumstance. As to the shutter: you will find on the outer end of the spindle a collar, held in place by a set screw. Loosen the set screw and remove the collar. This collar rests against the inner hub, in the face of which are two screws. In the edge of this hub is a set screw. Loosen this set screw and you can pull the spindle out. Next remove the two screws in the face of the hub and the shutter will then come off. Just what you mean by "coffer spring," I don't know, or what washer you mean. In the governor of the Edison machine I have in my office there are no springs at all, though there may be in some type of shutter used on an Underwriter's model. I cannot say positively as to this. However, that is the way to take the one I have apart. If you want to still further disrupt the governor, you will find two screws in the outer edge of the casing. Take these screws out and you can then shove the casing off. I am, of course, assuming that your governor is the same as mine.

INTERESTING MATTERS.—New York City, writes: "I am a Southern operator, from Nashville, Tenn., but have come to New York as a camera man for a N. Y. factory. I am very much surprised at projection here, in fact, the best that can be said for it is 'it's punk.' I notice an operator in Gary, Ind., writes the Trouble Department regarding an 'electrolytic' rectifier. Such a rectifier as he described would be a combined resistance and rectifier, and as you say, a water resistance is far from lovely. The fact is that current will pass from lead to aluminum when immersed in proper chemicals, preferably a 10 per cent. solution of sulphuric acid, or a saturated solution of ammonium phosphate—because aluminum is unaffected by these solutions, but will not pass from aluminum to lead, as the lead forms a coat of oxide when it is the negative pole in such a solution. This is known as an electrical "valve" and is used to cut off the current, should the poles on a line be reversed. Four of these valves properly connected form an "electrolysis" rectifier, as shown in Gary's sketch. Enclosed you will find a sketch of a rectifier of this type which I used and found to be extremely satisfactory. It needs only two valves and is used in connection with a split coil transformer or rheostat connected in series. A little study of the sketch will show you how it works.

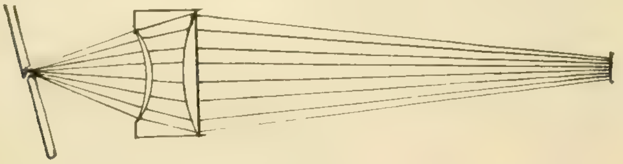
"Also, I am enclosing you a sketch showing how to connect a Mercury Arc Rectifier tube to two rheostats, or transformers. This works simply great, and is well worth 'rigging up.'



No. 3.

"Regarding breaking of condensers and other condenser trouble—enclosed you will find a sketch of a condenser set I have used for years. The results derived from them is startling. No light is lost by being transmitted from the back condenser to the front one, as you can see from the drawing. I have never had the slightest ghost in my picture, when using them, no matter what focus projection lens I use, or the length of throw, and, due to the thinness of the back lens, I have not cracked a single one since I started using them, though I have used very high amperage. If operators would give more attention to this part of the machine, their pictures would be much better. I want to ask operators a question: Where is the proper place for the shutter?—and why? I will tell them in a couple of weeks through your department."

The matters you have submitted are very interesting, and while I don't believe the method of connecting the tubes and the lead-aluminum rectifier is of any large practical value, still the matter is, as I have said, of interest. The condenser sketch you submitted is used to a considerable extent in the old countries, particularly in Germany. The trouble is that the meniscus lens is quite expensive and using of a back lens of smaller diameter, in my opinion, will waste as much or more light than will be gained. You must remember that, while you will waste no light in the interior wall of the condenser casing, you are cutting down the available area presented to the arc by considerable, thus wasting much more light on the interior of the lamp house walls. I, therefore, don't believe I can agree with you in this matter. I am of the opinion that two 4½-inch condenser lenses, of good grade, are as good as anything that can be had. Shall be glad to hear from you on the shutter position.

BALTIMORE.—On Wednesday, January 24th, I had the pleasure of paying Baltimore Local Union No. 181 a visit, the occasion being its second annual ball. Without any expectation of special attention I had promised the boys I would be present. A committee, consisting of Mr. George Gregory, Mr. Harold Forcier and Mr. Sam Isaacson, appeared at the depot and I was scarcely allowed out of their sight during my entire stay in the city. They certainly did the honors royally. During the day I was shown over the city, taken down to Annapolis, and visited a number of the local theaters, among them "Lubin's," of which Mr. Hait, Jr., is manager. The Picture Garden on Lexington Street, J. W. Howard Bennett, manager. The Bluebell on Harford Avenue, of which Mr. C. W. Demme is owner and manager, and Mr. George T. Gregory, treasurer of the State Board of Operators, is operator. The Orpheum Theater, corner Jefferson and Bradford Streets, Mr. Chas. E. Alexander, manager, and Mr. Harold Forcier, operator. Of the theaters named the Picture Garden was the prettiest and most ornate. Its shape is peculiar—being in the form of the letter T with the cross-bar next the stage. The Bluebell Theater is worthy of remark for two or three reasons. In the first place, the entire stage of the little theater is of concrete construction. In the second place its interior decoration, which is plain and simple and very pretty, is entirely the work of Manager Demme and his operator, Mr. Gregory, as is also the panel decoration of the front of the house. The operating room is worthy of more than passing remark. Its walls are neatly painted and are also decorated in colors, a thing I have never before seen in an operating room. From the center of its ceiling, straight up to the open air is a vent flue, very nearly, if not quite 18 inches square. The operating room and rewinding room were as clean as a new pin. Everything had a place, and everything was in its place. Manager Demme had decorated his house with American flags in honor of the coming of the editor, and certainly proved himself a most cordial and pleasant host. One thing I must speak of in connection with this theater, viz.: the light. Mr. Gregory is using 60 cycle A. C. and a very low amperage—in fact, so low I could hardly believe his statement on that point to be correct. He claims to be only using 20 amperes to the arc, yet the light is a clear, soft white; very nearly, if not quite equal to D. C. In fact, it fooled me. I thought it was D. C. until I was told different. Mr. Gregory has sprun a new one on the editor. Whether it has any effect on the whiteness o the light or not I cannot say, but in view of what I saw, I would certainly like to have the brothers try the thing out and report. He soaks his carbons for two or three days in a salt water brine, strong enough t bear up an egg, after which he allows them to thoroughly dry. The Orpheum Theater, Mr. Chas. E. Alexander, manager, is also a very nic little house, nicely decorated and doing a good business. The operatin room of this house also has a ventilator similar to that of the Bluebell—in fact, there are two ventilators in this house: one in the operating roon and one in the rewinding room; in addition to which the wall shutter were fastened up with fine cord, a combination which insures from an fire danger or panic among the audience. Mr. Harold Forcier, operato at this house, is fortunate in having so excellent an operating room. might add that both Mr. Demme, of the Bluebell, and Mr. Alexander, o the Orpheum, are of the type of managers who appreciate good work o the part of their operator. The projection in all of the houses visited wa fairly good.

The ball itself was a pronounced success, both socially and financiall The large hall (Germania Hall) was full to overflowing. I might als add that when I left to take the train at 1 a. m. a few of the brothe themselves were not exactly empty, though the best of order was mai tained and a friendly spirit of brotherhood evinced throughout. A numbe of managers were present and fraternized with the boys. We had th pleasure of meeting Mrs. Howard, the wife of Mr. G. H. Howard, pres dent of the Union, and Mrs. Wm. Evans, wife of Brother Wm. Evan business agent. The editor can testify that both of these ladies are e cellent dancers. A delegation from the Washington Local was present an took part in the festivities. Altogether I spent a most enjoyable day an evening and my thanks are due to both the Local and the committee f the same.

NEW YORK OPERATORS' BALL.—Friday evening, January 26t Auxiliary Local Union No. 35, I. A. T. S. E., Moving Picture Operator gave their first annual grand ball in the famous Tammany Hall on 14 Street. The affair was both a social and financial success. The night w stormy and very disagreeable, still some 800 people were present a joined in the festivities. An excellent vaudeville and motion picture pr gram was put on, lasting from 9 to 11:30. Both the pictures and machin a Simplex, were furnished by the management of the Eden Musee. M Joseph Wheeler, the floor manager, maintained the best of order. To t credit of both himself and his assistants, let it be said that none of t weird, freak dances were allowed. Arrangement committee having t affair in hand were Mr. John Rickards, Mr. Gus Durkin, Mr. Jos. Basso Mr. Jas. Corrigan, Mr. Frank J. Gillick, Mr. H. N. Weinberger, M Robt. Goldblatt, Mr. D. Weinbery, Mr. Jacob S. Winick and Mr. S. Te

GREAT WASTE.—Nashwauk, Minn., writes: "I am connected to 2 volt D. C. lines. Have a new Motiograph Model No. 2. Am using Power's circular adjustable rheostat. I run with all the resistance c in and get a fine bright light, but it costs me 75 cents per hour for t machine alone. The rate is 9 cents per K.W. Am running two hous both on 220 D. C. and my light bills are enormous. How can I remedy Will a Ft. Wayne Compensarc, for D. C., as advertised in the World, it? I am thinking of putting in a plant of my own, made especially f moving picture work. Are they satisfactory?"

Running a projection arc on 220 volts, using a rheostatic resistance, normously wasteful. Suppose you arc pulling 40 amperes at the arc. ou would then be actually using 48 x 40 = 1,920 watts in the production light. You would be wasting 220 48 = 172 and 172 X 48 = 8,256 atts. In other words, you are wasting about four times as much power you are using. There have been some favorable reports from the Ft. Vayne D. C. Compensarc, also from the D. C. set sold by Mr. J. H. allberg, of this city. The Ft. Wayne Compensarc I have not personally een, but I have investigated Mr. Hallberg's set and have seen quite a umber of experiments made therewith. I believe you would be perctly safe in buying one of these sets under a safe and proper uarantee as to performance. Such sets stop the waste and will very rgely reduce your light bills. As to the individual light plant: If you e something of a mechanic, electrician and engineer and like to "monkey" ith such things, no doubt you could get very good results and reduce our current perhaps as low as 3½ cents per K.W. Many small town hibitors are doing this. The Detroit Engine Works, Detroit, Mich., will ve you full information as to their outfit, consisting of engine (gasoline kerosene, I forget which) and dynamo, concerning the performance of hich I have seen many enthusiastic letters of commendation.

VALVE RECTIFIERS.—Schenectady, N. Y., writes: "I notice on age 300, January 27th issue, a letter from Gary, Ind., in which the riter describes and illustrates the old Nodon Valve Rectifier. The prinple of rectification by means of aluminum electrodes in various soluons was discovered many years ago, but I know of no solution which up the present has been found to give good results. Some of the reasons hy such a rectifier as described is not desirable for use in connection ith moving picture machines are given below: First, current delivered om such a rectifier, even when operated cool, is extremely pulsating; at is, with each zero on the alternating wave there is a zero current on c rectifier. In addition to this there is considerable leakage of current om the aluminum plate, especially when the rectifier is hot, which causes art alternating current and part direct pulsating current to flow. Second, hen this rectifier is running cool, say below 90 or 100 degrees Fahrenheit, s efficiency will not be much over 50 per cent.; that is, 50 per cent. is st in the rectifier, to say nothing of a rheostat which would probably ave to be connected in series, as the rectifier delivers about 80 volts from 110 volt A. C. circut. Unless the cells are enormous, the rectifier will uickly heat up when running at 30 amperes, and when it does get hot it ases to rectify, except in a very small amount, and a large amount of ternating current would run through the arc. Third, all the solutions ith which I have experimented have tended to become thick and had to be enewed very frequently and with four, fifteen or twenty-gallon jars which e generally used, the renewal of this electrolyte would be no small matter.

"While such a rectifier would be comparatively cheap to make, and ould be manufactured by almost anybody, the cost of operation would be ore than with either a motor generator set or a mercury arc rectifier, nd the light would not be as good as could be obtained from the same urrent on the arc when using a mercury arc rectifier or motor generator et. I have had considerable experience in testing this type of rectifier, nd am acquainted with a great many designs operating on the same general rinciple, the above remarks applying in general to all I have seen. If e above mentioned objections could be overcome there would no doubt quite a field for such a rectifier."

I have a note from Gary, in which he says: "I should have stated that here are several solutions available for the rectifier, though I only menoned brine. The easiest to make is a saturated solution of common orax. I presume this omission was the cause of my communication being eated so lightly."

No Gary, you are in error. I did not mean to treat your letter "lightly" nd am sorry you took it that way. I only stated what I believed, and ill believe to be the fact, viz.: such a rectifier is impractical for moving cture work. I should like to have given the source of the Schenectady tter since it comes from a gentleman who cannot but be conceded to be authority on such matters. I am of the opinion that he is absolutely orrect. However, please understand that I am nevertheless pleased that ou have brought the subject up, since it is interesting and instructive, ven though impractical for moving picture work, where the amperage is eavy. The department is for the purpose of discussing just such matters this. If, however, it finds you, or any other correspondent, to be in rror in his conclusions, it is its duty to say so. There is no disgrace in eing mistaken. We all are at times. If you can prove yourself right nd us wrong we will be only too pleased to have you do so. It is the uth that is wanted, regardless of who may be correct or incorrect.

WELL.—New York City writes: "Allow me to settle a dispute which is ecoming a little personal; also to make a confession. I am the much bused New York operator who, as we say on the East Side, 'got your oat.' I am sure I did not put my queries the way they were printed. he fault is due to your trimming up letters or my own poor penmanip. I therefore ought, I believe, to be allowed space to make myself nderstood. The trouble with the wiring, which I have remedied, is this: e had four ceiling clusters, each 7 lights, connected on separate cut-outs. e only used one or two at a time, so it wasn't much trouble operating vitches. Recently we installed daylight pictures and the manager inructed me to replace clusters with single lights having green shades. his was to be only temporary, so, in order not to disfigure ceiling, I conected single sockets to some blocks carrying ceiling clusters, which placed single lamps, 16 c. p., on 4 circuits. As I would be obliged to work our switches to get sufficient light I soldered jumpers from one line to e other and separated them by circle-lsons (That's the only thing I can ake of it.—Ed.). That placed them all on one line and it worked fine. here fire danger comes in, which you are lamenting about, I am at loss know. The switch was operated from booth (wouldn't operating room ound better—Ed.). There is a law which requires that all house lights, cluding exits, have separate mains and switches down stairs, marked "To used in case of emergency." This is to insure a blowout in the opering room. So I pulled No. 10, in B. X., from the basement to a cut-out ox, tapped off the ceiling lights and connected to same switch. This put em all on one circuit. To separate same, so I could use them individually, broke exit line by installing snap-switch. This made it possible to use em either all on one circuit, or, by snapping switch, to use them sepaately. It worked like a charm. The reason fuse blew when I used up nd down stairs switches at one time was because the polarity was crossed. By changing wires at switches it was remedied. Altogether we now have four 16 c. p. lights on ceiling, four 8 c. p. side lights and four 4 c. p. exit lights which, even if operated on one circuit uses less than the 600 watts allowed by law. Am using No. 14 wire protected by 10 amp. fuses. Where does the danger come in? It might be against the New York rules, but it is allowed in Jersey. As regards other question, which got you up in the air, I was also misunderstood. What I meant was: high tension wires leave powerhouse, enter step-down transformer in which high voltage is decreased and amperage increased. There is a cut-out in cellar and one in operating room. When arc is lighted I pull as much as rheostat allows, but when arc isn't in use and I place ammeter in circuit between basement and operating room what does ammeter show, if anything? The question might be foolish, but I surely don't deserve a life sentence for asking it and I hope for a reply. As regards your finding out I am not licensed, you are a very poor Sherlock Holmes. Have carried a New York license since 1908; also have a New Jersey license."

I am pleased to give your letter space practically as written. This department does not intentionally do any one an injustice, but we can only go by what you write. Your former letter was signed "Sam Lang," quite plainly, which is not the signature on this one. I found no license had been issued to Sam Lang. Your wiring problem was not explained the same (I have the letter before me) and the last lines of the letter read: "When Edison wires enter building, do they deliver current (Amp.) or only voltage? Don't the carbons make the current flow."

That is precisely as it is worded, and if such queries do not set forth absolute, total ignorance of electrical action, then I must confess I am no judge of such matters. Remember, my friend, I can only go by what you actually write and when questions are stated as clearly as those two were there can be no argument as to their meaning. It is strange that you would ask such questions, inasmuch as your present letter seems to display a very good knowledge of electrical action. As to your query: If there is nothing else except the arc on the lines leading from basement to operating room, an ammeter should show no reading at all when arc is off; it should show zero. If it shows any current flow there is a ground or limited short somewhere.

The danger from fire comes from a man totally ignorant of electrical action, as I had a perfect right to suppose you to be, from your former letter, attempting to do wiring; particularly a somewhat complicated job. The fact that you crossed the polarity shows that you did not exercise proper care, even though possessed of knowledge. I was myself somewhat at fault, however, in answering you, as crossed polarity did not occur to me as a very likely cause of the fuse-blowing. Taken altogether, N. Y., I think you have no one but yourself to blame for the roasting you received. I find your letter to have been quoted correctly, and just as it was, save for necessary change in wording to make it appear right in print. I am returning it to you by mail.

LENS, ETC.—New York City writes: "Have looked into tension equalizer illustrated in January 27 issue. It is too heavy and complicated for use on present make of machines. Have Edison Type B. When starting it runs light. Half way through film it binds. Use light sperm oil. Can you give formula for coating asbestos curtain. Have tried everything I see advertised, but without satisfactory result. Curtain is ⅜ inch thick. Stereo picture is too large. What size lens should I use to get a 10-foot picture at 100 feet? Present size about 15 feet."

Calliper width of aperture. Multiply exact width, in fraction of an inch, by 100 and divide by 10. (See pages 67 and 68 of handbook). Result will be equivalent focus of required lens, as nearly as it can be figured. I think likely you have star set too tight against cam. Result may be that expansion, through heat of friction and from light, binds the parts. Sperm oil is an ideal lubricant, when pure. Pure sperm oil, however, is hard to get. Would rather recommend good grade of light dynamo oil. Probably painting curtain will prove as satisfactory as anything. Mix white lead with one-third boiled linseed oil and two-thirds turpentine, adding little ultramarine blue to bleach—just sufficient to give a very light shade of blue in the pot. Size curtain with glue size first, if in raw state. Have referred complaint as to advertiser to business department.

WASHINGTON.—The editor is in receipt of a most cordial invitation from Local Union No. 224, Washington D. C., to attend their ball on January 30th. It would give me much pleasure to visit the Washington Local and attend its ball. It is therefore with sincere regret that I am compelled to say no. I simply cannot possibly spare the time. I am "up to my neck" in work, and unable to spare even so much as one day. I appreciate the invitation, and its cordial tone. I am sure the Washington men would make my visit memorable, and the pleasure of meeting the men would amply repay me for the trip, without other inducement, were it possible to go. I literally stole the time from myself to go to Baltimore.

COMMUTATORS.—Winnipeg, Manitoba, Canada, writes: "Am keenly interested in moving picture work. I have operated Edison and Power's machines more than a year, but am now switchboard operator at the Winnipeg Electric Railways' power house. However, I am a subscriber for the World and take much interest in the Projection Department. I notice, in January 27 issue, an operator requests advice concerning care of commutator of his motor. Have had considerable experience with direct current commutators. Operated six 800 K. W. generators for this company for two years, hence feel qualified to offer advice in such matters. For one thing, never, never use oil to clean a commutator. It is very destructive to the mica insulation between the segments. Before we begin using compound dressing one of our generators was out of commission for two months through nothing but using oil to clean commutators. The best thing we have found, so far, is to clean the commutator with a clean piece of cheese cloth (I think canvas is even better, owing to likelihood of threads from cheesecloth wrapping around commutator.—Ed.), after which rub some National Electric Compound lightly across. This reduces sparking to a minimum. It also assists in keeping the brushes in good order. I am strongly against the use of emery-cloth. It almost invariably contains particles of iron. These particles have a tendency to get into the armature and, if used freely, will soon destroy it, owing to the particles clinging to the fields and rubbing the armature as it revolves. (Would not these iron particles also get into the mica insulation between the segments, thus causing short between the bars, with consequent burning? Such a short would show as a ring of fire on the commutator. It seems to me this is a greater danger than the other.—Ed.) The best quality of [illegible] is far superior, there being no iron present. It is coated with finely powdered glass, which is itself an insulator. If the compound cannot be obtained of your electrical dealer write the National Electric Compound Company, No. 12 East 23d Street, New York City. It is a little expensive, but certainly pays in the long run.

"I fail to see how steady projection light can be maintained with a shunt wound generator, for the reason that the voltage will drop to zero if you freeze the carbons for any length of time (It would drop instantly, I should say.—Ed.) owing to armature reactance overcoming the fields. If the house lights be operated from the same machine it would cause annoying flickering of the incandescent lights when the arc is started. Compound generators are the only thing to produce steady light with, for the reason that there is the series field in addition to the shunt, which operates to maintain steady voltage."

We are obliged to Winnipeg for his excellent letter. He is, I believe, in error in supposing incandescent lights would be operated from the same machine the arc is operated from. This might be done where the generator is a 110 volt machine, but the question under discussion is a generator delivering arc voltage only, operating without resistance other than that peculiar to the arc itself. Of course if the line voltage is itself high, say 220 or more, then there would be some advantage, from the incandescent end, of installing a 110 volt generator for both arc and house lights. On the whole, however, it would be much better, I think, to use low voltage generator (if line voltage does not exceed 220), for the projection arc, and operate house lights in series of two. This has the disadvantage of putting out two lights when one burns out, but the other way has the much greater disadvantage in waste of energy in a 110 volt rheostat.

I am, on the whole, becoming pretty well satisfied that, given a dynamo of the "constant current" type, the operation of a projection arc without rheostatic resistance is entirely practical. I am deeply interested in this subject for the reason that, if feasible and practical, it means the elimination of the enormous waste in rheostats. In considering the "feasible and practical" end of it, however, I am compelled to take into very serious consideration the question: while a competent operator may be able to deliver the "goods" with such an outfit, how about the thousands of men who are lacking in both electrical and projection knowledge in greater or less degree? Will they be able to produce satisfactory results with such an outfit? I feel that if I give the matter unqualified approval and endorsement, many managers might be led to invest in something, only to discover that there was a fly in the ointment. It must be remembered that, at this stage of the game, there is a very limited supply, comparatively, of operators who can, by any stretch of the imagination, be said to possess a good knowledge of electrical action, or who are competent to deal successfully with problems which might arise with the advent of generator and motor of considerable capacity, the current from which would have to be handled quite differently from that delivered from a 110 or 220 volt line, through resistance. I hope, through my books and the department, in time, to educate operators into actual competency. I am trying to induce them to study and learn, to the end that projection be bettered, salaries raised and that there be knowledge in the operating room to cope with this or any other question which may arise. Much has already been accomplished. I feel that operators are beginning to understand me, and my aims. Many who formerly were opposed to the dissemination of knowledge are now in different frame of mind and ready and willing to secure all the information possible. They thought the spread of knowledge would tend to create more operators, thus still further overcrowding the field and reducing salaries. Instead, salaries are increasing, even in many unorganized places. But for increased knowledge and efficiency unions would have found it a far more difficult matter to secure increased salaries. Get into the knowledge wagon and help us raise the standard of the profession of operating until it takes its place, where it rightly belongs, as among the foremost, high class professions of the world. Other letters on commutator care will receive space shortly.

SHERMAN MEN ORGANIZE.—From Sherman, Tex., comes the following: "L. U. 502, I. A. T. S. E., Sherman, Tex., held its first regular monthly meeting Jan. 14. Regular meetings will be held first Sunday of each month. Officers were elected as follows: Pres., Albert D. Dean; V.-P., Geo. C. Hawn; Fin. sec., Blaine Day (one of our correspondents.—Ed.); Rec. Sec., Ed. Bonham; Sergt.-at-Arms, Ben Frazier; Trustees, Roy McFarland, Dick Reynolds and Clyde Ford."

Success to the new organization. Proceed carefully. Remember that a union is nothing more or less than a business organization and in order to succeed must be conducted as such. Consider each move carefully. Remember that might does not make right, and that one great field for activity on the part of operators' unions lies in the raising of the efficiency of its own members. More knowledge makes the matter of increased salaries all the more easy of accomplishment.

APPRENTICE.—St. Louis writes, saying he first tried learning to operate by taking a position as operator at a theater. Presumably he was discharged for incompetency. At any rate he is now attending a school for operators, and wants to know if he can join the union on completion of his school course. Is 19 years old and wishes to be "on the job" by the time he reaches age of 20.

Most likely you cannot join immediately after leaving school. You should first secure a position as operators' apprentice and serve under some good man at least six months. No school can make an operator of you. It can give you a good grounding in theory, after which a few months' practical experience will convert you into a practical operator, provided you study hard and observe closely. You may then join the union.

FILM TROUBLE.—N. Y. City writes: "Can you inform me why Pathe, Essanay and Selig films show sprocket holes on right side of screen? First noticed it on my Power's No. 5 machine and thought intermittent sprocket was out of line. However, the same thing occurs on the No. 6. All other films are O. K. I receive much very valuable information from the department. Note some have trouble loosing lower loop on No. 6 machine. Had same difficulty and secured the new one-roller bracket from the company. Since then haven't lost a loop but once in ten weeks. Have other troubles but refer to my Handbook, which I value above everything else and find the solution. Why is it that some scenes in Selig films a clear and others foggy?"

Examine the films and see if there is a greater margin on one side th on the other. Very likely, however, the guide rollers on top of gates your machine are out of line with aperture; also maybe the intermitte sprockets. If the trouble only occurs on certain films, and all others a O. K., it would indicate a part of the fault to lie in the films. However, think there is something wrong in the lining of the rollers and sprockets the machines also. I cannot answer your last query. That matter is up Brother Selig. Such faults, if they exist, may be in the photography itsel or in the development of the negative, possibly, also, in the printing of t positive, though I believe the latter is not likely. On second thought, so films have wider sprocket holes than others. I do not remember which which in this matter. Possibly the films named are those having the wi holes, and the others do not show by reason of the narrower perforati This would certainly indicate the fault to be in the lining of your gu rollers or intermittent sprockets, or both, though improper perforation m be the cause of trouble you mention.

FILM WIDTH.—Athabasca Landing, Alberta, Canada, writes: "To cide a bet we shall be glad if you will inform us what is the width of film. Is it the full stock width from outside edges of sprocket holes, o it the width of picture only?"

As commonly used, the "width of the film" is understood to mean width over all, from outside edge to outside edge. The measurement is inches. The picture width is supposed to be 1 x ¾ inches, though so cameras print wider than that.

OUTSIDE SHUTTER ON POWER'S 5.—Sapulpa, Okla., writes: "I a running Power's No. 6 and No. 5, using Fort Wayne compensarc on volts, 60 cycle. I put an outside shutter on No. 5 last Sept. and if y were in the house you could not tell the difference in the pictures either machine. I put this attachment on myself at a cost of $2.50 a never have had the least trouble. The days of the 'would-be operator' a gone in Oklahoma. I have a good man to work for and you have to d liver the goods. I have been with the Yale one year the 15th of th month. I formerly worked at the Palace at Tulsa, Okla., before Mr. I Porte, whom I read of in the Department several weeks ago. I pu chased one of your Handbooks when they first came out and it is t 'operator's standby.' I have received some valuable information from I never miss reading the 'World.' I would miss a meal first. I will ha some pictures taken of the No. 5 if you wish to publish them. They m benefit some brother operator."

Many thanks for your letter and appreciation. We shall be glad have the photos.

SUNLIGHT SCREEN.—St. Louis, Mo., writes: "What do you thi about the screen known as the 'Sunlight Screen,' made in Chicago? Wou you advise its installation?"

I have not, as yet, seen a picture projected on the screen named. I a however, informed by others, who have, that its surface, while semi-r flecting, produces an excellent illumination with comparatively small a perage and at the same time does not cause an objectionable increase in t flicker. The latter probably being due to its surface, which is somewhat the matte order. Not having personally viewed the actual performance this screen, I cannot give the above as a statement of fact but the scre is certainly worthy of careful investigation by those in search of an i proved projection surface.

EVERY THEATER NEEDS THIS SERVICE.

One of the strongest attractions that has ever been pr sented to the theater-going public is now being furnishe by Hunton-Fell-Elliott, Inc., 1328 Broadway, New Yor This company is supplying moving picture and vaudevil theaters with a daily service of current event news slides b Underwood & Underwood, the world's famous news photog raphers.

The public is keenly interested in the leading events the day immediately after they occur. This service cove every event that is interesting—every occurrence that thri —news pictures of wars, sports and all the leading nation and international events.

It is one of the greatest educational features of the da and is pulling large crowds to the theaters that have book it. The slides reach you about the same time your loc papers are running accounts of the subjects furnished. It very easy to understand why the public will follow such a up-to-the-minute service, that is only possible in this wo derful age. Underwood & Underwood have a large staff photographers in every country in the world, which insur your securing all the leading events of the day, no matt where they occur.

While the great Equitable fire was in progress, theate all over the East were showing the most important fi scenes to crowded houses.

The public has responded so strongly to this attracti that many managers realize news slides have come to sta and have added this service to their regular show.

Four slides are furnished daily, twenty-four per week, a cost of twelve dollars per week.

"FOR THE HONOR OF THE FAMILY" (Vitagraph), January 27.—his is a melodrama, but as all know there is a vast difference possible etween the worst and the best of these. More than one melodramatic icture in both the Licensed and Independent camps, of late, has been rapid nd almost idiotic in its absolute disregard for possibility. We even like a elodrama to "stretch a point" occasionally when by doing so it can reach few more tears; but beyond a certain line they ought never to go. This icture doesn't cross that line. What it shows may not all be probable, in act is not, but it shows nothing that is certainly unreasonable. It is a ory of military life in India. The brother of the colonel's ward is a eutenant. He is the only one who knows it and he won't tell. In the antonment there is another lieutenant who is a Lothario and this villain as the simple girl in his toils. To frustrate the villain, the brother has make himself known to his sister. Villain enters, pulls gun and in ruggle is wounded. Girl escapes and hero is arrested on complaint of illain. To save his family's honor, hero refuses to say a word; is going take his punishment; but the girl confesses. Hero is then praised and illain has to resign. Mr. Costello plays the brother; Miss Neason the ster; Mr. Dunn the villain and Mr. Van Dyke Brooke, the colonel. is an excellent filler.

"JOSEPH IN EGYPT" (Cines), January 27.—It is not a Biblical drama the sense that Athalia is, for it keeps strictly to the story as written by e author of Exodus. It is, therefore, as interesting as a drama and his- rical also. The early scenes show pastoral scenes in the Land of Moab here the sons of Abraham keep their flocks. These flocks and their epherds are seen. Then we see the sale of Joseph into Egypt and, after at the scenes are mostly in sumptuous Egyptian palaces. The story is ery well put on. It is dignified in every way, acting, settings and me- anical work, and some of the scenes are poetic and some are grand. It a very sure feature for the right kind of audience.

"THE U. S. VOLUNTEER LIFE SAVING CORPS, NEW YORK ITY" (Edison), January 27.—This vocational picture shows a glimpse of ock life in New York City in summer. We see the dock, the boat of the olunteer life-savers, the idlers on the dock, etc. Some swimmer in the ater needs help. A newsboy standing near dives in and swims to the scue. The volunteers, who are employed near by, run out to the boat, wer it and row to help the rescuer. They are not very speedy. Con- asted with this we see how paid life-savers on the pleasure beaches work. e picture shows different methods of handling drowning people, both fore they have been got to land and after.

"THE NEW EDITOR" (Edison), January 27.—On the same reel with e very valuable, vocational picture above, this humorous and pleasing cident is very acceptable. The new editor, who had just bought the pa- r, was a woman. The cowboys didn't know that. They shot-up the town d she wrote a hot editorial. The ranch owner saw it and gave the boys ts. They came back to town, stopped to get some more "red-eye" and en proceeded to the paper's office to give said rats to the editor, but und her at her desk and became bashful. It is well acted and well photo- aphed. The value of the educational picture on this reel to people who im makes it a sure feature. Places near water should advertise it as such.

"ECONOMY" (Essanay), January 26.—Maybe this lively comedy will use memories pleasant or otherwise in the minds of very many who see A man and wife decide to save money and Mrs. Jinks carries with her savings bank in which unfortunate Jinks is forced to deposit all spare sh. He has a hard time with thirty cent meals, low-priced suits and other tures of a similar character. Ultimately they save fifty dollars. All ght have been well, only Mrs. Jinks discovered a creation at her milliner's ich pleased her fancy and had it sent home. The price tag was fifty llars. Jinks is so disgusted that he smashes the hat, box and all over his fe's head and swears all sorts of oaths that he will never practice economy ain.

"DOOLEY'S REWARD" (Essanay), January 26.—Dooley is a homeless g and is subjected to all the abuse and neglect to which such unfor- nate brutes are heir. One day he picks up a lady's purse and his reward a good home and love all the rest of his days. Lovers of dogs will en- this picture since it teaches what to them will seem important. To- her, they make excellent program fillers.

'LOVE FINDS THE WAY" (Vitagraph), January 26.—Here is a melo- ma which will win applause in most theaters. The average audience es nothing better than to see the persecuted under-dog win. The story ges upon a love affair in which a wealthy man is promised the girl by father in consideration of a loan. They start for a minister, but the o becomes stationary near a railroad crossing where the girl's lover is ployed. While the father and his favorite are searching for gasoline, the l tells her lover of the situation. They quickly plan an elopement and spinning down the track on a handcar just as the two men appear. Then re is a race, the hand car on the track with the young people aboard, h the automobile. Although we have seen other chases of this kind, it a close one for a time. They reach a trestle which gives the handcar advantage. Further on the handcar meets a minister on horseback. ey press him into service, he mounts the car and the ceremony is per- med at a very rapid clip (this is not the first time this has been shown). ortly afterward they meet the infuriated father and the equally in- iated wealthy lover. It is too late, however, and the father gives the young couple his blessing. There is no question about the interest this film excites, even though there is nothing original about its plot.

"HIS MOTHER" (Kalem), January 26.—The story in this film which is redolent of the auld sod is of the heart and, while it has some uncertainty in parts of it, the end proves that even successful men do not always forget. A mother in Ireland, a fine Biddie, too, gives her life savings to her son to enable him to come to America where a kind banker, who has heard him play a violin and appreciates his talent, assists him to start in a musical career. Not long after he is the rage of the season. His mother, tiring of waiting to hear from him, comes to America and goes to the concert where he plays. Later she inquires his home address from a stage hand. The man leads her to the young man's home. The genius leaves his guests and greets her. Then he takes her inside, introduces her and tells them all that it was her sacrifice. As was said at the beginning, this is a heart story which makes a favorable impression upon an audience. Miss Gene Gauntier plays the banker's daughter; Mr. Hollister, the genius; but the old woman seemed made for her part. It is a good feature.

"A SAFE PROPOSITION" (Selig), January 26.—The story in this film is told around a busy business office where the stupidity of a janitor fastens a theft of money upon an entirely innocent man. Ultimately, however, the complication is solved and the employee's wounded feelings are saved with an advance in position and an increase in salary. Perhaps the most interesting feature in the picture is the one which shows how easy it is to fasten a crime upon an innocent person. On the same reel with it is a travelog, "Seeing Spokane." It is well photographed and the two together will serve as a filler.

"A DIPLOMAT INTERRUPTED" (Selig), January 22.—A melodrama in which a United States colonel who has charge of fortifications loses at cards more than he can pay to a Russian count who is a spy and wants to get plans of the fortress. The count loves the colonel's older daughter. The colonel in despair, compromises with his honor and, rather than give him the daughter, prepares to hand over to him what he thinks is the plan of the fort. His younger daughter and her lover, however, have eavesdropped and change the papers. The other daughter also discovers the trouble and tells her father that she'll marry the count to save his honor. At the climax, the frustrated count snatches the envelope and hurries away. He finds worthless papers in it. The story outrages human probability, common sense and even decency. There were some very uncritical members of the audience who seemed to like it. It is well photographed. The scenes in several instances are very pretty.

"WITH A KODAK" (Biograph), January 25.—This comedy illustrates the possibilities which reside in a kodak. The maid and the secretary were discharged. The maid was fired by the wife and the secretary was fired by the husband for the usual reason. Later, by using a kodak, they managed to secure evidence which helped them to reinstatement. The girl photographed the wife and the man, and the man snapped the girl and the husband. But this stroke of fortune didn't last long. There is fun in the story and the working out is admirably done.

"PANTS AND PANSIES" (Biograph), January 25.—While this comedy is not altogether new, the same idea having appeared a number of times before, this did not seem to act as a drawback in the New York Theater where it was seen. The gist of the complication is that the salesman has two bundles. One contains pansies, which he intends for his sweetheart and the other a pair of pants which he intends sending to a shop where another girl he knows is saleslady. The boxes are mixed by the intelligent errand boy and the girl receives the pants with a note which expresses the hope that he will see her wearing them when he calls that night. The resulting scenes, especially the last, where the girls, who know each other, come together, the wrong one wearing the pansies and the right one holding up the pants in disgust make the picture good—it is in the acting, especially of the wrong girl.

"ALIAS, BILLY SARGENT" (Essanay), January 25.—The diamond broker thought he had a large customer. The probable purchaser left word with Mrs. Steele for the broker to meet him that night. With visions of the opera ahead of her she forgot the message. The broker felt somewhat disturbed and showed it. But the poor wife put detectives upon the so-called purchaser's trail. They discovered that he had been arrested for burglary. Then the broker realized that her forgetfulness instead of losing him a big sale saved him from financial ruin. A good story and well acted. It will be an excellent filler.

"THE OFFICE FAVORITE" (Lubin), January 25.—This is a pretty story, such as will appeal to romantic young people who work in business offices. It is a melodrama that baldly fishes for tears and doesn't distain to use any artificial expedient to get emotions. Two crooks decide to rob an office and the woman secures employment there. She manages to ingratiate herself so completely in the boss's favor that the regular office stenographer is about to lose her position. The boss, an unmarried man, writes two letters, one to the stenographer, discharging her, and the other to the new girl doubling her salary as a valentine. Jimmie, the boy, doesn't like the way things are going and he exchanges the letters. The result is that the new girl reports to her pal that she is fired and they decide to rob the safe that night. The stenographer, because her salary was raised, is working late and hears the crooks. She telephones for the police and faints. The crooks are caught and the boss, reading of the robbery in a distant city, hurries home and finds the stenographer sick abed. He makes her presents of fruit and good things. When she returns to the office, they all give her a grand reception. The office is decked with flowers for the occasion, which gives a very emotional ending. The photographs are very good. It's a filler.

"TWO OLD PALS" (Selig), January 25.—The interest in this picture centers in the intelligence of the elephant. This big beast is Otto's pal and they are both in trouble together, one being much in debt and the other having been attached by the sheriff because of said debts. Big Otto leads his old friend and together they escape. The elephant enters a freight car and drags his master after him. They arrive in a town where there is a baker shop. After a night's rest the big pal makes a raid on the loaves of bread and then rushes the growler at the town pump. The almost human naturalness of this big beast's doings makes them delightfully funny. It is a very good comedy. Perhaps it is too slight to serve as a feature; but it has the right quality and will surely be popular. It is not quite full length; is very well photographed and the audience liked it.

"THE SCAPEGOAT" (Selig), January 30.—Once a scapegoat always a scapegoat, is what this picture seems to teach. It doesn't waken very deep sympathy for the hero who sacrifices himself for love in a sentimental and, when one thinks of it, in an unworthy way. The first scene doesn't open the situation. It merely shows the hero in an office in the East acting as though he were a scapegoat, but in some indefinite yet suggestive way. Perhaps he is a scapegoat in some such way as the boy hero of Bernstein's play, "The Thief," was. Because, whatever happens, he has to go away and we find him next in the West where he has just been elected sheriff. The brother of his sweetheart robs a bank and with his band is carrying away the loot. The sheriff with a big posse chases them. We see some magnificent riding through a rough country. The band separates and the sheriff, single handed, captures this brother. He is bringing him in handcuffed, but meets the sister. She pleads and he turns over to her his shield, the key to the cuffs and the bank's money, the loot, and the last scene shows him riding away to Mexico. Surely it is not a very strong picture. It has some thrilling moments and some magnificent scenery. It will serve as a filler.

"THE MORTGAGE" (Melies), January 25.—A romance in an oil country with a situation that has been used quite a number of times before, but with incidents so arranged as to give a good deal of freshness of interest. The mortgage on the ranch, which is owned by a rich neighbor in love with the poor rancher's daughter, together with a pressing need of money, serves to break the engagement of the girl with her true lover. She reluctantly accepts the rich suitor much to her father's delight. The poor man, however, strikes oil at the critical moment and comes back in the nick of time to pay off the mortgage and claim the girl. The interest of the picture springs from the dramatic struggle of the lover to get down to his oil. This part of the picture is the freshest and most commendable in every way. It is fairly well photographed, has only a few minor faults and has some truly thrilling moments. It seemed to please the larger number of the audience and will make a very desirable filler.

"WALK—YOU WALK" (Kalem), January 31.—A rather dull farce in which some pretty girls get even with a fresh youth who owns a motor car. He had invited one of the girls out, but as soon as they reached a lonely place had become fresh. This she resented and he ordered her to get out and walk. The girls plan to turn the tables, and get him to take them on a long trip. Then they run away home with the car and leave him to walk back. They do some farcical driving of the automobile and get the owner of it into trouble. Only one person in a large audience was heard to laugh and that was when the young man attempted to strike one of the girls in the face, but was prevented by the country cop who jerked him away so that he fanned the air. There are some good photographs of rough Western hillsides. It will serve as a filler.

"MOTHER AND THE GIRLS" (Edison), January 31.—A comedy with a first-class situation that is typically American and that fulfills one of art's important functions, viz.: it criticizes life for the sake of health and humanity. The mother let the girls play while she did the hard work. Consequently they were butterflies and knew so little about cooking that, when mother fell sick, and they had to begin, their work was idiotic. This is a little overdrawn; but serves by way of contrast to the real comedy with which the picture closes. Pa, to teach the girls a lesson, invited the two lovers to dinner while the mother was sick. The table manners of these men (they throw the burnt chops on the carpet) were not very reasonable. In the end the girls get their mother to teach them how to cook. For the first three-quarters of the film the story drags heavily; but the last quarter is very good. If in the early part of the picture the situation hadn't been rubbed-in, the result, one feels, would have been much stronger. It is well photographed and well acted and will serve as a filler.

"JENKINS STOPS EVERYTHING" (Cines), January 30.—Jenkins was drinking pretty hard and reading the bible on the side—the story of Joshua and how he stopped the sun and moon. Jenkins fell asleep. We are shown his dream. He finds himself on the street. It's a moving picture until he waves his hands and then it freezes, everybody is caught foot-up, so to speak. He walks down to the beach and stops the sea—billow and splash are caught and kept. This seems to be a very fresh idea and the picture is both interesting and amusing as a comparison between a moving picture and a still one. It shows how much "artistic feeling" the movement gives to a picture. It is certainly very commendable and audiences will be pleased to see it.

"BESSIE HAS THREE AUNTS" (Cines), January 30.—This farce, on the same reel with the above, is very light. It has an amusing situation which is not very new; but it is pleasingly acted and will be acceptable. Some of the typically Italian settings are very pretty. Bessie is an awkward but comely girl. Her three aunts don't want her to marry the hero of the picture; one of the aunts is, herself, in love with him. The girl scuttles a rowboat. The aunts take her for a row. The boat begins to fill. The hero makes an offer to take the aunts into his boat if they'll let the girl marry him.

S. S. Hutchinson, president of The American Film Mfg. Co., who has been visiting at the Western studios of the company at La Mesa, So. Calif., returned to Chicago on Monday, February 5th. Mr. Hutchinson was accompanied by his wife.

Independent.

"BROWN MOVES TO TOWN" (Imp), February 3.—Brown, the artist had packed his trunks with all his spare trousers in and moved to town He was seated on a packing case in his studio when a note told him that hi trunk checks had got mixed and that he'd have to call and identify them On getting off the box, he tore his only trousers badly. The comedy show his experiences in attempting to travel in a dressing gown. At the expres office he is taken for a lunatic. Dr. Mary Brown, his neighbor, is calle up to identify him. It is amusing and very well acted and photographed With the other number on this reel, it will prove a good program lightene

"O'BRIEN'S BUSY DAY" (Imp), February 3.—O'Brien was a well-to do Irish gentleman who wasn't too good to drink from a growler nor to proud to smoke a clay pipe. He is shown as enjoying a very strenuous day In the evening, he naturally wanted to enjoy a quiet smoke, but what wit the daughter's beaux and their music, and the cook and her beau in th kitchen and neighbors on the roof, he found no quiet corner. It is amusin as shown, also well photographed and well acted, but not very original.

"THE POWER OF CONSCIENCE" (Imp), February 1.—A picture tha shows the difficulties of a man of business when he has an expensiv family. Worried to death in the office, he finds at home bills, bills, bill invitations to dances and little or no home quiet. His little boy is neglecte and his wife shows a frivolous disposition. Then there comes the tim when the schemer and villain, who has taken a fancy to the wife, has the in his power. Somehow, the man at a dance got possession of a diamon pin worth a great deal of money and was tempted to keep it, but returne it. How he got it was not emphasized and this reviewer missed it alt. gether. The impression of the whole is that the story, a good one as fa as it goes, is left unfinished. It is a well acted picture and a well phot graphed one and has distinguished stage settings. It is hardly a stron feature; but although many will be disatisfied with its ending, it will deepl interest.

"THE KID AND THE SLEUTH" (Imp), January 29.—The messenge boy, reading of the adventures of Nick Carter, has a dream. The grea sleuth by his powers and also by his apparant nonchalance astonishes th messenger boy. Most of the scenes of this burlesque are very amusing The unhappy, helpless maiden, in the power of the villain, is being carrie off. At the end Nick gives the messenger only a nickel for the labor he pu into rescuing her; then the boy has an awakening. It is well acted, we photographed and laughter making. Will be a good filler. About 700 fee of film.

"A DAY ON A BUFFALO RANCH" (Imp), January 27.—An indu trial picture with some exciting incidents, like riding a young buffalo, ri ing cows, etc. It also has some very pretty scenes. The herd of buffal is very large. We see a killing of a bull by Indians and then the cuttin up of the meat. The photographs are good. It is a commendable film about 400 feet.

"ALL A MISTAKE" (Imp), January 27.—A comedy picture in whic the heroine's husband misunderstands the affectionate, unfinished note th his young wife was writing to her brother and, in a rage, decides to leav her. The suspense, brought about by the quarrel, while both, in a fu with each other, are packing their trunks, is well maintained and the clima is finished with an acceptable snap. It is a commendable picture. It very well acted, well photographed and, although slight, will serve ver well indeed in any bill. About 600 feet.

"CARDINAL FARLEY'S HOME-COMING" (Champion), January 29.- Beginning with a picture of the incoming ship that carried his eminen home, it shows all the interesting events in the hearty reception that we comed the great prelate. There are some excellent photographs of Ca dinal Farley, of the crowds, etc. It will interest spectators. The phot graphs of the procession are only fair.

"DING DONG BELL" (Champion), January 29.—Another of the Chan pion Mother Goose rhymes pictured for children and telling the story the cat in the well. It shows all the characters who had a part in th event, from Johnnie Green who put her in, to Tommy Stout who pulled he out. It is a good show for children, although poor pussy is rather rughl handled. The photographs are excellent.

"LOVE AND LEMONS" (merican), January 29.—Some will see fac tious suggestions in this title; but the picture was set in a lemon grove an is an industrial as well as a story. The pretty grove owner (Miss Bush inspects her property thoroughly and sees to all processes, picking, wasl ing, packing, etc. She discharges a somewhat unruly, but good lookin workman (Kerrigan) who is in love with her. The villain, another worl man who also wants to marry her, attempts to ruin her credit with th packers; but the discharged man shows him up and the villain when la seen was still running. The photographs are good and although the sto is slight it is interesting and, besides, the picture is very instructive. will serve very well indeed to fill a program and give substance to it.

"THE BEST POLICY" (American), February 1.—This picture has bee reviewed on page 130 of the Moving Picture World, January 13, 1912.

"THE MAN UNDER THE BED" (Reliance), February 3.—The dr matic situation in this picture, is, at least now and then, breathlessly e citing. An escaped convict, wounded and fleeing from guards who are h on his trail, takes refuge in a large house. The owner is away and h wife is alone in her room. The convict rushes in, locks the door an crawls under the bed. The husband returns. The door of the room locked and the woman dare not open it and she dare not even tell her hu band what the trouble is. The convict's black soft hat is lying in the hal The husband finds this and naturally draws the wrong inference. Just the husband breaks through the door, the keepers arrive. The convict found to be dead. It is a strong picture for the most part; but not whol so, and this keeps it from being a sure feature. It is substantial and wi be acceptable. It is well photographed and of full length. Miss Fernle plays the woman; Mr. Walthall the burglar.

"SOLOMON'S SON" (Reliance).—A story of Jewish people, a fathe Solomon, his son and an orphan, an adopted daughter. In the early scen the father and the son are peddlers; suspenders, etc., are their stock. Th next scenes show the father as elderly, but prosprous, in a small way. Th boy goes to college and becomes a lawyer; makes friends in society a rows so snobbish that his old father seems to him to disgrace him. This ngers the old man and he curses him; but a day of great trouble comes to e son and he is thankful to come back to his home and his people, the nly refuge in his sorrow that he has, and there he is kindly received. It is istinctly a human-interest picture. It is well acted, Mr. Wm. Walthall eing the son of Solomon and Miss Ruth Robinson being the adopted or- han. These two are very ably supported. It can safely be called a fea- ure. It is of full length and well photographed.

"THE EXPLORER" (Powers), February 3.—A love story of New York ity in which a note from the girl to the explorer who lived in town was st through an accident to the messenger. Not receiving the expected nswer, the explorer joined an expedition to South America. The girl, eading of this and not hearing from him in spite of her favorable answer his request, fell sick. At the time of his return she had become con- alescent and they meet at a reception. They dance together; but she drops ead in his arms. There is nothing in the picture to prepare us for this ather peculiar ending. Aside from it, the picture is very fair. It gives a easonable idea of cultivated people and how they live in New York to-day. he acting is good, the photography good and it will be a good filler.

"RECEPTION TO CARDINAL FARLEY" (Powers), January 27.—This icture gives very good views of his eminence and of the gentlemen who et him and conducted him to the cathedral. It also shows good views f the ship, the "Berlin," and of the crowds on the street. The photo- raphs are fair; one of them, showing the immense crowd near St. Patrick's, very praiseworthy.

"BEAUTIFUL CHRISTIANA" (Powers).—A very interesting travelog howing views seen by a traveler by water, as he approaches the chief city f Sweden. These scenes are very well photographed and often very pretty.

"BILLY'S SURRENDER" (Powers), January 30.—A picture in which n extremely pretty girl converts a gang of tough thugs. She had fallen in ve with one of them who had protected her from the others. One day hile in a saloon taking a soft drink with this man she overhears a plot to urglarize the office of a well-known merchant. She slips away and warns e merchant. Her friend, not knowing why she had gone, follows and verhears her telephoning. He pleads with her to save the gang, his pals. he police are already on the way to make the arrest; but she and the an hurry back to the saloon and she saves the boys from arrest by claim- g that they are "her class." The photographs are good, the acting fair. is not a closely knit, dramatic picture, but it will serve excellently as a ller. Miss Elder plays the girl.

"THE FIXER FIXED" (Solax), January 31.—Billy, in the early scenes, shown as very poor and downcast because he can't capture Sue with hom he is in love. He would have committed suicide if any comfortable eans of accomplishing it had been available. His rich chum comes to isit him and also falls in love with Sue; but is bashful and gets Billy to uy her presents with his money. Billy thinks he is in clover; but Sue nows where the money comes from and soon the bashful chum gets better cquainted and she tells Billy that she couldn't marry a man who spent his oney so freely. It is amusingly acted and well photographed. A good ller.

"THE FAIRY FALLS OF OSWEGO" (Solax).—A truly beautiful blue rint of the Oswego Falls in winter. It is short and will be liked. It is on e same reel with the above.

"MIGNON" (Solox), February 2.—This elaborately staged picture has een reviewed in The Moving Picture World, page 288, January 27, 1912.

"LUCKY MAN" (Majestic), February 2.—It was not the individual but e species that the woman thought lucky. In a dream she becomes a man nd drinks and smokes. Going out tipsy, she has the hard experiences of masher. After a rude awakening, she finds herself a woman again. It certainly original. Its photographs are excellent and, being a novelty, ill be liked.

"AN OLD LADY OF TWENTY" (Majestic), February 2.—In a play alled "An Old Lady of Twenty," a pretty actress (Mabel Trunnelle) was ast for an old lady's part. Her neighbor got a glimpse of her made up or her part and, being an artist, persuaded her to pose for him. As a rank she also fixed herself up to be a girl of sixteen. He thought the wo were mother and daughter. He was in trouble. He loved them; but e mother was too old and the daughter too young to marry. Then he aw her just as she was and he found her just the right age. The pic- ure shows Mabel Trunnelle's versatility. It also is a very pleasing pic- ure. It is almost a feature, well photographed and good.

"A GAME FOR TWO" (Majestic), February 4.—"What is sauce for the ander is sauce for the goose," is how the proverb puts it. The husband this picture is a literary man very much engrossed, and his wife is a it of a fly-away, very fond of society. There is a co-worker, a literary oman, on the one hand, and a "society blade" on the other. The wife oes with the young society man to take supper in his apartment which appens to be adjoining that of the literary woman. She leaves a note elling her husband where she is. He follows and there is a comic and ughable mixup. The young wife locks the society man out on the fire scape, her husband in the kitchen and the literary woman, who has un in, in a clothes closet, all for the night. She herself hurries home. t is well acted and well photographed and, if not quite a feature, it will ake a good filler.

"FICKLE WOMAN" (Lux), February 2.—Lord de Vere rescues a harming widow who was hurt in a motor accident. Both his nephews make ve to her and she encourages both. Lord de Vere is called upon to arbi- ate and uses Solomon's wisdom in making his decision; he marries her imself. It is short, light and amusing but not a laughter making picture. Vill serve with the other on this reel as a filler.

"SKIVVY AND THE MAT" (Lux), February 2.—Skivvy is a house aid, a very comic character, who has appeared before in Lux films. She as a big mat to clean and she raises so much dust that she is driven from illar to post about town. It is wholly a clown picture, a farce with rush nd knock down incidents. The qualities of such pictures are well knwon.

"THE AWAKENING" (Eclair), February 4.—The picture opens with a eautiful view of the entrance to the College of the City of New York. group of boys are shown leaving for a vacation. They stop at a saloon and, although the hero of the picture is coaxed away by his friend, he reaches home drunk to be received by his mother, sister and sweetheart, lovingly, sadly. He has a very bad dream in which he sees himself on trial for his life and convicted of murder. It is very well acted; but one feels that weeping faces ought not to be kept too long in any scene for the artificialty of it must necessarily be seen if looked for closely. The effect of the dream awakens the man not only to his senses, but to a realization of his danger. This, in a lad of his age and experience, is very convincing. The picture is a safe feature and can be advertised as such.

"MAN'S BEST FRIEND" (Eclair), January 30.—Man's best friend is of course, his dog. The dog in this picture (its master is a blind beggar) is a little black Pomeranian. A boy steals the dog and trades it for a tricycle. The dog cleverly escapes and finds his master once more. The master is hurt and the dog goes for help. It has, however, little to do with the rest of the picture, which shows how the master died of his injuries and how his orphan daughter found a good home. The picture doesn't show any construction; it is not dramatic. It carries a thread of narrative which is both clear and pleasing. The photographs are very good and the picture will serve as a filler.

"EDUCATION OF THE BLIND" (Eclair), February 1.—An interesting and instructive picture showing how blind people are taught to care for themselves, to read and write, to study arithmetic, geography, nature and music. These blind children are at a convent school in France. The photographs are good and it is a very acceptable picture, just the thing to give substance to a bill.

"WILLIE PLAYS TRUANT" (Eclair), February 1.—Willie is a sprightly youngster, mischievous but engaging. His pranks to get out of attendance at school are not very convincing; but they are amusing. The photographs are good. It is slight, but pleasing.

"SAMMY, THE LITTLE BOOT-BOY" (Ambrosio), January 31.—A pathetic picture telling how an old man, sick abed, and his wife were about to be turned out of their garret for nonpayment of rent and how they were saved by the landlord's little son. He did bootblacking for the old people. His father found him at it and was so touched that he permitted the poor old people to remain. It is clearly pictured and will serve as a filler.

"TWEEDLEDUM'S FATHER AND HIS WORTHY SON" (Ambrosio), January 31.—The hopeful son and father were both out for a lark and, unknown to each other, were at the same restaurant. The son finds himself without the means of paying for his dinner and that of the lady friend. He hears his father's voice in the next room and, with the waiter's apron on, enters and finds the old gentleman with a lady also. He then blackmails the old man. It doesn't drag and is well photographed.

"ON PROBATION" (Thanhouser), February 2.—A very satisfying melodrama, a bit overdrawn (that is, it might have been a bit more effective if it had been toned down in the acting) but just as it is, it is sure to please. There was the rich grandfather, his little orphan grandchild (the Thanhouser Kid), a not very energetic brother, and a sister with her husband and little boy. The old man made a will, then went on a journey and it was reported that he was lost at sea. The will provided for the grandchild and then divided the rest of the estate between the brother and sister, leaving the brother on probation. The old man wasn't dead; but was watching and saw the poor kid treated like a step-child by both parents, and the brother made to seem dishonest so that the sister could inherit the whole estate. At the critical moment he reappears and things are straightened out to suit everybody except the evildoers. The photographs are good, the story is kept lively and the picture, which is not quite a safe feature, will serve excellently well in almost any bill.

"AS IT WAS IN THE BEGINNING" (Thanhouser), January 30.—A very remarkable fantasy with a vitally suggestive picture of life among prehistoric men. The idea is not wholly original; but it is handled so very much better than any of the previous pictures, both as to the means used to express it and naturalness, that is, freedom of expression, that there is little chance even for comparison. The picture opens at a dance. To the heroine (Miss Anderson) all men are but slaves; she treats them as she pleases. But one man meets her who is different. These scenes are good; but no one will feel like giving anything but the closest attention to the rest of it which shows how it came about in far prehistoric days that all men but one were her slaves. It is the quality of these scenes that make the picture a sure feature. It is of full length, well acted, set, conducted and well photographed.

"HOW JACK GOT EVEN WITH BUD" (Champion), January 31.—A Western telling a clear story of a bully who, being chastised by a cowboy, tried to get revenge. The cowboy's friend saw the bully's gang capture the man who had licked him and brought the other punchers to the rescue. The picture has stirring moments, fast riding and a good climax. The photographs are not very good, but serve well enough. It will make a good filler.

"A FRIEND TO CHILDREN" (Great Northern), January 27.—A short and fairly stout comedian gets into trouble by "butting in." He loves children so much that he can't hear a child cry without claiming cruelty to children. No child can get licked in his presence without his interfering. He finds that all the world, even the children, are ungrateful. It makes a very acceptable satire, well acted and pleasing. It is well photographed.

"THE MAN WITH THE PUPPETS" (Great Northern), January 27.—An amusing trick film in which live players act as puppets. They give their owner much trouble; but he has a fiddle that calls them back as the Pied Piper's flute called the children of Hameln in olden days. It is a very lively and acceptable film. The photographs are excellent.

"THE EMPTY WATER KEG" (Bison), February 2.—Ford, an old miner, after fruitless years of search for gold, goes out into the desert in hopes of making a strike and in this he succeeds; but his keg of water leaks dry. Meanwhile a love story has been enacted at the edge of the desert and the lovers, out for a canter, see the old miner where he had fallen from thirst, first delirious and then unconscious. Before he dies, he tells them where the mine may be found and later they find it and are made rich. The picture is concise and commendable. Its most distinguishing feature is the background of wild land, desert and mountain, and many of the views of these that are given are beautiful in the extreme. The story is very slight and, despite the excellent photography and intensely interesting pictures, it can hardly be called a feature.

"LOVE AND JEALOUSY" (Bison), January 30.—A picture in old-time, courtly costume of southern California and in somewhat different vein from Bisons heretofore. Two pairs of lovers play the four parts. Two of these lovers, Jose and Margarite, are very well satisfied with each other. One of the men, Pedro, is jealous of the other and he is very much loved by the second girl, Bella, who is jealous of Margarite. Pedro shoots Jose, whose life is saved by a book but who lies stunned. He drops the revolver which Bella, following him, picks up. He follows Margarite who flees and both are followed by Bella with the revolver. She shoots and wounds her lover, Pedro, by mistake. This brings about a change of heart in Pedro and the two pairs of lovers make up and are happy. The scenes are very pretty, but the photographs, while clear, are not perfect. The acting is only so so and there are obvious anachronisms which keep the picture, artificial in its plot, from being very effective. It will serve as a filler.

"THE RANCH GIRL'S LOVE" (Bison), January 26.—A very exciting picture of card playing for high stakes; but the story, especially at first, is obscure. It begins by showing a love-at-first-sight episode between a cowboy and the daughter of a ranch owner. There is a mortgage, but on whose ranch isn't clear. The girl's father, perhaps in hope of winning the money to pay off the mortgage, if it is on his farm, plays with a sharper. The cowboy lover also happens along and comes into the game. The ranch owner, father of the girl, puts up his deed and loses. The sharper shows four aces, but the cowboy has a full-house with an ace. There's a grab for the stakes and then a shot. The man with the four aces falls over the table. The cowboy, after grabbing the deed, makes away. He is followed by the sheriff and, although the girl tries to save him, is caught. Meanwhile they have found a whole deck of cards up the wounded man's sleeve and presently he comes out of his unconscious state. He is ordered out of town. It is clear enough to interest deeply if watched closely and will make a very good filler. Many of the photographs are excellent.

"DESPERATE DESMOND AT THE CANNON'S MOUTH" (Nestor), February 3.—Fair Rosamond is in the U. S. fortress; but, "Curses I'll get her yet" was what the villian said. Soon his chance came; for she went out for a picnic surrounded by cavalrymen. Her party, including Claude, is attacked by Desmond and the wild men. Word is sent to the fort and a relief expedition saves them for a time; but the wild men are reinforced and she with Claude are recaptured. Claude is buried and a house put over him; but he escapes from his living grave and rescues Rosamond and brings in Desmond, who is then tied to the cannon's mouth. It has the same amusing burlesque qualities of other pictures in this series. It is also well photographed.

"THAT MAN FROM THE FOOTHILLS" (Nestor), January 31.—A good ranch story with an innocent cowboy suspected of a theft of which a treacherous foreman is the real perpetrator. This cowboy had a sick wife. He delayed long enough to send the doctor to see her and the posse captured him. The foreman, at this juncture, thinking he was about to die—he was wounded by the cowboy who knew him to be guilty—confessed, and the innocent man was saved. The ending is sappy. The picture never drags. The chase by the posse has the Nestor qualities of hard riding and daring incidents. The photographs are excellent. It is of full length and almost a feature picture.

"WIDOW WINKS" (Nestor), January 29.—A character farce comedy in which Widow Winks and Deacon Blinks, two old lovers, and Tommy Winks, the widow's young hopeful who objects, are the characters. Tommy knows that the deacon is expected to call. The widow thinks Tommy is in bed; but he has set traps of all kinds in the parlor, from sawing the legs of the sofa to arranging a shower of flour to cover the deacon's best clothes. It is a rough-house picture; but it doesn't drag. The photographs are acceptable.

"RAVAGES OF A FIFTEEN MILLION DOLLAR FIRE" (Nestor), January 29.—This is, of course, the Equitable Building fire. The photographs are fair. They show the ice on the front, also the top of the building where three men perished. Some of the views were taken from above, looking down on the building and on Broadway.

A MICHIGAN ASSOCIATION ORGANIZER.

Official notice has been issued by President Peter J. Jeup of the Moving Picture Exhibitors' Association of Michigan, to the effect that A. L. Rule has been appointed state organizer, and is authorized to collect initiation fees and dues for the Association, upon the production of his credentials. The fees are $5.00, and the dues are $5.00 per annum. Mr. Rule has been placed under bond with a surety company, so that absolute security is guaranteed.

The Michigan organization has been incorporated under the laws of the State of Michigan and has become affiliated with the Exhibitors' League of America. The next convention will be held at Muskegon, Mich., on July 9th to 11th, 1912. It is the intention of the officers of the Michigan organization to make it of the greatest possible benefit to its members. Already it has taken up the question of Sunday opening, and has raised a fund to assist the fight of the Lansing exhibitors, who have been convicted of violating the Sunday laws.

The officers of the Michigan organization are: Peter J. Jeup, Detroit, president; H. F. Fowser, Lansing, 1st vice-president; J. J. Rieder, Jackson, 2d vice-president; Carl Ray, Muskegon, treasurer; W. Lester Levy, 302 Kirby Avenue, E., Detroit, secretary.

PENNSYLVANIA EXHIBITORS CONVENTION DATE.

To the Motion Picture Exhibitors of Pennsylvania:

A convention will be held at Harrisburg, Pa., on Monday, May 6th, 1912. Get together, boys, and if you are not in the League, get in and boost the thing along. Help yourself; show that you are a "live wire." There is lots of money you can save if you belong to the League. HARRY E. REIFF, Corr. Sec.

Another Big Feature.

F. & E. Company, of Cleveland, Ohio, Will Release "Th Thunderbolt," a Great Northern Dramatic Subject.

The Feature and Educational Film Company, of Cleveland, Ohio, has just placed on the market a new sensationa three-reel feature entitled, "The Thunderbolt." It was produced by the Great Northern Film Company and Unite States rights were purchased by the F. & E. Company. Thi company intends to sell all of its features at low price so that state rights men may be able to keep themselve well supplied with features. The story of "The Thunderbolt is as follows:

Lady Mary is deeply in love with the gamekeeper of he father's estate, though engaged by her parents to marr Lord George. The latter comes to visit his prospective wif and father-in-law, but in spite of his presence in her hom Lady Mary, in the quiet twilight of the Northland summe goes from her room to seek the man she loves. Lord Georg also takes an after-dinner stroll, never suspecting the gamekeeper as his rival, and nearly comes upon the lovers, wh are enjoying a trip through the garden. Lady Mary flee into the woods nearby to escape the sight of Lord George and after some difficulty she arrives at the house.

Next morning, the gamekeeper delivers his weekly repor and calls for the payroll. The Duke proudly exhibits t Lord George a string of valuable pearls—a bridal gift t his daughter. The gamekeeper overhearing the conversatio is startled by the reminder of the near approach of hi sweetheart's marriage to another. Lord George, noticin this, eyes him suspiciously. The gamekeeper returning t the lodge house, receives a letter from Lady Mary, who fearing her father's wrath, invites him to meet her in th privacy of her room.

He keeps the appointment and while there, Lady Mary' mother becoming ill, seeks relief in Mary's room. Both o the lovers find themselves in a terrible predicament and th gamekeeper, seizing upon the first opportunity, runs to th window and plunges head foremost through it. Outside h clings to the window's ledge for a moment, then falls t the ground. This forms a most striking incident. The nigh patrolman of the estate picks up the gamekeeper and othe occupants of the house rush out and carry him indoors Surrounded by the entire household which was aroused b the commotion, he is asked for an explanation. Being at loss what to say and not wishing to compromise Lady Mary he is silent. When Lord George steps forward and accuse him of coveting the necklace, he admits this, and is promptl carted off to prison.

The mother of the gamekeeper goes to visit her son an pleads with him to tell the truth. He refuses and she goe to Lady Mary, who is fighting a battle within herself. I she tells the truth, she will sacrifice her honor, and if sh remains silent, her sweetheart will be convicted. She finall chooses the latter course, and the gamekeeper goes to trial This final scene is a masterpiece of production and action.

The witnesses all testify against the gamekeeper and i the eyes of the court and onlookers he is a doomed man The judge and jury prepare to render a verdict and the gamekeeper staggers forward to hear the words which he knows will send him to a cell and dishonor him forever Suddenly Lady Mary, who has been sitting in the background watching the proceedings, rises and strides to the prisoner' box. She confesses the truth and proclaiming him innocent throws her arms about the gamekeeper's neck and weeps Instead of a verdict against him, the gamekeeper is set free and Lady Mary's parents, understanding the situation their daughter had placed the gamekeeper in, and realizing how devoted he was to take the blame for Lady Mary's act, cheerfully forgive their daughter, and give her hand in marriage to the gamekeeper. Lord George, humiliated and disgusted leaves the scene and the two lovers embrace each other and embark on a long and happy life.

BANCROFT'S RANCH IN MOTION PICTURES.

The American Film Mfg. Co. predicts a sensation for its coming release, entitled "From the Four Hundred to the Herd." Thi film centers about an English lord, wealthy and quite love-sick over a bright American girl. Aside from the story itself, thi picture promises backgrounds never before seen in American films, many of the scenes having been taken in and around the grounds and gardens of the famous U. S. Grant Hotel, near San Diego, Cal. This hotel bears the enviable reputation of possessing the artistic touch of the landscape gardener in addition t the most beautiful of natural, tropical beauty. Later, the scenes are staged in the great ranch of Bancroft, the historian, thus utilizing to its fullest measure the astonishing possibilities in Southern California for the motion-picture manufacturer.

EDUCATIONAL MOVEMENT IN CINCINNATI, OHIO.

An Observer Reports the Progress Being Made—Some Things To Avoid.

The People's Church of Cincinnati has adopted the motion picture for the regular meetings, held every Sunday afternoon at the Grand Opera House. The organization is of a non-sectarian character, devoted to civic and humanitarian purposes.

The heads of the institution considered the use of the motion pictures for several months and during the first part of December had John Collier, of New York, address their audience on the subject. It was decided to proceed with the venture and it is more a permanent feature of the meetings.

Other local institutions have experienced along the same line, but their efforts came to a speedy close. Upon investigation the cause was not difficult to determine. Their first tep was to elect some mechanical genius, in one case the anitor, who had put a bell in the pastor's study or worked stereopticon. These authorities purchased either a second-hand machine or the cheapest outfit possible. In the meanime the pastor or principal visited a film exchange with a st of text or subjects and of course found the exchange men too busy to prepare their sermons or lessons. He then selected one or two reels at random and announced a great nnovation. The janitor did his best, but that did not prevent interruptions and an eventual failure. The attempt was repeated two or three times without getting a full reel through except with several breaks and postponements.

The People's Church avoided all of these pitfalls and proeeded with the care and caution required to make any venture a success. Their first step was to engage a Licensed operator, who was consulted on all the technical points. One of the officials subscribed to The Moving Picture World and obtained all the back numbers of the past six months.

These papers were gone over and the synopsis of every lm suitable to their uses, was cut out and pasted on a card. he cards, of uniform size, now form a catalogue of available films. When this work was completed it demonstrated that films of the right nature were available and the st was in convenient shape for references; it is kept up to ate from weekly issues.

Having finished this preliminary work they purchased a 12 Model 1A Motiograph and daylight curtain. Although he machine must be set up and taken down each Sunday an genious method of bracing holds the portable stand perctly rigid and with a throw of 85 feet and a picture 12 et long there is no vibration; in fact, no theater in the city as better pictures. Of course, at times, very old films ust be used, but the operator inspects them with the greatt care and repairs all possible defects. No misframe splices e left in the film and any splice that looks bad is cut out nd made right. Result: no "wait a minute" slide is needed.

One cannot advise too strongly against the purchase of cond hand machines or any machine not of standard make nd reputation. An old machine can't handle films very ell and, when it is necessary to use old films for a particur subject, trouble is sure to follow.

The writer is interested in motion pictures more as a obby than anything else and has experimented with all the standard machines and has encountered several queer vices for projecting motion pictures, one in particular that s no nameplate (the maker should be ashamed of it) and s therefore arrived at the conclusion that, with one possible ception, no machine with the License plate will prove a urce of trouble.

AMERICAN FILMS POPULAR IN WINNIPEG.

W. T. Mallon, proprietor of a large theater in Winnipeg, Man., as a visitor in Chicago last week. Mr. Mallon had some interting things to say concerning the advance of the motion-picture siness in central Canada.

"There are about fourteen houses in Winnipeg that might be assed as really first-class theaters," said Mr. Mallon. "Of these, n are independent theaters, and the remaining four are licensed uses. One notable feature in Winnipeg houses is the total sence of cheap vaudeville. Winnipeg people don't want it, so e add an extra picture. Another very noticeable thing is the ct that our patronage is of a considerable higher grade than u have here. The fronts of shows in Winnipeg are lined with tomobiles, and the entertainments are conducted without so uch of the boisterous element. The pictures made by the Ameran Film Mfg. Co. have been quite popular in Winnipeg. Westn pictures, principally Western comedies, are highly desirable d we cannot get enough of them. I am using two Americans ery week, and wish I could get more."

DAVID MILES.

The above engraving is a faithful likeness of Mr. David Miles, director for the Majestic Motion Picture Company, who has been largely responsible for the splendid pictures recently turned out by that company. Mr. Miles is a stock actor of some eighteen years experience. His first work in pictures was with the Biograph Company under Director Griffith, some three years ago. Since that time Mr. Miles has held the position of director for the Imp and the Majestic companies with great success. He is a very earnest and sincere worker, giving much time and thought to the preparation of his scenes, as results show. His pet diversion is farming and when not working in the picture studio he may be found hoeing corn, milking cows, feeding chickens and engaging in other bucolic pursuits. From what we have seen of Mr. Miles' work we believe it is no exaggeration to predict that he will reach the highest round of the ladder in this branch of picture production.

MR. JACOB HOLSTEIN BACK AT HIS POST.

The many friends of Mr. Jacob Holstein, manager of Proctor's 125th Street Theater, will be glad to know that he has recovered from his recent severe illness and is again at his post at the helm of one of the city's most popular picture and vaudeville houses. Mr. Holstein was taken sick before Christmas with a gall stone and complications which it caused. It has been a severe strain on his strength and he still seems a bit thin, although he tips the scales at 167¼ pounds. He thinks that's going some for a man of his build. We didn't notice any dimming of his cheery smile and his handshake is just as hearty as ever.

PICTURE HOUSE FOR JEANNETTE, PA.

The Consolidated Moving Picture Company of Pittsburgh, Pa., has leased the Auditorium of Jeannette, Pa., and opened it on January 20th with pictures and vaudeville. It has a capacity of 1,000 persons and has been devoted to dramatic attractions. A five-cent admission is charged. The Consolidated has houses in a number of cities of western Pennsylvania and eastern Ohio. Walter H. Buhl, of Pittsburgh, will manage the Auditorium.

BURNS CREATES SENSATION AT FRIARS.

Noted Detective Springs Surprise at Entertainment Before Scholars and Club Members.

Two things happened at the Friars' Club on Friday evening, February 3rd, that were important. Wm. J. Burns, the world's most noted detective, announced a new departure in his work—he has entered the film industry, throwing his power and prestige to the protection of a company controlling a reproduction of Homer's "Odyssey." Only the film manufacturer, or the man who has invested in a costly negative, knows how important it is to have his rights protected. The Monopol Film Company, of New York, some months ago imported from Italy a film called "Dante's Inferno." It swept the entire country with whirlwind surprise. The film was sold on a state-right proposition; that is, exclusive license was given to state-right buyers to show the film in their individual territory. The demand was so great for the film that spurious copies were imported, and caused no end of trouble and loss to the Monopol Company and the legitimate buyers.

The makers of Dante's "Inferno" (Milano Co.), after two years' work, have completed Homer's "Odyssey," the most wonderful film the world has ever seen. In its making two hundred thousand dollars was spent. The Monopol Film Co. paid $50,000 cash for exclusive North American rights. Then a systematic plan was laid to prevent the piracies and infringements that came up with Dante's "Inferno."

Homer's "Odyssey" being the biggest and most pretentious film ever turned out, it was decided to make its promotion in keeping. Frank Winch was selected to engineer the campaign, and his first move was to secure the retainment of William J. Burns and his national detective agency. The element of friendship existing between Burns and Winch was a potent factor in getting the world-famous detective into the film industry. Mr. Burns explained at the Friars' Club a portion of his system—it is similar to that he uses with the American Bankers' Association. It sounds the death knell to evildoers in the film trade.

Invitations to attend the first exhibition in America of the "Odyssey" were sent to President Taft, Col. Roosevelt, Attorney General Wickersham and the Principals of Yale, Harvard, Princeton, Cornell and Columbia Universities. The lecture on the film was delivered by the Rev. Dr. Stockton, of New York.

ANOTHER WAY OF SHOWING COLORED PICTURES.

A new apparatus for the projection of still or moving pictures in natural colors, giving remarkably natural colorings, has been shown by Captain O. Fulton at a private demonstration in London. Three opaque photographs, printed in black and white on non-inflammable paper, are projected on the screen by means of reflected light and superimposed. Instead of employing the three primary colors as in the older processes of color photography by mixing hues, Captain Fulton uses one white, one pale green, and one pale orange screen, respectively, for tinting the three superimposed images. The most delicate tints and shades of every color were reproduced on the screen with wonderful accuracy, and for cinematograph photography the process has the advantage that no celluloid film is necessary, and that in consequence the dangers from fire are obviated. A powerful electric lamp is placed in front of and at each side of the band of photographs, on which are printed side by side a series of the three impressions photographed through the blue, green, and red screens ordinarily used for photography by the three-color process. The light reflected from the paper band of pictures is thrown on the screen by means of three lenses, and the composite picture presents all the original colors to the eye.

NEW THEATER FOR KALAMAZOO.

A beautiful new photoplay theater will be erected on South Burdick Street, directly across from the government building. It will be the largest and handsomest photoplay theater, outside of Detroit, in the State of Michigan. It will cover the entire plot of land adjoining the big Peck office building, and will seat, approximately, 1,100. The theater will be strictly of fireproof construction, and have a beautiful and showy lobby, well illuminated, extending across the entire front of the building. The investment will be somewhere about $65,000. The theater will be built by the Elite Theater Company, of which Harry S. Waterman is to be the business manager. His address until the opening will be No. 927 Montana Street, Chicago, Ill.

EXCHANGE CHANGE IN BOSTON.

The American National Film Co., of 32 Boylston Street, Boston, has dissolved, B. O. Wetmore and E. W. Helley retiring. The business of Film Rental, Machines and Supplies will be carried on by S. J. Fry at the same address, under the name of the S. J. Fry Film Exchange.

HANDSOME MACE GREENLEAF WITH SOLAX

Not content with an efficient and perfected comedy aggregation headed by the irrepressible Billy Quirk and Darwin Kay, Madame Blache, the president of the Solax Company, has engaged Mace Greenleaf, in order to perfect her dramatic stock company. Besides being one of the handsomest men in pictures, Mr. Greenleaf possesses innate dramatic ability and a fine power for pantomimic expression. His magnetic personality has made him quite a drawing attraction. He is a favorite with everyone. His latest engagement was with the Reliance Company.

In engaging Mr. Greenleaf, Madame Blache had this to say: "People want to see handsome men in pictures. They also want to see pretty girls. People are attracted by pretty pictures. This is only natural. A fine painting, a rhythmic poem with a beautiful thought, or an entrancing piece of music pleases and lingers long in the mind. With this in mind, I usually engage my artists. Mr. Greenleaf brings up the Solax average pulchritude a thousand per cent."

IMP SCENARIO CONTEST.

The interest in the Imp Scenario Contest, which was decided last week, has been phenomenal. First announced in November last, the enthusiasm of scenario writers has been since stimulated by the Imp Films Company in every possible way. Four prizes were offered for the best comedy subjects, viz: $100, $75, $60 and $50. These prizes attracted competitive efforts from authors all over the United States and from many parts of Europe.

Novelists, dramatists, newspaper men, actors, actresses, experienced scenario writers, novices, the college professor, the military captain, the society woman, yea, even the cook in the kitchen competed for these prizes, demonstrating that the interest in the competition was world wide. The entries came through the mail by the hundred, and the task of sifting the wheat from the chaff was a heavy one.

Three scenario editors eliminated the obviously unsuited subjects and in the final adjudication Mr. F. E. Woods of the Dramatic Mirror; Mr. Johnson, of the Morning Telegraph; the editor of The Implet, and Mr. Otis Turner, principal director of the Imp Films Company, were agreed on the awards.

The Father of Kinemacolor.

MR. CHARLES URBAN is the man who has made the marvellous "Kinemacolor" what it is. In the "Kinemacolor" display now delighting the packed audiences awn to the Scala Theater in London from all parts is demstrated the wonders which the Kinematograph, in its perted form, is capable of spectatorially. That alone would be splendid achievement, reproducing, as it does, faithfully, an mitable succession of important scenes from all parts of world, while their interest remains at its highest, for benefit of those who find themselves unable to be present the actual happenings.

But the Kinematograph is uch more than a producer of ctorial records and a provider artistic entertainment. It ssesses an educational potenlity of vast value. And this precisely what Mr. Urban s for years been applying mself to accomplish.

Born in America in 1867, he as educated at the public and gh schools of Cincinnati, hio, and has been intimately nnected with the Kinematoaph industry ever since its auguration in 1895. Having ready manifested remarkable siness aptitude and organizg ability, he was selected for e onerous position of manaer of the Edison film interests Europe in September, 1896. eaving New York at that time take up the post, he has nce resided in London, and ecame a naturalized British bject in 1906.

It was in 1896 that Mr. rban introduced one of the arliest types of animated picre machines. This was known s the "Urban Bioscope," and reated in its way a very considerable sensation. It was supplied extensively all over the orld.

He inaugurated the movement for utilizing the Kinematograph as an educational actor in 1902, and the educaional series shown at the London Alhambra during eight onsecutive years under the eneral style of "Urbanora" amiliarized the public with the teady development of his rand ideals in this direction.

In 1901 Mr. Urban began to grapple, in his own determined way, with the difficulties of color photography, and experimented continually from thence onwards until three years ago, when it was that, in conjunction with Mr. G. A. Smith, he succeeded in producing the first practical results, in the commercial sense of the term.

This was arrived at by means of two colors, instead of the usual three primary colors; there being employed in the process one camera, one lens, one strip of film, and one standard projecting machine. So was t made possible for the animated picture-world to adopt the system of reproducing what was called "Kinemacolor," in place of the ordinary black-and-white or monochrome films.

The early laboratory experiments which resulted at length so fortunately received demonstration at the Palace Theater during the eighteen months preceding July, 1910, thus preparing the world for Mr. Urban's greatest triumph, so far, in the true color presentment of moving scenes of any kind. Now the Scala is crammed twice a day with people gazing spellbound upon gorgeous colors for which the photographer has striven and yearned in vain since the day when a visible image was first formed by a lens. For "Kinemacolor" has become one of the attractions of London, as it well deserves to be. Mr. Urban is a genuine lover of Nature and a scientific student of every form of life; and he has taken infinite pleasure in bringing the Kinematograph into the service of those with kindred tastes. He is convinced that the time has arrived when every scientific laboratory, technical institute, college, private or public school, and every hospital also, should be considered as incomplete without a Kinematograph as such institutions would be without maps, globes, test tubes or clinical instruments. More, Mr. Urban has made it plain to everybody by his tireless work and his insistent and lucid writings on the subject which he has made his own that the educational possibilities and scientific usefulness of the animated picture camera cannot be ignored; and this most especially since the color problem has been so satisfactorily solved. He may claim to have wrought a veritable revolution by means of his magnificent "Urbanora Educational System."

He is a Fellow of the Zoological Society and a close follower of the research labors of many other learned scientific bodies. He has done a good deal of animated picturing by appointment for the British Admiralty.

He is fond of motoring and golf, but rarely finds time to indulge in either. He seems always to be thinking, working, or smoking—generally all three at once.

Mr. Charles Urban's surname is the aptest imaginable. He is all urbanity.

The educational value of kinemacolor has been spoken of as follows:

"Without doubt the topmost heights of cinematography have been reached in kinemacolor. The progressive future may still hold many marvels, but the zenith of current possibilities is surely reached in this most magnificent advance. Its educational value is beyond computation, as an entertainer it is without a peer, in interest it is undying. While cinematography spoke life into the otherwise still pictures, it lacked the beauty of life; it was life in all its monotones.

"Kinemacolor has clothed life with its own beauty, enshrouding it with all nature's own loveliness, giving it that enchantment which alone makes life fascinating and thrilling; the future values of the motion pictures are as enhanced in value as is an art gallery beyond a photographer's studio. We have just been privileged to behold the outdoor scenes of the coronation and kindred events, with a thoroughness and detail perhaps better than thousands who were present. True we miss the thrills and emotions of martial enthusiasm and the spirit of the crowds, nothing can take from life its own vital power. Beyond this the picturesque beauty of the occasion is revealed in all its grandeur. The majestic dignity of the occasion full of true royal display and yet entirely void of any arrogant gorgeousness is impressed upon all. British loyalty can never again be criticized by those who see how a people 'to the manner born' find in their institutions a bulwark of strength built upon the work of centuries. National honor and dignity are displayed in a manner to command the respect of all right-thinking people and as a result kinemacolor will have done much by the infusion of true knowledge to dispel of the gloom caused by misrepresentations. Young people, too, have found these new pictures helpful to an unexpected degree. History, manners and customs, royal personages, court life, national institutions are brought before them in kaleidoscopic reality and perfection. The writer has become familiar with occasions where young people in one afternoon with kinemacolor showed evidences of almost a life time of learning by travel and experience, and this at practically no cost whatever. A greater blessing than kinemacolor has not come to young people in one stroke throughout all time. It is to be hoped that this valuable agency is in large hands—hands large enough to feed the world; it must not be cramped and cornered for private satisfaction; it must be put forth to confer upon people everywhere its unlimited values; its own reward will be great."—The Spy.

THE SOLAX CALENDAR.

The Solax Company has designed a very clever calendar for distribution from which the accompanying engraving is reproduced. The Solax release days are indicated on the monthly calendar pads by Solax trademarks. It is quite a novel idea.

Waldrett & Westerland, of Durland, Mich., both veterans of the motion picture business, have purchased the Michigan State rights for the exhibition of "The Mystery of the Maine" film feature. Their headquarters will be, as heretofore, at Durland, which is an exceptionally good place for a distributing point by reason of the fact that there are fifty-two trains a day in and out of the city.

MISS VICTORIA FORDE.

The above is a perfect likeness of Miss Victoria Forde, the e tremely youthful and extremely clever ingenue of the Nest Western Stock Co. Miss Forde has been on the stage ever sin she was a little tot, and has a string of successes to which s can point with just pride. Some of her recent theatrical associ tions have been with Maxine Elliott, John Drew and Chaunc Olcott. Miss Forde has been with the Nestor Co. since the ear part of last summer. Her dramatic talent is on a par with h equestrian skill.

ATTENTION, NEW YORK EXHIBITORS!

The attention of New York exhibitors and particularly tl Exhibitors' League of Greater New York, is called to th case of Green vs. Fred Mumbrauer and his ticket-taker, Bu ler, both of the Park West Theater, 99th Street and Colun bus Avenue. About three weeks ago the defendants wei arrested and charged with having admitted a minor. Th conditions of the case, according to Magistrate Freschi, coi stitute ideal grounds for New York exhibitors to base Supreme Court action for the final settlement of a law whic now places every local exhibitor in jeopardy, even thoug his intentions be of the very best.

The Magistrate recommends that the case be taken in mediately to the Supreme Court and tested upon a writ habeas corpus. There are a number of cardinal points ii volved and this case has features that make it the most pr pitious one that has yet come up upon which to test the no existing law. Quick action is indispensable and some in mediate funds must necessarily be forthcoming. The expens will be about $500. Voluntary subscriptions should be sen to the office of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League Greater New York, 12 E. 15th Street.

A. B. C. COUPON SCHEME.

The A. B. C. Company, makers of picture posters, ha evolved a clever scheme to stimulate business for pictur theaters. Colored postal cards, showing a scene from som of the pictures and a coupon attachment, together with coupon book, form the basis of the scheme. We will sa more about this plan next week. From a glance it look good. At present it is being worked with Kalem, Path and Lubin pictures and will be gradually extended to cove pictures of other manufacturers.

Did you notice Sherlocko and Watson at the Exhibitors ball? Some champion sleuths. What?

"A TERRIBLE LESSON" (Solax).

Frank Chance	Darwin Karr
His Wife	Blanche Cornwall
His Friend	Billy Quirk
The Owner of the Gambling Den	Lee Beggs

If those who are inveterate gamblers could be brought to e the ordeal which confronted Frank Chance, the gambler in Terrible Lesson," gambling would be reduced to the mere betg of a box of candy or cigars. Professional gambling has ned many a good man, while it has caused the unhappiness of intless noble women. The excuse some gamblers give is that mbling has a magnetism or a fascination which is difficult for m to shake off. It gives them, they say, a certain amount of citement and consumes that measure of excess energy which, rhaps, they would expend in a more vicious recreation.

Scene from "A Terrible Lesson" (Solax).

In our production of "A Terrible Lesson," which is to be re-sed Friday, February 16th, one of the most realistic gambling enes is shown on the screen. The story involves a man who es to a gambling den, regardless of the protestations of his fe. He is extremely lucky, and his luck attracts attention. rangers become friendly with him, and he, being a "good fel-," "sets up" the crowd. After the night's playing he is advised the owner of the den that it would be hazardous for him to empt going home alone with so much cash on his person. ance decides to remain over night. He is shown to a room.

During the night, he not only finds that he has been trapped, t an attempt is made on his life. The panels on the wall disse to him the eyes of a person, while his bed begins to sink adually below the floor. Chance makes his escape, however.

The strong character of the plot made necessary a succession incidents which would sustain the interest. The climax almost kes one's breath away." The story is compelling and forceful. deed, it is one of the strongest dramas from the Solax studios.

"THE TABLES TURNED" (Imp).

In "The Tables Turned" a young woman resorts to an old tifice in order to get level with her husband, whom she spects of flirting. He does not flirt, of course; the poor an is only being interviewed by a lady client. But his jeals young wife does not know this, and at the instigation her maid she pretends to be insane, and a pretty how-de- she creates in the house. When hubby arrives home he at first mystified, but is put wise to the position of affairs the commercially-minded maid who wheedles a few dols out of him for the suggestion that he should go mad. mad he goes, despoiling the home and really alarming wife.

An unlooked-for development is the conveyance of the band to a sanitarium, where he is seriously treated. His eriences are not of the jocular order—far from it. The ndants use him brutally, so much so that in the end he laced in a tub of ice, and guarded by an attendant of a t ferocious demeanor. The wife has turned the tables ood account indeed. However, her representations to keeper of the sanitarium prove effective and her poor and is released. The story ends with the reconciliation he couple in the bath room.

iss Cummins acts very energetically as the wife; King gott is the husband who undergoes the varieties of sufings, and William Shay is the suave, imperturbable keeper the sanitarium.

This is a real laughter-proving Imp and will assuredly be ry popular. (See illustration on insert.)

NESTOR NOTES.

From the Nestor Studio, at Hollywood, Cal., comes the glad news of the first addition in the home of Alfred E. Christie, one of the Nestor directors. The new arrival is a chubby, bouncing baby girl, who will be named "Nestor," after that celebrated film. Telegraphic reports say that mother and child are doing well, and that the proud father is radiant with joy. Congratulations to Mr. and Mrs. Christie.

A few of the recent additions to the Nestor Stock Co. are Betsey Keller, W. H. Otto and Charles Avery. Miss Keller is well known on the Pacific Coast, and has made a decided hit in the Desperate Desmond pictures, lately released by the Nestor Co. Mr. Otto is a sterling actor, with a long experience as one of the Belasco players. Mr. Avery's unquestioned ability is shown in scores of Bison pictures, with which concern he has been affiliated for the past two years.

Mr. David Horsley, president of the Nestor Film Co., is now in New York. He will remain here but a short while, as the producing end of the Nestor business at Hollywood, Cal., requires his attention. There are three Nestor companies there and studios in course of construction, and Mr. Horsley, therefore, is very much in demand. Things at the Bayonne plant are in splendid shape. The new factory is now an accomplished fact, and the "Worth-While Film" is being produced in a better shop and under better conditions.

The Nestor people have stopped releasing "Mutt and Jeff" and "Desperate Desmond," and their Saturday release will comprise classy and up-to-date comedy split reels.

LUBIN AT JACKSONVILLE.

The Lubin Manufacturing Company's Southern company reached Jacksonville, Florida, and their manager, Mr. Arthur D. Hotaling, finding conditions and surroundings entirely favorable to their work, the tour as originally planned has been abandoned. He has leased buildings and ground space at 1735 Main Street, in the residential section of the city, and the studio, which is well under way, will be completed in a few days. The original buildings were found to be well fitted for dressing rooms and the storage of properties. The balance of the season will be spent in Jacksonville, and it is altogether possible that a permanent location will be leased. Several plays requiring outdoor work have been completed, and others are well under way. With the possible exception of a few dramatic sketches, the entire work of the company will be along comedy lines. The members of the company are: Arthur D. Hotaling, manager, Mrs. Hotaling, Jerold Hevener, Mae Hotely, Peggy Glynn, Betty Cameron, Mr. and Mrs. George Reehm, Robert Burns, Mr. and Mrs. Spottiswoode Aitken, Walter Stull, Will Lewis, May Owens, Helen Martin, Mrs. Martin, Will Hopkins, Jack O'Neil, Walter Kendig, Leola May, and Garry Hotaling and George Smith, operators.

"IN THE GOVERNMENT SERVICE" (Republic).

On the first page of the colored insert of this issue will be found several scenes from the Republic's release "In the Government Service." There are many unique features about this picture play. The story is that of a mail carrier who is compelled to make long journeys by dog sledge in order to deliver a consignment of gold to the railroad agents. He is attacked, robbed and left tied to his sledge. The dogs, with no hand to guide them, return to their kennels and the old mail carrier is found almost frozen to death by a miner who had been previously befriended by him. The old mail carrier afterward discovers that the robber is the man who illegally married the woman he loved. There is a bit of comedy furnished by an Irish miner who is in love with the daughter of the mail carrier. The dash across the frozen river with the famous $10,000 dog team furnishes some thrills.

AMERICAN FILMS GIVEN BROADER APPEAL.

The titles of coming releases of the American Film Mfg. Co. bearing such names as "The Real Estate Fraud," "Where Broadway Meets the Mountains," "The Innocent Grafter," "Society and Chaps," "A Leap Year Comedy," etc., has given rise to some speculation in the trade as to whether the American is not slightly diverging from its usual type of pictures. Coming releases show a tendency to touch the effete East here and there without losing or impairing any of those Western elements that have made American films so popular. The cowboy, that imperishable, romantic Western product whose popularity remains undiminished is still seen in American releases along with the Eastern business man, college man or sorority girl. Thus, a double purpose is accomplished, as it is the intention to make Americans so universal in appeal that all classes of theatergoers will watch for them.

"THE BARGAIN" (Rex).

This is the best picture the Rex Company has ever made. As an example of finished technique, it can take its place with any film d'art that has been produced. It opens with an exterior scene made in the studio that will keep anyone guessing as to whether it was the real outdoor article or the studio product. Following this is one of the best library settings that has ever been made in an American picture, and we may as well include the European. The lighting effects are equal to those which have already made the Rex Company noted for skillful handling of studio illumination.

The story is about a young woman engaged to a manly young fellow. She deserts him and gives her hand to a wealthier man in order to satisfy her mother's social ambitions. In the course of time the rejected suitor marries the younger sister of the girl who sold her birthright for a mess of pottage, for it transpires that the latter has made a mistake and married a drunkard and a brute.

There is some pretty double exposure work in the picture, particularly in the last scene where the unhappy wife sitting at her midnight vigil dissolves into the interior of a large birdcage. By this trick of photography the moral of the story is told without words in one of the cleverest and strongest ways imaginable. All through the story is marked by a cleverness of handling that is decidedly refreshing. Take it from the Moving Picture World that this picture can be featured to any extent.

"SOCIETY AND CHAPS" (American).

A Western picture that is something out of the ordinary is offered by the American Film Company under the title of "Society and Chaps." Jack Farleigh strikes it rich and leaves the ranch for an easier life. He marries Bessie Evans and settles down to a life of ease. His wife entertains Mr. and Mrs. Vandergould and their daughter and her admirer, but Jack has no use for the guests and vows "Never again." Later, when the Vandergoulds propose an automobile tour through the wild country, Jack takes to the woods and leaves his wife to her friends.

While the auto tourists are on their way the machine breaks down. Some time is required to make the repairs and the tourists saunter about the woods. Mrs. Farleigh gets lost and is discovered by her husband, who is in wild West attire. Meantime the machine has been repaired and the Vandergoulds attempt to round up their guests. In their search they come upon Mrs. Farleigh struggling in the arms of a person who appears to be a regular highwayman, screaming for help. The highwayman holds the entire party up and produces substantial results. Then Jack discloses his identity and there is a good laugh all around. Mrs. Farleigh decides to remain in camp with her husband and the Vandergoulds go on their way.

THE IMP CALIFORNIAN RELEASES.

Commencing with Thursday, February 29th, the Imp Films Company will release a series of pictures made by their Californian Company, who have been working around Los Angeles several weeks. The first of these pictures is entitled "The Ranch Rose," and is a strong dramatic offering, staged amid romantic and picturesque scenery. The quality of these pictures is superb, and the acting is singularly fine. Director Grandon has made splendid choice of settings; the company have put their hearts into the work, and the result is the completion of a series of strong subjects which will enhance the renown of the Imp films all over the world.

GENERAL FILM SERVICE COMPANY MAKING GOOD.

John P. Scherer, manager of the General Film Service Company, of Davenport, Iowa, writes an enthusiastic letter regarding the progress made by his company since its organization five weeks ago. He says that he has been successful in gaining a large number of patrons for Independent pictures and is giving them a service that is pleasing them. His company is buying a large quantity of new stock and is in good position to take care of its customers. Already the houses in Davenport are taking service from his company and they like the pictures supplied.

ORDINANCE FAVORS PICTURE HOUSES.

The city council at Jacksonville, Florida, passed an ordinance prohibiting all theatrical or vaudeville performances on Sunday, but motion-picture houses are allowed to open at two o'clock and run to eleven at night. The council favored the picture houses on account of the pressing demand of the public at large.

Scene from "Society and Chaps" (American Film Mfg. Co.).

COMMODORE BLACKTON SAILS SOUTH.

Commodore J. Stuart Blackton, of the Atlantic Yacht Club, aompanied by his family, sailed for southern climes this wek. The power yacht Paula and two racing boats, Viva al Vita, prize winners. Commodore Blackton will enter aumber of stated events in the series of motor boat races ithe St. John's river, and expects to successfully defend a tphy won by him last season. He will be away for about t months.

"CALINO AND HIS BOARDER" (Gaumont).

This is a comedy that will make all hands sit up and take nice. It will be released Tuesday, Feb. 13. One thing is ctain; it will be the comedy picture of that week, if not o of the strongest things in sensational comedy that has cne along for many months. The story is all about an Aican explorer who on returning to Europe takes quarts at a "pension Français," or, in plain English, a boarding hse. He is somewhat short of cash and runs up a good sed board bill, but after a time the landlord becomes insent upon payment. The explorer is finally corraled o morning in bed and threatened with eviction. He tells t maid that he has no money on his person, but asks h to go to his trunks and look for the purse.

n the storeroom there are seven or eight large hampers bonging to the explorer, but neither the maid nor the exprer knows in which one the pocketbook is, so she deces to examine the lot of them. To her surprise and tt of the beholder when she opens the first hamper a lge full grown lion leaps out of it into the room. Hower, she does not seem to fear the lion and opens a sond hamper, from which another full grown lion comes fth. In a very brief space of time the room is full of ngnificent lions, and, apart from the comedy situation, ty are a splendid sight indeed. The maid then takes to h heels to warn the household and, wherever she goes, t lions follow. There are numerous little private gatherings in the various rooms in the house and these are routed one by one by the approach of the lions.

The landlord forgets all about his rent money and is glad to get away alive. The house is soon deserted except for the explorer. The lions finally reach his apartment and find him there in bed. Three or four of them jump upon the bed and lie down with their master while the others walk about the room. They behave exactly as if they were a pack of large mastiffs, and one marvels at the thorough manner in which these beasts have been broken for handling. Any exhibitor will make no mistake in booking this picture as a Saturday night feature. It is one of the best that has appeared in a long time.

HALLBERG SPECIAL INCANDESCENT LIGHTING INSTALLATIONS.

Within the past week, Mr. J. H. Hallberg, "The Economizer Man," has made three installations of his special incandescent lighting systems, for moving picture theaters and signs, saving 70% on electric bills, by use of the Hallberg Special Economizer and special incandescent lamps.

J. T. Mann, associate editor of Holland's Magazine, in Denver, Col., in a recent discussion with newspaepr men on the meningitis situation, said that, while he was in New York he had occasion to make an investigation in regard to the way moving pictures were made and that during his investigation he witnessed some pictures in which an appendicitis operation was shown. Mr. Mann was amazed at the clearness with which the picture was produced, as he saw every move made by the surgeons in their operation and it struck him as being a good move to have films made showing the various professors injecting serum into a meningitis victim, which would be a very excellent lesson for all medical men throughout the United States. Mr. Mann also sees a bright future for the educational animated picture in colleges.

THE MOTION PICTURE IN EUROPEAN COUNTRIES.

So popular is the photoplay theater in England, according to a review published in a recent issue of "The Daily Consular and Trade Reports," that there is not a town of any size in the vicinity of London that the people do not patronize them. The admission prices vary from four to six cents; the performance lasting 1½ to 1¾ hours, which consists of about four reels of film. Important and popular events are often shown on the same day as their occurrence, which are greatly appreciated by the audiences. It is now the custom for moving pictures to form part of the program at the various music halls. There is undoubtedly an increasing desire for pictures of scientific interest, depicting insect life, bee farming, ostrich farming, and the progress of the different stages in the manufacture of various products. American made films are being constantly shown and are always welcome.

In some of the photoplay theaters in Bradford, England, tea and crackers are served to the patrons during an after noon performance. The prices of these theaters average from four to thirty-six cents. Authorities claim that fully 60 per cent. of the pictures shown here are American, and the rest, probably 25 per cent., are French. Cowboy pictures are the most popular and are in constant demand, being highly spoken of. The American posters have frequently been criticised as often being crude and not equal to the work done in England. Published returns show that some 287 picture playhouses were in existence during the last census and to-day, approximately 350 are in activity.

The films in use in Scotland are chiefly of American and French makes and are censored by cinematograph acts. In Glasgow, 1907, there were only four picture shows, while now there are about 100.

In Germany it is estimated that there are approximately 1,500 picture shows, 360 being in Berlin. There are very few large theaters devoted exclusively to moving pictures, the average nickelodeon possessing a seating capacity of 360.

The police direct special attention to the elimination of all pictures depicting scenes of disorder, such as might incite a riot or accustom the people to breach of the peace. All pictures of pugilistic contest are absolutely barred. Many makes of American films are very popular there. The salary a projection operator receives is 30 to 40 marks ($7.14 to $9.52) a week. Operators in the smaller cities receive about 20 to 30 marks ($4.76 to $7.14).

There is scarcely a town here which has not one or more theaters devoted to the exhibition of animated pictures. The performance generally lasts 2 to 2½ hours, all of which are continuous, the prices ranging from 20 pfennig to 1.50 marks (7 to 35 cents). Children, soldiers and sailors in uniform are admitted for half price. Each ticket is subject to a tax of 10 per cent., as all theater tickets are in Germany. The pictures exhibited in Erfurt are of an educational nature. The prices of admission in this town range from 20 pfennigs (5 cents) to 1 mark (24 cents).

The moving picture business in France is different from that of the United States. The prices of admission into the picture houses average from 9 cents to as high as 77 cents. The performance usually lasts two hours, starting at 9 p. m. and ending at 11 p. m. On Sunday there are usually two matinees, one from 2 to 4 p. m. and the other from 4 to 6 p. m.

In the three principal cities, Lille, Ronbaix, and Tourcomb, there are about 100 halls and saloons where motion pictures are shown, the latter being very popular, as an entire evening can be spent there pleasantly at a cost of not more than 10 to 15 cents for beer, this being the only expense incidental to the entertainment.

There are at present some 20 moving picture shows in Christiana, Norway, mostly all of these houses exhibiting French and American films.

The combination of moving pictures and vaudeville acts does not exist in Russia as it does in America, but simply show from three to eight films, depending on the price of admission. The few theaters where one can obtain a seat for eight cents are patronized only by the poorer classes. The average theater charges 20 to 25 cents admission for a show consisting of eight pictures, mostly manufactured in the United States and depicting Western or Indian Life and a few comedies, which are held by the Russians in high favor and roundly applauded when exhibited.

The southern cities of Russia all have picture houses, which are supplied by a film exchange located in Odessa.

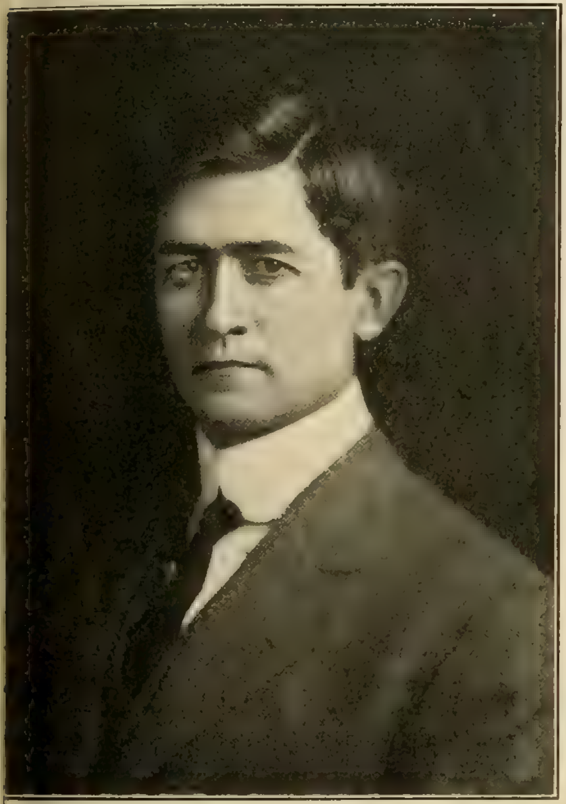
A New Independent Film Exchange in Chicago.

Te Majestic Film Service Company is the name of a new Indpendent film exchange in Chicago. C. J. Hite, formerly of e H. & H. Exchange, is president and R. C. Seery, formey of the Standard Film Exchange, is manager. The Mastic Film Service is located in new, special quarters at 216North Fifth Avenue.

I an interview with a representative of the Moving Picture World, Mr. Hite and Mr. Seery stated that it is the intention of this new enterprise to establish a model film exchange in Chicago. "We have every facility to do so," Mr. Hite said, "and expect to buy from the Sales Company everything worth buying, and are already in a position to furnish our customers with a service of 24 reels a week."

This should be very satisfactory to exhibitors.



C. J. HITE.

CJ. Hite, president of the Majestic Film Service, is well knn in amusement circles. For several years he conducted a leum for motion picture and lecture entertainments in Chigo, making a specialty of motion picture service for prinent social assemblies, having exclusive contracts with Ch tauqua organizations. Seeing the possibilities in the film reng field, in 1908 he established and incorporated the C. Hite Film Co., which became, through his capable managent, one of the most progressive film exchanges in the cot ry.

R. C. SEERY.

R. C. Seery, manager of the Majestic Film Service, is well known among the trade in Chicago, having been manager of the Calumet Film Service and for two years with the Standard Film Exchange. Mr. Seery is a graduate of the University of Michigan, and is by profession a civil engineer. He became interested in the exhibiting business and owned and managed a number of amusement enterprises previous to his connections in the film renting field.

NEW ENGLAND.

The newly formed Amusement Association of New England has made several changes from the policy in force when the old association was alive. The new association has abolished its initiation fee and all assessments so that members are not liable other than for their annual membership dues of $5, payable January first of each year for the ensuing year. It is also proposed to open in Boston club and social rooms for the use of members, and whenever possible to furnish information valuable to the members of the association. The association is urging its members to take hold and to obtain the subscriptions of all other desirable parties interested in the motion picture business, so that the membership will be greatly increased.

A special meeting of the Board of Directors of this association was held on January 26, for the purpose of taking action on new applications. A general meeting of the members was held the same day, at Room 19, 657 Washington Street, with the purpose of meeting the new members. This new association promises very well, unless it be wrecked by the internal bickerings that often beset such organizations. The meetings mentioned by the writer were held in the premises of the General Film Company's Boston offices, at 657 Washington Street. As was aptly remarked by one exhibitor, the meetings of this association have no reason for being held in the offices of any exchange, whether Licensed or Independent. The association should free itself from the need of using the courtesy of any exchange, and should hold its meetings elsewhere, even though the treasury be small. There was also some talk of proposing a member of the General Film Company's Boston office for president of this association, and a member of the local Independent exchange as another officer of the organization. This created much dissatisfaction, as it is held that the association should be solely governed by exhibitors. The wisdom of this assertion is apparent, and it is to be hoped that the association will elect, as officers, either proprietors or managers of moving picture theaters. This is not written in any antagonistic attitude, but simply because it voices the sentiments of many, and because it seems reasonable. Should the exchange men organize, it seems hardly probable that they would elect an exhibitor to the important office of president. Another item causing much difference of opinion was the fact that some members of the new association wanted every one connected with the motion picture business to become members, with the only demand that they be "desirable." This was not approved by many, who feel that only proprietors and managers should be eligible, giving as reason the fact that this association was organized for the theater owners and their representatives, the managers. Should operators, etc., be allowed to join, there might be trouble in this association, due to the fact that all the members did not have the same interests at heart, and thus would take different stands on matters coming before the body. It seems logical that this association should be made up solely of exhibitors, and that they alone should control the policy of their own interests.

Manager Washburn, of the Unique Theater, Boston, is putting across some very strong bills of pictures and novelties these days, and is reaping the reward of good business. Manager Washburn is a favorite with the local managers.

Harry Peyser was unanimously chosen corresponding secretary of the Bill Posters and Billers' Union, No. 17. George Collier, an honorary member of the Providence, R. I., local of Billers, and who is the manager of the Westminster Theater, of that city, was a guest and speaker at the meeting of the local, held at 724 Washington Street, Boston.

The Moving Picture Operators' Union of America has added to the strength of its organization by adding the operators of Pittsfield, Mass., to the union. Cards have been issued to the six operators of Pittsfield who joined the union. The Empire, World in Motion, and Majestic theaters are employing union operators.

Slides are being thrown on the screens of photoplay theaters in Boston and other cities using union operators, to the effect that the man operating the machines is a member of the union. The slides are very attractive, being red and black, and have caused favorable comment.

The Comique Theater, Malden, Mass., has changed management. The house was closed for a week, while the auditorium was enlarged, and the house renovated. The theater opened under the name of the Star Theater, with the Miller Brothers 101 Branch pictures as the chief attraction. These pictures are in great demand in New England, and manager who have used them report big results.

Early Sunday morning, January 28, the Academy of Music Block, Pittsfield, Mass., was ravaged by fire, with an estimated loss of $250,000. The upper portion of the block was used by the World in Motion Company as a moving picture theater. At this writing full details of the fire are not available.

A story is going the rounds that Harry Bennett, a Boston piano player, who holds the record for long distance piano playing, broke that record when he "tickled the ivories" for over thirty hours at Salem, Mass.

Marcus Loew's Orpheum is giving a special children's performance on Saturdays. These shows run from 9:30 to 12:30 a. m., and five cents and a special ticket admits school children to the show. This innovation is meeting with marked approval, and every Saturday morning finds the Orpheum full of "kids."

Manager Buckley, of the Roxbury Theater, Boston, is enlarging his stage, and has a large number of carpenters at work. Mr. Buckley intends to enlarge his shows hereafter and will offer a big bill of pictures and vaudeville.

The Allen Theater and Realty of Providence, R. I., who operate the Scenic Temple, as a vaudeville and picture house, are building a new theater on Union and Worcester Streets. The Realty Company expects to open a first class house, to be devoted to photoplays and vaudeville.

A. P. Dorman, proprietor of the Scenic Theater, Willimantic, Conn., is nearly ready to say goodbye to his Scenic, as his lease is nearly at an end. Mr. Dorman is now nearly ready to start work on the new house he is to have in Willimantic, which will no doubt be the best in the city. The new house will be just opposite Hotel Hooker, and will be erected on a plot of land 40 x 140. The house will seat at least 1,000, and on Main Street has the very best location in the city. The plans call for a two-story building, to be built entirely of brick. The house will be fireproof, and will present pictures and vaudeville.

Northampton, Mass., will soon have a first class theater, as the house is nearly ready. Pictures and vaudeville will alternate with "legitimate" attractions. The house is a municipal theater, being run by a band of local citizens. Pittsfield, Mass., has decided to take the same course, and a band of reliable trades people intend to run a theater that will be a source of pride to the town. Pictures will form an important part of the program.

St. Johns, N. B., is to have a new house devoted to vaudeville and pictures, and it is being built by Messrs. Keith & Albee. The house will seat about 1,500 and will be fireproof throughout. The house will be the best in St. Johns, and the plans are now nearly ready for inspection.

The new Lyric Theater, Fall River, Mass., is now nearly ready for its initial opening. Mr. Edward Doherty has been appointed manager of this house, having left his position at the Bijou Theater, of Fall River.

The Town Hall Theater, and the Pastime, of Brunswick, Me., playing pictures, are still closed on account of the smallpox epidemic. The houses have been closed a month, and the chances for immediate opening are decidedly slim.

The Park Theater, Bridgeport, Conn., which has been playing "legitimate" attractions, opened on January 15, with its new policy of vaudeville and pictures, and business is reported to be excellent.

Peter C. Banfield, who is employed at the Hartford Theater, Hartford, Conn., was awarded a prize of $1,000 and a medal by the Carnegie Hero Fund Commission, for rescuing a man who had come into contact with a wire carrying a 4,500 volt electric current. The Hartford Theater will celebrate its 43d anniversary, and Manager Dean has an unusually big bill "up his sleeve" for this week.

Poli's Theater, Norwich, Conn., which has been playing stock company attractions, abandoned that policy on January 20, and is now offering the regulation bills of vaudeville and pictures.

The Lyric Theater, Northampton, Mass., playing vaudeville and pictures, is doing well under the able management of Mr. James O'Neill. Mr. O'Neill has donated the use of his theater for the exhibition of some pictures, which are to be shown under the auspices of the Child Welfare Committee. There is no better way to bring the local photoplay theater into good favor with the public than to co-operate with them in things of this sort, and Manager O'Neill will profit by his courtesy.

The Pathe Freres are certainly "on the job" when it comes to taking pictures of topical events. A Pathe camera man has been in Boston for several days, getting everything ready to take pictures of the arrival of Cardinal O'Connell in Boston. As this is the home of the Cardinal, the Pathe pictures will be of even more than ordinary interest to Boston folks, and local houses expect to feature the picture. Speaking of Pathe, reminds the writer that nothing has "caught on" so well with New England exhibitors as has the Pathe Weekly. Practically all the houses are making a regular policy of featuring the weekly, and the General Film Company buys these prints pretty nearly by the carload.

Exhibitors are in receipt of a letter from Mr. Tom Cochrane, of the Majestic pictures. Mr. Cochrane tells of his plans, aims and hopes for Majestic pictures. This concern is already one of the favorites, and Independent exhibitors are calling for their films regularly.

The Biograph "A Blot in the 'Scutcheon," released Monday, January 29, was refused by nearly all exhibitors who viewed the reel at the General Film Company. The complaint was that while the reel was a fine piece of artistic work, it was too suggestive for exhibition in a theater. This means that the A. B. will be missing from houses that feature the Biograph pictures almost without exception.

HENRY.

LOUISVILLE.

Seven Louisville houses donated 50 per cent. of their gross receipts to the "Winter Commissary" recently. The latter was established during the severe weather to care for the poor of Louisville. Clothing and provisions amounting to many thousands of dollars were distributed to the worthy poor, and the "Winter Commissary" proved a boon to those who were "up against it." Suffering during the bitter weather was held to a minimum. While business men and others assisted in meeting the expenses of the "Winter Commissary," the theaters finished the good work by dropping half of their proceeds into the box. Those who collaborated in the good work were the West Broadway, East Broadway, Royal, Olympic, Globe, Majestic, and the Hippodrome.

Miss Grace McEvoy has been captivating local folk at the new Majestic Theater. Miss McEvoy is the possessor of a voice of unusual sweetness and her solos are a feature of the shows at the big new theater.

The Falls Cities Amusement Company, headed by M. Switow, which controls a half dozen picture houses in the three Falls Cities, has added another theater to its list. The Savoy Theater, at Highland and Baxter Avenues, has been purchased from the Grand Amusement Company. The house has not been a money maker, but it is believed that properly conducted it will be able to turn out a handsome profit. Accordingly, Mr. Switow will sink about $5,000 in the house. The improvements will include a new stage, a general enlargement of the building, a new front and a big electric sign, which will announce the daily feature. The seating capacity will be increased to 500. The renovated house will be operated under the name of the Highland when completed. It was formerly the Grand.

The Advertising Specialty Company, recently incorporated, has dissolved. The concern was formed to handle slides for advertising purposes and had secured several Louisville houses as its patrons. John F. Prinz, H. H. Krebs, and J. C. McFerran were the promoters. A number of obstacles made the success of the company extremely doubtful. Many of the larger houses refused to handle the advertising slides, on the ground that they would cut down the number of shows at least one. That is, a house which was running 14 shows daily would spend about five minutes following each with the advertisements, eliminating one performance. This meant that they lost on the transaction. It is understood that Fred J. Dolle, of the Ideal Amusement Company, will take up the matter. The Ideal controls four theaters and these would form a nucleus on which to build up a handsome business. The growth of moving picture houses as advertising media has been great recently and Mr. Dolle, amonhg others, believes it offers an extensive and legitimate field.

The Edisonia Theater, Harlan, Ky., opened a few days ago. The place is a new one. A feature is several vaudeville acts. Harlan is in the heart of a recently opened coal region in southeastern Kentucky and offers splendid opportunities for moving picture men.

The Idle Hour has been opened in Earlington, Ky. The theater has been put in good shape with modern fixtures, lighting facilities, etc. Only evening performances are given, the house opening at 6:30 p. m.

Two days' receipts of the new moving picture theater of Nicholasville, Ky., were donated to the Christian Endeavor Society recently. The name for the place has not yet been selected. The patron whose suggestion in this regard is adopted will be given a cash prize. Wolf & Hacker are the proprietors.

Mr. B. F. Jones, formerly manager of the Independent Film Exchange branch at Wheeling, W. Va., has been appointed general manager of the Peerless Film Exchange, this city. Mr. Jones succeeds Mr. J. L. Fay, who had been manager of this enterprise for over two years.

The Elite Theater, Sharpsburg, Pa., has a seating capacity of 524 to the performance. The performance usually consists of two nice vaudeville acts and three pictures of late Independent releases. The manager is Mr. J. L. Sullivan, who has been in the theatrical business for over fourteen years. Taking this theater as a whole, it is one of the best managed and regulated theaters in western Pennsylvania.

The Pennsylvania Zigomar Co., of New Castle, Pa., has purchased the exclusive right for exhibition purposes in Pennsylvania for Zigomar, the sensational detective play, produced by the F. & E. Co., of Cleveland, Ohio. This wonderful picture was first exhibited at the Minerva Theater, on Fifth Avenue, and for two days this house was literally packed. At the end of two days the manager of the Minerva, Mr. P. J. Demas, booked it for a return exhibition at an early date.

Mr. T. P. Hollis, master moving picture machine mechanic and repair man at the Columbia branch of the General Film Co., has been with the same manager for over three and a half years. The manager considers Mr. Hollis one of his most enterprising men. Mr. Hollis started with the old Columbia Film Exchange as a film patcher.

Messrs. Laude & Warner, of the old Duquesne Amu. & S. Co. fame, and later of the Pittsburgh Photoplay Co., have disposed of their interest in the latter concern to a number of Pittsburgh capitalists. Messrs. Laude & Warner will continue in the business, with headquarters at New York City. Their initial venture will be a contract for the exclusive rights for the wonderful film, "Zigomar" for New York, New Jersey, Rhode Island and Connecticut. Mr. S. L. Warner will be the field representative. He was formerly connected with the Monopol Film Co., of New York.

Mr. Howard L. Butler, chief operator of the Bon Ton Theater, on Sixth Street, had a very pleasant trip to Atlanta, Ga., recently.

A neat little photoplay theater has just been opened on Centre Avenue, called the Palace. It is one of the neatest and prettiest little theaters imaginable. Nothing too flash about it, either in the lobby or inside. The managers-owners are Messrs. Danenberg & Grossman. Pete Alderman is the operator and Miss Eva Barrels is the piano player.

The Colonial, another North Side house, on Lowrie Street, is making good. The managers-owners of this house are Messrs. Bender & Williams. The Colonial runs two straight pictures and features playing to the pictures.

Practical application of films to scientific advertising was made here on January 19 when the Premier Automobile Company exhibited moving pictures of the transcontinental trip made by twelve Premier cars. John Guy Monihan delivered the lecture, describing the scenes reeled off on the screen, and held a most critical audience of newspaper men and automobile owners for longer than an hour as they were shown America from coast to coast.

"This is the last word in advertising," said a merchant prince in the audience, who deplored the fact that he could not "see" films as an aid to selling union suits.

The Harry Davis "opposition" is now a physical reality. The properties Nos. 5206-08 Market Street have been taken over at $1,200 a foot front, a record prices ofr the locality, and architects are working on the plans. The sale was made by Henry Steinhagen through Dakin & Kilpatrick. Davis was represented by John H. Sinberg.

By billing the daughters of a local retired millionaire, J. W. Greenlee, the managers of the Point Breeze Theater secured a wealth of genuine news publicity which packed the house from carpet to ceiling. Others who turned the act down because it was unknown missed a chance which may never come across again. The girls, strange enough, made good in a big way. They shared honors with the pictures.

The General Film Co. has taken the entire building at No. 1308 Vine Street and will give up their other offices, at No. 41 North 10th Street and No. 926 Market Street.

Mr. J. Childs, formerly of the Criterion Theater, Atlantic City, N. J., has taken over Verdie Hall, No. 731 Christian Street. Mr. Gennaro Granese, formerly manager of the house, will again take up his musical studies.

Mr. Adolph Bonnem will open the Apollo Theater, at Twenty-second and Somerset Streets, this week, with pictures exclusively.

The City Council at Hazleton, Pa., is preparing an ordinance to bar all Wild West scenes at moving picture houses. Much of the incorrigibility among boys and girls is blamed on films of this sort.

Messrs. Brown & Savage, of the Elite Amusement Co., have closed the Elite Theater, Atlantic City, N. J., and will devote all their time to their other house, The Royal.

The Point Breeze Theater held a greased pig contest on January 23. Wednesday night is amateur night and the crowds that come to root for their favorites were amazing.

The Curtis Indian pictures are proving a great attraction at Museum of the University of Pennsylvania. It has been announced that nearly five thousand people have attended the lectures and viewed the pictures.

While doing a turn at a vaudeville and moving picture house at South Bethlehem, Pa., Thomas P. Wilson, of New York, went violently insane. Mr. A. Longo, manager of the house, after a tussle locked Wilson in a dressing-room until the police arrived.

Loew's National Theater has distributed about fifty thousand free tickets. This is the first week under the new management and the high class acts put on lifts it above the average vaudeville house.

The police authorities have closed the moving picture house at Nos. 1323-25 South Street, owned by Annie Segal because of failure to provide proper safeguards in the way of fire protection. Every house in the city underwent an inspection recently to investigate the electrical appliances, the means of exit, overcrowding, and other features which are likely to contribute to disaster in event of fire or a panic.

Manager Al White, of the Colonial Theater, has put on an act of his own this week called the "Fiddle-Up Boys."

Thomas P. Ronan, manager of the Powers Theater at Decatur, Ill., was acquitted by a jury, of violating an ordinance which prohibited Sunday amusements. Theaters were not enumerated with the various amusements and the judge decided if the ordinance had referred to theaters it would have said so. Mayor Dineen is quoted as saying that it is likely that the people of the city will be given an opportunity to vote upon the question. Bloomington, Ill., is also agitating the Sunday picture show question. Lincoln, Ill., papers say that no petition will be presented by the managers there.

Some Springfield, Ill., managers—not all—are falling in line with the producers and every day's program is "grand," "extraordinary," "special releases," "marvelous," "wonderful," or some other superlative performance. This over-advertising comes at a time when the Springfield public has just begun to develop confidence in several of its picture houses. Of course, when the patrons find out which managers are prone to misrepresent their shows, the consistent and conscientious manager will profit.

TRACKED DOWN (Feb. 13).—Jim Ford, a swindler and confidance man, is arrested by Walters, a detective, but escapes while being taken to the penitentiary. A year later, Walters, who has kept a sharp look-out for the man who had outwitted him, comes face to face with a man, typically English, who seems strangely familiar to him. The Englishman is really Ford in disguise who has gained access to the home of a wealthy family. Walters, through the aid of a woman friend, who is acquainted with the Moores, gains access to the house, but is outwitted by Ford and his accomplices, who escape with the family jewels. After a sensational pursuit the criminals are tracked down and are safe in the clutches of the law.

THERE'S MANY A SLIP (Feb, 15).—Two young people meet on the trai and become infatuated with each other. However, when they part they have not learned the names of each other and both are horrified an arriving at their respective destinations to find that their parents have planned their marriage with somebody they do not know. Both try various schemes to outwit their parents and disgust the other parties but to no avail and finally they both run away from home and are married. Imagine their surprise on returning for the parental forgiveness, to find that they have done exactly what their parents had planned for them, they being ignorant of whom they were to marry.

THE WIFE OF A GENIUS (Feb. 16).—Franz Zubiac, a poor musician, is discovered in a cheap vaudeville house by the proprietor of a bonton café and offered an opportunity to play at the restaurant after theater. He becomes the idol of the hour and is again promoted to the next higher step in his career, when a well-known manager offers him a big salary for a series of concerts. In the meantime, so absorbed does Franz become in his art that he forgets his pretty wife, who really was his greatest aid in his success and finally leaves her with the complaint that she is not fit to be the wife of a great genius. At a concert given at a fashionable hotel fire is suddenly discovered and all escape but one woman, who had been loitering in the background, and who had fainted. Franz discovers that it is his wife and rushes to her rescue. Later, in the hospital Franz visits her and gains her forgiveness.

THE PROSPECTOR'S LEGACY (Feb. 17).—A Western prospector, who has been unusually lucky, prepares to return East to his wife. The suspicious actions of a gypsy horse-trader, whom he has seen loitering near his cabin, prompts him to take his gold to the bank, but on the way he is thrown from his horse and suffers fatal injuries. A young man and woman come on the scene and are given the gold, after they promise the dying man to send a portion of it to his wife. Later, the gypsy, learning who got the gold, attacks the mother of the young people and escapes with the treasure. A posse is hurriedly summoned and starts in pursuit and the outlaw, after being wounded and seeing that escape is impossible, throws himself from a high cliff into a mountain torrent.

KALEM.

AN AMERICAN INVASION (Feb. 12).—In 1826 came into California by way of New Mexico and Arizona, Sylvester Pattie, a Kentuckian, his son James, and one other man. Though they had passports from the American authorities, Gov. Echeandia received them with great harshness, tore up their passports and threw them into prison. They were liberated after one year mainly through the influence of Donna Ysidora Sepulveda, whom James Pattie afterwards married.

FAR FROM ERIN'S ISLE (Feb. 14).—Kathleen tells Brian, her sweetheart, of her ambition to go to America. Arriving in New York, Kathleen obtains a position in a sweatshop, where she remains until a strike is declared owing to the cut in wages. She next finds employment in a department store, but partly through homesickness and lack of proper food she becomes ill and is discharged.

Mrs. Flynn, her kind-hearted landlady, calls in a doctor, who quickly diagnoses her case as one of homesickness. Mrs. Flynn insists that Kathleen take her savings to pay her passage back to Ireland.

We next see Kathleen on board ship sailing toward her loved ones. Arriving in the little Irish hamlet she is welcomed with open arms by her father and mother. Going down to the beach she finds her sweetheart, Brian, just coming in from a fishing trip, and the good lad's constancy is rewarded when he feels Kathleen's arms about his neck and hears her promise never more to stray from Erin's Isle.

CAUGHT IN THE TOILS (Feb. 16).—Stewart is a happy and prosperous business man, with a charming daughter, Flo, who has just entered college. In his early days Stewart had unfortunately been associated with a gang of evil companions, who performed many unlawful acts. He began to lead an upright life and after twenty years he thought he had buried his past, when he is confronted by Perkins, a member of the old gang, who extorts all of Stewart's savings by announcing that he will otherwise inform Flo of her father's former life.

Flo writes her father for money. Stewart shows the letter to Perkins, asking for a return of some of the money extorted from him, but is only laughed at and finally enticed into taking part in one of the gang's operations.

Barton, the detective, succeeds in rounding up the gang, with the exception of Perkins, who escapes and sends a note to Stewart, informing him that "the game is up." Flo arrives home for the holidays and is present when her father receives the message, which startles him. Stewart goes to his room, carrying the note, which Flo has not seen and when Barton arrives later, finding the father dead, with the message clasped in his hand, he learns for the first time that his prospective father-in-law was implicated with the gang. Barton thoughtfully substitutes the note for one stating that Stewart's investments have all been lost and Flo is therefore kept in the dark regarding her father's past. The final scene shows the clouds of sorrow melting away and Flo finding a loving husband and protector in Barton.

MELIES.

MELITA'S RUSE (Feb. 22).—In a Western saloon, Pedro and the boys are playing cards and drinking, when one cheats and there is a gun fight. It all happens so quickly that no one knows who to blame until Pedro, knowing that he shot at least one man, steals quickly from the place and rides furiously off. The others see him go and at once decide he started the fight and is responsible for the probable loss of life. They mount their horses and pursue him. Meanwhile Pedro has succeeded in reaching a spot not far distant. Here he meets his sweetheart, Melita. They both hear the approaching pursuers, and Melita, fearful for her lover, jumps on the same horse and they ride away. Reaching a barn, Melita changes clothes with Pedro, and after telling him to hide in the barn she rides away to mislead the pursuers. They follow her, thinking her Pedro, but at last find out their mistake when they overtake her. Forcing her to go with them, they search farther and find Pedro in the barn just after he has subdued a young girl and her mother who had entered to collect eggs. Pedro is imprisoned in the sheriff's house as there is no jail in town. Melita frees him in a clever way and bids him fly to Mexico. The sheriff suspects Melita knows Pedro's whereabouts, and she, offering to show them where Pedro lives, leads them there, knowing he is even now on his way to Mexico. Returning to town in disgust with Melita accompanying them, they are just in time to see, with the aid of a field glass, Pedro crossing the boundary in the valley below. A week later Melita receives a letter from Pedro asking her to join him that the Padre may make them one.

Scene from "Melita's Ruse"—(Melies).

OHIO

[illegible] up at once and picking up a broom, she starts on the war path. She sails into Mikey with the broom, who in turn goes home and tells him maternal parent of the undeserved beating he received at the hands of Mrs. Schmidtburger.

Mrs. O'Hoolihan, with true Irish pugnacity, starts for Mrs. Schmidtburger and a hair-pulling match takes place in which Mrs. O'Hoolihan is victorious. The neighbors flock about Mrs. Schmidtburger in sympathy just as her husband is returning from the corner saloon with a growler of beer. Finding his poor frau all tousled and beaten he goes at once to the O'Hoolihan home and demands an explanation for the outrageous treatment. He is unable, however, to get satisfaction and gives Mrs. O'Hoolihan a piece of his mind. The latter's husband, though peacefully inclined throughout the entire proceeding, now feels it his duty to take a hand in the matter and protect his wife against Mr. Schmidtburger's insulting remarks, and a battle of words ensues culminating in a fist fight. They create such a rumpus that the neighbors send in a policeman to restore order. Both men are dragged out into the alley and are about to be taken to the lock-up when a recital of the fight and the cause of it all takes place.

Meanwhile, Mikey and Fritzy have patched up their differences and appear upon the scene. The parents, seeing their offsprings in each other's embrace and to all appearances the very best of friends, now halt and look at each other in amazement. Realizing what fools they have been to take the matter so seriously, they shake hands all around.

ECLIPSE.

CAPTURED BY WIRELESS (Feb. 7).—Warner, a banker, having received a large deposit from a customer, is tempted to secretly abscond with the money.

Shortly after his disappearance, Nat Barnes, the detective, is called in to solve the mystery. He cleverly discovers that the blotting pad betrays that Warner has engaged passage on the steamer Majestic, sailing for South America.

He hastens to the dock, but is too late; the Majestic has departed. He immediately sends a wireless message to the captain on board the Majestic: "Noted criminal on board Majestic. Delay arrival twenty-four hours. Am sailing on Oceanic and can arrive in time to make arrest."

After an exciting chase across the ocean the banker is finally taken into custody.

A BIRD'S-EYE VIEW OF ROTTERDAM (Feb, 7).—Holland—Showing a series of views of this interesting city, with its many canals and beautiful buildings.

THE GAMBLER'S WIFE (Feb. 14).—Fourtier, an artist, is easily induced by a friend to gamble, and soon neglects everything else in order to gain riches by courting the favor of Dame Fortune.

His faithful wife and good friend Joubert try in vain to get him to return to his work. Accidentally, however, Joubert overhears a conversation between the artist and his associates, who have struck an infallible system for winning at "roulette." The faithful fellow gives instructions to Mrs. Fourtier, who that evening, disguised as a man, plays the game and breaks the bank.

Fourtier is financially ruined and is greatly discouraged. His wife eagerly pays his debts, however, and then finds her husband in time to prevent him from committing suicide. Later they repair to the studio with the faithful Joubert. Moved by his wife's devotion and the kindness of his friend, Fourtier asks forgiveness and promises never to gamble again.

CINES.

BESIEGED (Feb. 6).—A company of soldiers are attacked by an overwhelming number of the enemy and are forced to defend themselves as best they may in a stone house.

They gallantly repulse the attack for a long while, but their numbers become gradually weakened and they can hardly hold out much longer.

Suddenly a drummer boy volunteers to go for aid. He is let down from a window by means of a rope and is soon on his way.

Although wounded and greatly fatigued by his perilous journey, he struggles into camp. A detachment immediately sets out and relieves the imperiled company.

After the battle the drummer boy is greatly rewarded for his bravery.

JENKINS, A CONQUERING HERO (Feb. 6).—Jenkins is a henpecked husband and also has troubles with his mother-in-law, who lays down the law in no uncertain manner.

Jenkins comes home late one evening and the usual scene occurs which makes him determined to get revenge.

So the next morning he conducts himself in such a manner that he so terifies his mother-in-law and wife that they are forced to allow him to be ruler in his own household.

THE PUPPET SHOW (Feb. 13).—A beautiful story, showing how a child's life is saved by the gratification of her wish to see a puppet show.

Her parents are so delighted with the wonderful results, the restoring of their little daughter, Lily, to her former self, that they generously reward the showman.

After persuading him to give up his wandering life, they offer him a position as gardener on their estate. They also accept his little daughter as a companion for their child, Lily.

JENKINS AND THE DONKEY (Feb. 13).—Jenkins goes to a public park where a procession is in progress. There he takes a fancy to a donkey and determines to possess it. Cautiously mounting the beast, he rides away when the owner is not looking.

Riding through the country, he meets a peddler with a quantity of toy baloons. He buys the lot, but shortly afterward the wind catches the ballons, and Jenkins and the donkey take a trip through the air. They have all sorts of adventures but finally tumble back to earth.

DARLING (Feb. 17).—The sub-titles of the film are as follows:

Sir John is a lover of art and has bought a fine statuette.

Miss Belle has a handsome cat called "Darling."

And the statuette goes to pieces.

"So they call the beast 'Darling!' They will never again see it alive."

But Miss Belle saves "Darling."

DEAR NEPHEW:

I want to speak with you on business. Come and see me. Stop a few weeks if you can.

Your loving aunt, MARY.

Sir John tells his aunt that in two days he must be back in town.

DEAR FRIEND:

My nephew is about to leave me. I will be all alone. Please come and stay with me for a few days, and bring your daughter. Your friend,
MARY.

Sir John is about to leave; but "Darling" decides that he will stay.

BIOGRAPH.

BILLY'S STRATAGEM (Feb. 12).—The little frontier family, in their stockade home, is enjoying the simple life such an existence induces. The father goes off to a distant woods to work, and while the mother is there with his lunch, good-natured grand-dad, who is left in charge of the two young children, allows them to go outside of the stockade to play. In another section of the woods is a peaceful tribe of Indians, but an unscrupulous trader lets them have in exchange for skins a quantity of whiskey. On this "fire water" they become drunk, and, in search of more, attack the stockade home, killing grand-dad and driving the youngsters in terror into the cabin. The children, cornered, upset a keg of powder in the kitchen and put a slow fuse to it, escaping through a back window. The Indians enter the kitchen just as the powder explodes.

THE MENDER OF NETS (Feb. 15).—The little mender is bethrothed to Tom, the fisherman, rejecting the suits of all the others. Tom, however, is weak, and finds that his old infatuation for Grace still haunts him. Grace has sacrificed all for her love for Tom, and when she sees him courting the little mender, she reminds him of his duty towards her. He realizes the strength of this and hints to the little mender that he is not worthy of her. Grace's brother learns of her dishonor and attempts vengeance. A quarrel ensues between the men, and the little mender, ignorant of the cause, attempts to save her sweetheart from the anger of the brother, and her tender appeal turns him for the time from his purpose. The little mender learns, however, the cause and the truth of the other girl's sorrow, and, smothering her own feelings, awakens Tom to his sense of duty, while she returns to mend the nets, solaced by her memories and her old father.

VITAGRAPH.

THE HEART OF A MAN (Feb. 12).—Alighting from the train in Colorado, Kate Evans is met by Tom Hunter, who has been delegated by the young lady's uncle to act as her escort to his ranch. Her uncle, Mr. Bennett, having an errand in town, warns Tom not to flirt with his niece while he is gone. The young fellow promises, but sincerely wishes for the chance. He wanders from the house and carves on a tree the name "Kate." He proposes to Kate, but she haughtily turns him down.

It is not many days afterward, that Kate happens across the tree where the expression of Tom's feelings are indelibly engraven, and while meditating, she is approached by Hank Tutile, a half-breed, who entertains an infatuation for her. He attempts to kiss her. A struggle ensues and Kate manages to draw her gun, which is discharged. Tom hears the report and hastens to Kate's assistance. Not many days elapse before she is willing to accept Tom as her allianced husband.

WINNING IS LOSING (Feb. 13).—Mr. Garrett is a horse fancier. Oliver Normand is in love with Dora Garrett, and purchases the very horse which his sweetheart's father had in mind. When Mr. Garrett learns this he is furious with Oliver and refuses most emphatically to allow him to marry his daughter. Dora thinks she can placate her father's wrath and tells Oliver to instruct his driver to lose the race.

Pete, the driver, has a little winning of his own to do. Maggie, his sweetheart, has told him if he does not win this race, she will not marry him. On the day of the race, Pete wins the race for Oliver and a bride for himself, but in the winning of the trot, Oliver loses Dora. An idea comes to him. He makes out a receipt for the horse in Dora's name, and when her father meets Oliver and Dora together, he is about to pour out his wrath up them, when she shows him the receipt, convinci him that she is the owner of the winning hors Mr. Garrett is delighted and congratulates her up her choice and knowledge of horse-flesh. She as her father if he cannot trust her judgment in t selection of Oliver as her husband. Mr. Garre decides in her favor and blesses them.

BUNNY AND THE TWINS (Feb. 14).—Jo Bunny has been invited to call upon the twins, S and Flora. John is ushered into the parlor a received by Flora, who at once lays siege, wh Sue spies on them from behind a convenient scree In her anxiety to overhear what they are sayi she moves the screen nearer the pair, which ve much disturbs them. Again Sue moves the scre and Flora and John start an investigation, and t three are kept busy dodging each other until S manages to get out of sight.

The next night John calls on Sue, and Flora n takes occasion to keep tabs on her sister's sessi with Mr. Bunny. The screen episode of the nig before is repeated. Bunny decides to get awa and in his anxiety, forgets his gloves. Flora a Sue have it hot and heavy, blaming each other f spoiling their chance of capturing a man. Jo discovers the loss of his gloves and returns f them. He loses no time in recovering his glov and "beats" it without further ceremony, aft getting a glimpse at the bald heads of the t charmers, robbed of their false puffs and coiffur

TWO CONVICT BROTHERS (Feb. 14).—Two brothers in jail have finished their term the same day. When they leave the prison they start life anew—one seeks the higher life and the other returns to the haunts of his erstwhile companions. The better one marries happily and engages in mission work. The other one, five years later, goes to rob a house, and while engaged in this occupation, is interrupted by a little girl who lives in the house. While she is feeding him pie and milk her parents return. Her father proves to be the burglar's brother and this results, as the film shows, in the accidental death of the burglar, who before he dies repents for his sins.

HIS WIFE'S JEALOUSY (Feb. 15).—An artist, married to a loving but jealous wife, is commissioned to paint the portrait of a beautiful countess. The artist's ecstasies over the beauty of the countess leads his wife to believe that he is in love with her. She writes a letter to the count, telling him of her fears. This results in a duel, in which the husband is wounded. The wife, coming in at the moment the duel is finished, learns, to her great remorse, that her husband was innocent.

PAWNEE LOVE (Feb. 17).—A Pawnee Indian falls in love with a girl of the Arapahoe tribe. She already has a lover, but his affection is not returned. This leads to a fight between the Pawnee and the Arapahoe, and the Pawnee is beaten and condemned to death. His sweetheart, however, rescues him and together, after many thrilling adventures, they escape to peace and happiness.

QUIETING THE NEIGHBORS (Feb. 13).—Mr. U. B. Quiet having been divorced from his wife after a previous picture, lives alone in an apartment house. Upstairs there is a young couple having a terribly noisy party. Downstairs is a musician, who amuses himself and agonizes his neighbors with the squeaky squak of a squaky squeak piano. Mr. U. B. Quiet is distracted, in fact, is angered beyond words. Finally remembering the little joke he put over on his wife with the leopard, he gets the animal and turns him loose on his neighbors. This effectually quiets them for all time.

NEW YEAR'S CELEBRATION IN JAPAN (Feb. 13).—This unusually interesting film deals with the fifteen-days' celebration prior to the Japanese New Year's and has many interesting scenes of the street decorations and festivities.

LA FAVORITA (Feb. 16).—This is a story of the famous opera done in pictures. The story of the king's favorite, who was given in marriage to one of the king's faithful followers, as a mark of esteem, and how this courtier discovered after his marriage, of the relation between the king and his wife, whom he had learned to love deeply, makes a beautiful dramatic story.

THE TRAMP'S DOG (Feb. 9).—A tramp befriends a lost dog. By sharing his food with the canine wanderer, the poor tramp gains a friend whose value he little dreams of. A farmer is overpowered by some footpads and robbed. The thieves decamp, leaving the farmer bound and senseless in the roadway, and to this unfortunate traveler is led the tramp by his new friend Pat. Whilst bending down to untie the ropes that bind the farmer, the tramp is seized by the police, and accused of the crime. Pat follows his new master to the station, but is not admitted. He then returns to the spot where the affair was committed, and his keen scent helps him to discern that there were other persons concerned in the affair. Following their trail, the dog traces them to a small dilapidated cottage. The door being shut, the dog jumped through a hole in the window that had been covered with paper. When the thieves hear a noise, and go to see what it is, the dog is nearly caught. Jumping through the window again, he climbs into a barrel outside, and hides there. The thieves find nobody and conclude that they were mistaken. They retire into the cottage again and proceed to examine the results of their crime. Returning homeward, the old farmer is surprised to find himself worried by the dog, and he finally understands what is expected of him, and follows it. As a result of his visit to the cottage, he is able to bring the police to the true criminals, and is not slow in offering the tramp and his little friend a suitable recompense.

WEAVING CARPET (Feb. 9).—Commencing with the painting of the design, the camera man does not leave the scene of action until he has shown thoroughly how carpets are made at Ambusson, a town in Central France noted for the quality of its remarkable carpets.

FIRE AT THE MINE (Feb. 17).—A tale of two rivals for the same girl's heart—the loser, a noble fellow who later sacrifices his life in order to save that of his former rival. Both are colliers in the same mine, and pursue their lives, one with the happiness of the girl he loves, the other alone with his aged mother. One day a fire breaks out in the mine, and all but one of the miners make their escape up the elevator ascents to safety. The lone remaining collier is found to be the husband of the young wife. She becomes hysterical and pleads with some of the fortunate miners to rescue her loved one. No one but the former rival and a second volunteer undertake the task. The husband is saved, but the heroic rival forfeits his life. The loss is greviously bemourned and all join the common cause of paying homage to the martyr. His aged mother is adopted by the man whom her son saved from a charred grave.

MR. LE BLACK LEARNS TO FLY (Feb. 20).—Mr. Le Black, an inventive genius, enthusiastic to solve the problem of flight for man, exploits many a ludicrous theory only to learn that all fail miserably to advance him in his scientific pursuits. The difficulties that Le Black brings upon himself are those that could only befall such a whirlwind inventor.

HE INSISTED ON BEING A CASHIER (Feb. 20).—Harry Cower just longed to get a job as a bank cashier. But eccentric tramp that he was, he had neither clothes nor experience to recommend him. His application was turned down most coldly; so he stole the president's pocketbook full of currency just for spite, and while being hotly pursued by bank employees, hid it unseen in a hat rack bench. He is captured but refuses to reveal the location of the stolen pocketbook. Sherlock Holmes is put on the job. He in the guise of a fellow tramp prisoner does focus the light to a head, only, however, after Cower has succeeded in obtaining the desired cashiership, in which capacity he cashes the check that gives Holmes the payment for his services rendered.

WHERE BROADWAY MEETS THE MOUNTAINS (Feb. 12).—John Newcomb, a young playwright, retires to the mountains where he finishes his play. It proves to be of such human interest that the producers and their stars rehearse their parts in the country in which the plot was laid.

But prior to the arrival of the company, the playwright meets Mary Cutter. Finally the company arrives. Frank Willsden, the leading man, is delighted with the charming young woman who is to play opposite.

Meantime, the young playwright sees little of Mary Cutter, who finds much time to spend in and about the walks of the hotel, where she can watch the playwright and his leading lady rehearse the scenes. Believing that he loves the city girl, she hurries to her father with a tale of outraged feelings. He, with quick temper, organizes a band of cowboys and hurries to the hotel. There, by mistake, he meets Frank Willsden, the leading man, with his sweetheart. In error, the mountaineer and his friends take him to Mary, who easily sets them right. But the playwright, dazzled by the beauty of the leading lady, believes himself in love with her, and in a moment of jealousy, accuses her lover, Frank Willsden, of having made love to Mary Cutter and his story seems to be proven by the arrival of the mountaineers with Mary and Frank. Then a revelation comes to the playwright and for the first time he realizes that he has loved Mary without knowing it.

AN INNOCENT GRAFTER (Feb. 15).—Jack Burton, whose father is dead, is the sole support of his mother. One day he meets a young man, who speaks to him of an abandoned oil well. They agree to sell stock in order to raise enough money to drill it. When sufficient capital has been raised, Burton's partner refuses to appropriate it to its intended purpose, but suggests that they keep the money for larger investments.

Jack's mother and his sweetheart's father have been induced by his partner to invest all their money in the fraudulent well. The partner receives a letter from a friend, telling that he better skip as the Federal authorities are going to investigate the well. Hastily gathering up all the money, deeds, etc., he hurries to the depot, where he is caught by Jack who, after having visited the office, found his partner's note. There he surrenders the property of the concern to Jack, who later hangs out a sign to the effect that the stock will be redeemed. This quiets the enraged stockholders.

In the meantime the government officials upon examining the well find it to be a veritable geyser. Jack has vindicated himself and is happy in the thought of being wealthy and of having a sweetheart of a good mother, while his ex partner is dodging the operatives of the law.

HUMAN NATURE (Feb. 17).—An old father finds himself in the way in his own household. His sons and daughters pay absolutely no attention to his wants. He is eventually shifted to a garret room.

An old friend finds him in this condition and suggests a plan which will make his family pay closer attention to him. His friend starts a rumor that he is in possession of a large sum of money, which he is to give to the old man for a service that the old man had rendered to a millionaire in days of poverty.

Everything immediately changes, and he begins to enjoy the rest he justly earned. The old man finally gathers his family together and tells them that when he dies everything will be left to his family to be equally divided.

After the old man's death, his will is read by his friend and contains only the following item: "I bequeath to my family all my riches, which consist of gratitude for having made my last days on earth peaceful and happy."

THE GIRL WHO WAITED (Feb. 18).—George Benson, son of a rich lumber merchant, and John Dalroy, an employe of the lumber yard, are both in love with the same girl, Mary Moore. John obtains Mary's promise to become his wife.

When John draws his payroll from the bank George takes the money, and the blame is placed on John, who is arrested in the girl's presence. After having served two years in prison, John, on his way from th station, meets his old rival, George Benson. John then realizes that if he goes back to Mary he will only bring disgrace upon her, and decides to leave for the North. George sees John get on the train and is satisfied with the result of his plans. His pleasure is short-lived, however, as a severe cough makes itself more pronounced.

George finally succumbs to tuberculosis. He makes a confession of having taken the money and placing the blame on John. Mary insists that George's father write a letter to a friend in the North (a guide), giving a description of John. When John reaches the Northern country he engages a guide to take him over the hills, and the guide, desirous of getting the gold that John has in his possession, shoots John and escapes with the dog team. He is later killed.

After the attack that the treacherous guide had made on him, John falls exhausted and as he lays on the ground, the falling snow slowly covers the body until a blizzard finally buries him from sight. The guides who have located John's trail finally come to his frozen body. The girl who has been waiting for the return of her sweetheart little dreams that he will be brought home to her dead.

HOPKINS' DOG-GONED LUCK (Feb. 5).—Mrs. Hasher, the boarding house keeper, notifies Hopkins that unless he settles his bill he shall no longer eat at her table nor sleep under her roof. Hopkins enlists Mary's help. Mary is the waitress and quite obliging. Mrs. Hasher, however, with her poodle, "Tootsie," is omnipresent and Hopkins' plans for a feed fail. That aching void sharpens the man's wits, and in a jiffy "Tootsie" vanishes. Mrs. Hasher is unconsolable. Hopkins inserts an ad in the local paper, and next day t missing dog is found. Mrs. Hasher gladly pays reward of twenty-five dollars to Hopkins' envo Hopkins returns to the boarding house, settles h bill, pays two weeks in advance and is installed the star boarder.

To the Users of Excello Flaming Arc Lamps

You must use "Excello" Carbons if you want good results from Excello Lamps.

Any statement to the contrary is false, because good working of these lamps is only guaranteed by the manufacturers, Messrs. Koerting & Mathiesen, Leipsig, when "Excello" carbons are used.

The manufacturer ought to know what carbon his lamp requires, and as the "Excello" Carbon has been specially designed by them for use in their lamp, it stands to reason that it is "the" carbon for that type of lamp.

The Excello Arc Lamp Company of this city say in their catalogue, on page 7:

> "Excello Carbons are superior in quality of material, evenness of texture, precision in shape and dimensions, and freedom from blisters to any carbon yet produced. These are the qualities that have made them famous in every country where flaming arc lamps are used. They are suitable for any type of flaming arc lamp. Each carbon bears the name 'EXCELLO' branded on its side."

In view of this statement it will be hard for anyone to make the consumer believe any other brand is as good as the "Excello."

See that every carbon which you buy bears the name "EXCELLO" and that each package is labelled with the trade mark.

MR. PIDDIE REBELS (Feb. 12).—Mr. Piddie is a small man. His wife is a militant suffragist. We behold poor Piddie compelled to do the chores, feed the cat, and to prepare the meal against his wife's return. Piddie has been habituated to this submissive routine, but to-day we find him in the role of a rebel. It all happens when Piddie's old college chum, Charley Parsons, arrives.

As Parsons enters Piddie slams the oven door, unconsciously closing in the kitten which had crawled in. Parsons takes in the situation of Piddie's servility, and outlines a plan of rebellion. War is declared, and the two friends prepare to concoct a nice dish for Mrs. Piddie's dinner, Flour, salt, soap, vinegar, lard, coffee-grounds, and last but not least, a piece of dish-rag. Parsons then takes leave, and Piddie awaits the coming of his wife. She does come, she sees, but does not conquer! Greatly absorbed in her thoughts, she swallows some of the vile stuff before she is aware of it; her stomach rebels. Piddie looks on in quietness. While she performs the ejectment act, he flings defiance in her face, and also with it her pet cat, done brown in the oven.

FOR HER FATHER'S SAKE (Feb. 14).—Harold Mordaunt loves Bess Darrell. The father of Bess is a broker, who is glad to welcome young Mordaunt as his daughter's fiance. George Parker has been doing business with Mr. Darrell, and in the course of his relations with the father he would fain establish closer ones with the daughter, would she but encourage him.

One day the father of Bess finds himself hopelessly in the power in a financial way of Parker. The amount involved is very large and means his utter financial ruin if not met. At this juncture Parker offers a solution—the hand of Bess can wipe out the obligation. Darrell resents, Bess sees the impending calamity, and consents to marry Parker to save her father.

Realizing that his poverty was the cause of his undoing, Harold determinedly set himself to work. By dint of sheer progressiveness he succeeded. It is as a horse-trader in the far West that Harold wins his fortune, and thus we see him when a letter from Bess comes to him, telling him of her unhappiness. She does not know of his success, but the thought of her approaching wedding torments her, and so she sends him a long, last, despairing letter.

And so it comes about that we see Mordaunt walk in and upset all the nice arrangements of Parker on that blissful day he has been long anticipating. Mordaunt does the thing in such a masterful way that one feels exceedingly glad.

MAJESTIC.

HONOR THY FATHER (Feb. 9).—Left motherless at seventeen, Mary Fuller stepped into her mother's place as not only the head, but support of the family.

Her father married beneath him and had been disowned by his aristocratic family. The woman brought up her daughter with but one idea: that father's happiness was to be always the first consideration. The scion of aristocracy paid this devotion by sinking to depth after depth of ignoming until at the time of his wife's death his entire existence was spent in a drinking place.

As the girl grew older, while never regardless of the injunction in her mother's bible, to "Honor Thy Father," she could not but bitterly gaze at times when her father sprawled in drunken stupor upon his couch as she forced her weary little fingers to fasten her shabby cloak about her as she made ready for another day's toil.

John Hollister, a rising young attorney, finds himself looking into the eyes of the first girl that ever cost him a second thought.

Her fiance's introduction to her father took place under circumstances so terrible that the girl felt only one thing could be done return Jack his ring and freedom and then once more wearily take up the burden of her former life, but Fortune again throws a careless trick upon the table and out of misery and tears Mary rises to her lover's heart.

ARRESTING FATHER (Feb. 11).—Dick Remington receives the bump of his hitherto joyous life when he informed Ethel Milton's father that he was considering presenting himself to the Milton family as a son in law. Randolph Milton had ideas of his own as to his daughter's future and Dick was thrown bodily from his office.

As the time went on, Milton makes arrangements to take his daughter to California.

The dread of the separation, however, induces Ethel to assent to Dick's pleadings for an elopement. Everything is planned to a detail, but money opens up a breach in Dick's defense, and his plans are betrayed to Ethel's father and Dick finds himself tied securely to the very ladder. Father half dragging his reluctant daughter, boards the train for the West. Dick succeeds in freeing himself, and as the California train is leaving, rushes by the gate-keeper and swings on the last car.

With father in full charge of Ethel, Dick soon realizes his helplessness, and upon the train's arrival in Plattesville, his home town, he leaves the train without Ethel, but with a scheme that fills him with hope and confidence. His uncle is the town marshal of the little town, and hurriedly enlisting him in his support, a wire is sent to the next station at which the through train stops, to have a certain elderly party, and a young girl passing under the name of "Milton," taken from the train, and held under arrest, without permission to communicate with anyone until the arrival of the town marshal of Plattesville, who will arrive with a noted Chicago detective, to take the prisoners back to Chicago, where they are wanted for a series of confidence games that they have perpetrated.

Milton, wild with wrath at the uncalled for outrage, is hauled from his expensive stateroom, and deposited in a squalid cell in the village lock-up. Ethel, who had been placed in a separate cell, is, of course, equally indignant, and at a loss to understand the cause of their detention, but the eminent detective, accompanied by the Plattesville town marshal, arriving upon the scene, she readily consents after a private and personal interview with the detective, who puts her through the third degree, to accompany him to the village Justice of the Peace, and make a sworn confession.

The confession is that she loves him, and while father, stormily indignant, is tied hand and foot to a chair in the cell, Ethel is quietly and speedily married to the detective, who relaxes his official dignity to the point of removing his whiskers for the ceremony.

Dick then induces the village authorities to permit him to confront the male prisoner with the girl's confession, and Milton realizes that he is at last whipped, and is forced to bargain for his freedom from Dick by a promise of forgiveness.

Dick loads the "criminals" on the next train for their home town and father gives the young couple his blessing as they depart on their honeymoon.

THE STOLEN LETTER (Feb. 7).—John Carroll, living in a small town, becomes engaged to Belle Graham, a wealthy girl. Before marrying he goes to the metropolis to establish himself, and secures employment in a construction company, where he rises to a position of importance. In a boarding house he meets May Burrows, a pretty stenographer, and falls in love with her. His affection is returned by May, who is grief-stricken when John tells her he is bound to Belle. The day set for the marriage approaches, and John determines to keep his promise. A letter arrives from Belle, and May sees it on the letter-rack and purloins it, knowing it is in answer to John's note to Belle reminding her of the wedding-day and asking regarding arrangements for the occasion, May thinking that if John thinks his letter unanswered it will cause an estrangement between him and Belle. Her conscience hurts her, however, and she takes the letter to John, confessing her action. The letter from Belle turns out to be a declaration of her love for another man, and asking to be released from her engagement.

BEDELIA'S BUSY MORNING (Feb. 10).—Bedelia is the cook in the Jones family. She strenuously objects to being awakened, and evidences her displeasure by throwing her shoes at the offending cuckoo clock. The missiles go through the window, landing upon the head of a passing policeman. After dallying a few moments with that worthy guardian of the law, she leisurely dresses and makes her way to the kitchen, her movements being accelerated by a bit of soap carelessly left upon the staircase. Bedelia starts a fire in the kitchen stove using kerosene. The stove blows up and she is rescued by the milkman. He takes advantage of the occasion to make violent love to her and his advances are resented with a can of dough, causing the man's precipitated flight. As the door opens again Bedelia thinks it is the milkman and lets fly the remainder of the dough, which finds sticky lodgment upon the surprised countenance of the lady of the house, and results in Bedelia's dismissal. She shows her resentment by breaking up the kitchen ware and making a hasty departure.

SAMMY THE BOOTBLACK (Jan. 31).—Old Michael, the bootblack, falls ill. The rich landlord threatens to evict him. Sammy, the landlord's son, is moved at the distress of Michael's wife, and, to secure money, takes Michael's blacking kit and goes out on the street soliciting work. The elegance of his attire attracts a crowd, among whom is his father. When he discovers the reason of his son's actions he is overwhelmed with regret at his hard-heartedness, and atones for it by rendering substantial financial assistance to old Michael.

TWEEDLEDUM'S FATHER (Jan. 31).—Tweedledum goes out dining with a girl. He discovers that his worthy father is out on a little lark and is in the next booth to him. Many amusing complications result and in the end the old man buys his son's silence by paying both checks.

THE AWAKENING (Feb. 6).—Jack Martin leaves college to spend the holiday season with his mother and sister and at the same time to appoint the wedding day with his betrothed, Nellie Garland. Before reaching the house, he is induced by his college chums to enter a saloon, but his friend, Will Lansing, objects strongly to the proceedings and finally manages to get Jack away from them, by reminding them of the telegram from Nell. The drinks affect Jack's head, and Will sees him home and tries to smooth over matters, by offering an excuse to the astonished ladies for Jack's befuddled condition. The latter, instead of partaking of supper which his mother prepared, drops his head on the table and falls asleep. We next find Jack again in the saloon surrounded by his chums and in such a noisy state of intoxication that he is ejected from the place. From there, he and his companions enter one of the so-called lobster palaces, where he finds his sweetheart Nell, seated at a table, smoking a cigarette and drinking with his friend Will. Nell laughingly taunts him by blowing smoke in his face and throwing her arms lovingly around Will's neck. This so enrages him, that he draws a long hat pin from Nell's hat and is about to attack Will, when the latter steps aside and the thrust is received by the girl who falls stabbed to the heart. Jack is imprisoned, tried by a jury and sentenced to death. The next and final scene is the living-room again in Jack's home. He wakes with a start, lifts his head from the table and finds his dear Nell and his friend Will together with his mother and sister at his side, realizes it was all a horrible dream and promises never to use liquor again.

Gentlemen:

Replying to yours of recent date asking me to give my opinion upon the machine that I am using in my De Luxe presentations, I respectfully submit the following:

I selected your Machine, the "Motiograph", in preference to the others, because I found the principle therein envolved answered my purpose better than any other machine on the market and I have never regretted for one instant my choice. I am not in the habit of giving any testimonials to anyone, but if this will do you any good, you may use same.

It may interest you to know, that during the recent agitation against Motion Picture Theatres of Minneapolis, I made every conceivable fire test in the presence of the officials with the most satisfactory results. It was impossilbe to burn more of the film than that which covered the aperture plate. I then took a piece of the film and protruded same from upper magazine; I lighted it with a match; it burned to first roller and there withered and died not injuring or effecting the film beyond that point. The same test was conducted with the lower magazine and several other tests of an equally satisfactory nature were all made with the result that the officials of the Fire Dept. in the city, were very high in their praise of the instruments which I use.

Respectfully yours,

Rothapfel

THE PATRIOTIC SONS (Feb. 13).—Granddad was telling the boys tales of '76 and turned to an old history to show the inspired youngsters an appropriate illustration of the "Drummer Boy of Shiloh." Then, presumably off for school they ran, but attracted by a man tacking handbills, they stopped to read one of them. It told of the Great Parade at Asbury Park, New Jersey's famous resort, and of the wonderful prizes offered for the most attractive float. They hurried back home, broke open their savings banks, rushed off to a friendly costumer with the contents, hired three uniforms with part of the money and then departed for Asbury Park. How these "chips of the old block," succeeded in building a float, through the assistance of a dozen other lads of tender years and subsequently captured the Prize Cup is best told by the film. Their anxious Grandfather searched high and low for the truants and finally found them, in the height of their triumph, with thousands cheering as they passed the judges' stand and received the official token of victory.

REFLECTIONS FROM THE FIRELIGHT (Feb. 12).—An old one-armed soldier reads over yellowed love letters and they awaken fond memories. He is delighted to receive a letter from his old sweetheart, who is now a widow and he visits her. Over a cup of tea their romance is depicted in a pleasing manner. They are shown as youthful lovers, happy and envied. Older grown they plight their troth and the young man marches away to war. He is reported among the dead and she yields to the pleading of another man. Her soldier lover arrives home the day of the wedding but does not disclose his identity, not wishing to mar her happiness. She had supposed him dead until just prior to the opening of the story. The fond old memories are revived, and, with a sigh, the veteran turns to go. His romance, he thinks, is over. He has loved the old lady but lost her. She follows him to the door and puts her arm around his neck and they are both happy again.

THROUGH THE FLAMES (Feb. 15).—The wife of an engineer is dangerously ill. A telegraphic message comes from down the road announcing that a village is threatened with a forest fire and the lives of the inhabitants are endangered. There is no one else to man the engine and he goes. The driving of the engine through clouds of smoke; the burning of the telegraph office and the mad flight of the frightened villagers all combine to introduce a realism that holds the interest from start to finish. When the engineer returns from his perilous trip through the flames he finds his wife much improved in health and receives the plaudits of his kind neighbors. He is presented with flowers and obliged with an impromptu speech of thanks.

PUSHMOBILE RACE IN SAVANNAH (Feb. 17).—Down in the sunny South recently the youngsters had a pushmobile race. The little machines were assigned numbers and names and the contest was entered on with the greatest possible spiritedness. The race took place amidst delightfully umbrageous surroundings and some fine effects of sunlight playing across the view are secured in the picture, which appeals to the junior members of the audience.

THE TABLES TURNED (Feb. 17).—Rose Despard saw her young husband holding an interesting conversation in his office with another young lady. Home she goes and confides her troubles to her maid. This shrewd young woman sees a chance of ingratiating herself with her mistress and making a few extra dollars on the side; so she advises Mrs. Despard to feign madness in order to bring hubby to his senses.

When Ralph Despard arrives home things wear a terrible aspect. Here is the maid's chance. She persuades the husband to feign insanity in return in order to cure his wife and is rewarded for the suggestion by Ralph, who then behaves so very madly that Mrs. Despard has him conveyed to a sanitarium, where he is so roughly handled that he nearly dies.

When poor Mrs. Despard learns the truth, she hurries off to the sanitarium, obtains the release of her husband, upon whom she has so completely turned the tables, and endeavors by her endearments to atone for her mistake.

THANHOUSER.

THE SILENT WITNESS (Feb. 13).—The president of a state bank finds that the District Attorney has evidence that will send him to jail. The banker calls on the official of the law, and succeeds in bribing him to suppress the case.

Not only is the District Attorney a grafter, but his secretary is of much the same calibre. During the conference between the District Attorney and the banker, the dishonest secretary is hidden in an adjoining room, and unseen by the others, he takes a photograph over the transom just at the interesting moment when a considerable sum of money changes hands.

The secretary develops the picture and finds that it is excellent. He proceeds to blackmail his employer, and finds it possible to live extravagantly without work. He laughs at the District Attorney, and retains the evidence of the official's crimes.

Among the friends of the secretary is a young couple, and the secretary, becoming idle and dissipated, proceeds to make love to the wife. He hides his passion until one evening when he finds the wife alone. He then tries to embrace her. The husband comes back at this moment, and makes a rush for the would-be despoiler of his home. A lamp, the only light in the room, is upset, and the place is dark. Then there is a flash and a shot, and the young blackmailer falls to the floor, dead.

The police are promptly on the scene, having heard the shot, and find the couple in the room with the body of their one time friend. The wife thinks the husband fired in anger, the husband believes the wife shot to protect herself. The woman faints, the man "confesses," and is led off to prison.

Neither they nor the police suspect the District Attorney, but he is the guilty man. Driven half mad by the constantly increasing demands of the blackmailer, he had followed him through the streets, determined to end his life of torment. At the house he saw his chance and took it.

The District Attorney is called upon to prosecute a man he knows to be innocent. Then the situation is further complicated by the wife, who, to save her husband, confesses that she is the guilty person. The District Attorney, in his summing up, accuses them both. His speech is well under way when an unexpected witness appears at the last moment.

The slain man occupied a furnished room, and the place was being put in order for a new tenant. The maid in the course of her work, discovered a packet, cunningly hidden, containing proofs of the District Attorney's guilt and the strong inference that he was the only person who was interested in putting the secretary out of the way. Suddenly confronted with this evidence, the prosecutor broke down and confessed. Husband and wife, each of whom had tried to take the consequences of a crime to save the other, find that both are guiltless, and are set free.

SURELOCK JONES, DETECTIVE (Feb. 16).—A learned professor who lives in a small country town, is a student of criminology. The person he most admires is one Surelock Jones. The detective has seen and admired the professor's daughter. Surelock can prove to his satisfaction, by deduction, that she loves him.

The girl, however, loves another, a young man who is not a detective. Surelock arrives in the country and finds that the father favors his suit. The girl, however, does not care for him, and the young man of the girl's choice finds that he has a stormy time ahead, due to parental opposition.

So he decides to "show up" the detective. While the distinguished guest is a visitor in the country, two mysterious crimes are committed. There is first the "Mystery of the False Face," and second, "The Strange Case of the Vanished Heiress." These are the kind of crimes that he has always reveled in. Strange to say, he does not solve either.

Oddly enough, the girl's sweetheart, although absolutely devoid of detective standing, scores in each instance. Surelock Jones goes back to town without the girl, wondering at his failure as a detective. He cannot explain it, but the girl and her sweetheart, who is now high in the father's favor, could. But they never did, because the father had always believed in deduction

GREAT NORTHERN.

A BURGLAR'S LOVE (Feb. 10).—Two men are seen preparing for a raid. Arriving at the large, ornamental iron gates leading into the grounds, the elder tries, but without seccess, to unlock the fastening. There is nothing else left but for one of them to climb over, and this falls to the lot of the younger man. The bag is passed over to him and he creeps up to a window. He climbs in, opens a drawer, and finds a number of valuables which he places in his bag. Looking about, he finds that he is in the bedroom of the daughter of the house. He looks at her and is so struck with her beauty that he cannot find it in his heart to rob her. He turns back to his bag, and taking the trinkets out, replaces them. At the gates, his "pal" eagerly asks the extent of the spoil. He replies that he has none. The next day the young fellow waits at the gate of her house. Luck is on his side, for she comes out, and fumbling with the handle, happens to drop her handbag, which Jack immediately picks up and returns. A week later we see the young lady waiting on a seat for her lover, for such Jack has now become. Later, Jack calls upon her at her home, proposes and is accepted. Returning to his room, Jack's hapiness is marred by the sight of a communication addressed to him from his old confederate. It reads that next day the races will be held, and that there is every chance of doing good "business." The next day dawns and Jack compelled to answer the summons. At the the two thieves get to work. Jack steals a bag, unaware that behind him a cinemat machine, pointed at the race course, is also re ing his every action. Some time after, Jack his fianceé to a picture show, and there see self stealing the bag. The girl leaves him. wanders to a seat by the roadside, and the a gentleman drop a wallet of notes. Hurryin the gentleman, he returns the notes and is a substantial reward. At his lodging the thief turns up and tries to get Jack to help other robbery. The youngster refuses and lovingly at the photo of the girl. The man, this, snatches the likeness from his han flings it on the floor. This is more than Ja stand, and, catching hold of the villain, he him out of the room. Some time after, J instrumental in saving his sweetheart's house being robbed by his former companion, w he leaves the grounds, runs into the arms waiting policeman. Jack now having prov worth, once more presents himself at the " and after pleading with the girl of his their former sweet relations are resumed.

POWERS.

A WOMAN OF NO IMPORTANCE (Feb. There are moments in the lives of all of us we must make great sacrifices. Sometin name, sometimes of material value. Yet all of us is the woman who struggles the against the circumstances that force her to herself. In this story, however, the exce woman stands out in bold relief with a back of intrigue and infidelity; the very people in parison with whom her nobility shines over ingly brilliant are given the opporunity of p her out as the guilty one. Does she rese and turn upon the villainess even while she nouncing her? Does she tell the misled h the true state of affairs about that little mi supper in the artist's studio? She might if i a matter of only her own self, but the t of an instant takes her to a little room where two big blue eyes are closed in the ful slumber of childhood; then it is that the spirit of sacrifice comes upon her and she without remonstration the denunciation of th sinner. And thus does she pass out of their their savior, yet—a woman of no importance.

Then it was that he had a vision of his own past life, his own mother's need, and his inability to assist her. In a moment his heart was softened. His eyes were opened to a new view of life and he relented. The officer who came to lead the cashier to prison was sent away.

SOLAX.

MRS. CRANSTON'S JEWELS (Feb. 9).—The husband of Mrs. Cranston is in tight quarters. He is caught both "short" in funds and in stock. In order that he may be able to cover up his margins, he decides to rob his wife's jewels. He plans to do so, but his wife anticipates him and steals the jewels herself, she having reason to believe that he would attempt the crime in a moment of weakness.

The husband, when he finds that his wife's jewels are missing, raises a "hue and cry," and the police take up the case. After considerable investigation, the crime is traced to Mrs. Cranston. How do you think the story ends? Order the film and find out.

LEND ME YOUR WIFE (Feb. 11).—The inimitable Billy Quirk needs a wife in order to inherit his vociferous Western uncle's fortune. Billy borrows his friend's wife. After a volcanic and side-splitting series of incidents, the breezy Western uncle blows into town tagging with him a pretty stenographer. Well, you leave it to Billy. He gets rid of his borrowed wife in a hurry. And the uncle—what's the use! The story is as funny as a wooden leg would be on the Statue of Liberty.

A TERRIBLE LESSON (Feb. 16).—The story involves a man who goes to a gambling den regardless of the protestations of his wife. He is extremely lucky and his luck attracts attention. Strangers become friendly with him and he being a "good feller," "sets up" the crowd. After the night's playing, he is advised by the owner of the den that it would be hazardous for him to attempt going home alone with so much cash on his person. Chance decides to remain over night. He is shown to a room.

During the night, he not only finds that he has been trapped, but an attempt is made on his life. The panels on the wall disclose to him the eyes of a person, while his bed begins to sink gradually below the floor. Chance makes his escape, however. The climax almost "takes one's breath away."

REX.

READIN' RITIN' AND 'RITHMETIC (Feb. 4).—Miss Parker, the school marm of the village school, is forced to distribute a parcel of punishment to Hezekiah Smithers, an unruly member of the class. Hezekiah runs crying to his father, a blacksmith, who determines at once to call upon the domineering teacher and give her a piece of his mind. He comes to the school. To paraphrase Mr. J. Caesar, "he came, he saw, he was conquered."

As the days go by, Smithers, Sr., confides to himself that he is falling in love with Miss Parker. Meantime, in the school-room, Miss Parker is diligently and delicately attempting to make something of her unpromising pupil. The boy is just foolish enough to misconstrue interest and determination for attention and affection, and he falls desperately in love with the little school mistress. Father and son proceed to love her.

One Sunday afternoon, it comes to pass that father and son don their joy clothes, with the heroic determination to call on the teacher and press their suits,—which, of course, they should have done in advance. Both covertly and curiously observe the other in his tonsorial efforts with a little wonder and a little "professional jealousy," and their labors at last at an end, unknown to each other, they set out to capture the unanimous prize.

They meet each other—and their downfall—at the teacher's home. Amazed and amused at the twin proposal, she solves the dilemma of a decision by introducing her sweetheart to the panic-stricken Rummy-oes.

THROUGH TWISTING LANES (Feb. 11).—Nell Thornton falls in love with an artist. Her father refuses to consent to the marriage. She marries her lover, however, and goes away with him. But her father disowns her as a daughter, and her letters are returned unopened.

Her husband decides to go to his father-in-law in the garb and manners of a farmer, obtain work on the farm, and win a name as a hard worker. Disguised as a farmer, he obtains work.

The daughter returns home, telling her parents that she has left her husband. The father encourages his daughter to fall in love with the farmer, and is pleased to see a mutual affection apparently spring up. But one thing troubles him—the girl's husband. He will have to be gotten out of the way. Of course, he is gotten out of the way in a manner pleasing to all, when the two plotters confess the true situation, and live happily ever after.

THE BARGAIN (Feb. 8).—May Stanwood and Frank Black are in love. But May's sister Enid is herself secretly in love with Frank. The lovers know not the secret sorrow of Enid.

George A. Thornton, May's employer, a broker of wealth and social prestige, observes that May is entirely and altogether desirable. One day Thornton takes her home in his automobile. May's mother sees in the latter's manner a suggestion of affection for May, so urges May to encourage her employer. The girl, grief-stricken and stunned by her mother's urgings, rebels against her exhortations, until she can no longer tolerate their aggressive and aggrieved note. Out of filial duty, placing her mother's desires above her own, she dismisses Frank and accepts Thornton. Frank looks through the window of May's home and sees her marriage to Thornton.

Thornton spends his evenings at clubs and cafés and invariably returns home in a drunken stupor. May, who has jewels, costly dresses and all the other idle items of feminine craving, is doomed to discover the sad truth that these do not make up for the great lack of tenderness and companionship. And one night it happens. He returns home in a state of incoherent intoxication, and attempts to make love to her. Overcome with nausea at the repellent sight, she designs to leave the room, when her husband stops her egress, brutally takes hold of her and tells her she is his, his to do with as he sees fit, that he has bought her, that her jewels and her silken gowns are the price of her chosen slavery—and she decides to go home.

She comes to the house, looks through the window, and sees there a sight as on such a night another had seen,—sees her sister being given in marriage to Frank. She realizes the bargain she has made, the cost she has paid for the velvet and gilt of wealth, and slowly wends her way back to the gilded cage.

IT WAS A LIE!!

We knew it, and now you have seen the proof! It looks to you as if the Song Slide business has gone to the dogs. It was so prophesied by a number of gentlemen who had the back-bones of jellyfish and brains like sponges—swelled up quickly, but dried out too soon. As soon as it began to get dull, we took the cue and dumped a barrel-full of good dollars into the song slide business while our competitors began to cover up and pull in their lines. We kept on growing, and the list of customers grew, faster every day. The others saw their mistakes, but didn't have enough nerve to follow it up, so what did they do? You know the story—

THE MAJESTIC

HEREBY NOTIFIES THE MOTION PICTURE PUBLIC OF ITS CHANGE IN RELEASE DAY FROM FRIDAY TO TUESDAY. THE LAST FRIDAY RELEASE WILL BE FEBRUARY 23rd AND THE FIRST TUESDAY RELEASE WILL BE FEBRUARY 27th. THE SUNDAY RELEASE REMAINS UNCHANGED.

This change of day is deemed advisable to avoid an over-production of film on Friday and to better balance the weekly program for the Exhibitor, and we trust the action will be appreciated.

Every Exchange has been notified by wire and letter, so that ample time has been given for the rearrangement of program.

Every Exhibitor should note this change in making up the weekly program and avoid the possibility of missing even one of the fine comedies and dramas now being produced by this company.

The first subject to be released on Tuesday will be an extremely hilarious comedy called "Strip Poker," in which three of the participants in the game play better than Herbert Prior, and they send him home in a barrel. A laugh from start to finish.

Next Week's Releases

Friday, Feb. 9th.—"Honor Thy Father." A strong dramatic picture with correct portrayal of the fourth commandment—the struggles of a poor, hard-working girl augmented by the wayward father—the ever-present Bible and its wonderful influence and teaching.

Sunday, Feb. 11th.—"Arresting Father." Another Majestic Comedy of high quality—the quick brain of the youthful lovers outwits the objecting father and lands him in jail after a series of laugh-producing situations.

FRIDAY, FEBRUARY 16th	"His Step-Mother"	DRAMATIC
SUNDAY, FEBRUARY 18th	"Petticoat Perfidy"	COMEDY

WE RELEASE TWO MAJESTICS EACH WEEK

And any Exhibitor not showing his patrons these two pictures is depriving them of two of the best pictures now being produced, and if the Exchange is not providing the Exhibitor with 2 Majestics each week, then they both suffer in receipts.

EXCHANGE MEN

Please notify the Sales Co. at once to transfer the standing order of your Friday Majestic to Tuesday.

FILM STORIES.

VIEWS OF MONVISO—Aquila (Feb. 9).—Another travel film of the Alps. We see the sources of the river Po. Water falls, stone bridges, stone huts and mountain lakes add to the picturesque scenes, while as a closing view we see the crest of the Monviso Mountain.

LIFE'S DISAPPOINTMENT—Latinum (Feb. 7).—Raphael is a sailor in the Italian Navy. One day, while at the shore, he sees Rosa go in for her dip. Suddenly she is seized with a cramp. Raphael plunges into the surf and brings her safely ashore. He worships as he has rescued and when later he learns that she is the betrothed of another, he goes to the sea and gives himself to the waves. He is washed afar out into the breakers where his body drifts about until morning, when it is cast upon the shore and there discovered by Rosa, her lover and their friends.

ANCIENT BEAUTIES—Aquila (Feb. 9).—The film shows beautiful natural and artificial fountains, cattle taking their evening drink in a mountain stream, while a little Italian farm lad drives them home for the milking. Peasants climb the heights with their quaint baskets after the daily work is done, while an ancient church next is shown. Then we see the Castle of Rozazza, its outside and interior courts and a monument to Rozazza by Leonardi Bistolfi, ending in close views of wonderful sculpture of the statue at its base.

THE SCARECROW—Hepwix (Feb. 8).—A man goes in swimming and at the edge of the pond some workmen light the fuse to a blast. The swimmer climbs to the bank and is blown back into the water, his clothes being entirely destroyed. He walks to the center of a field and there discovers a scarecrow, and at once takes the old coat, trousers, hat and gloves and puts them on. Hunters and picknickers appear and from then on there is a high old time, the scarecrow partaking of their lunch and drinks and enjoying himself at their expense. In the end he is made a target and the film ends as they fail to hit the mark, owing to the agility of the human dummy to evade the bullets WHEELS OF JUSTICE—Wrytograph (Feb. 9).—One young man gambles away his money and then commits forgery to cover his losses. His friend, a young married man, selects a cottage as his new home for himself and bride, and he needs five hundred dollars to meet the final payments. He goes to the other man to borrow the amount. He gives him a forged check for $1,000, with the promise of half of it if he will get it cashed. He does so and is shortly after arrested as the forger and sent to prison. He escapes in his stripes and returns home. The real thief is finally discovered and is arrested just as the young husband is about to be brought back to jail, and all because the other had come to the bridal home with the intent of trying to win the love of the bride in the absence of her husband.

THE ADOPTED CHILD—Messters (Feb. 11).—Baron von Glahn and his wife adopt a little boy. The years pass by and we see him an ambitious student. One day Johann, his real father, comes to the home to ask for more money and he is given a sum by the step-father, just to get rid of him. But Johann is insistent and demands to see his boy. The lad happens along and the father seizes him, a scrimmage occurs and the boy is stabbed by his father. He recovers, the father makes his escape, and some days later the baron reads in a daily paper of the discovery of the father's body in a nearby river. Thus is the adopted child made the undisputed son of his adopted father.

A TORN LETTER—Hepwix (Feb. 8).—A wife discovers half of a torn letter which her husband has apparently written to a woman. She calls in a detective. Meantime the housemaid has thrown the other half of the letter in the ash bin outside of the house and here the detective finds it. By piecing the two halves of the letter together the mystery is cleared. To appreciate how clever this business of the letter is you must see the film.

OUR WEALTHY NEPHEW, JOHN—Hepwix (Feb. 5).—Gregory Barton is a man of extravagant tastes and of small income, but he has always been ambitious socially as has his wife, Mirable. They are all delighted when they receive a letter from their nephew, John, in which he states that he has struck it rich in the diamond fields of Africa and is coming home to settle down. There can be nothing else to do but wed Beatrice, their daughter, to cousin John. John arrives and they make a great time over him. Then he "smells a rat" and decides to test the family love for him. He declares, one morning, that he has just received word that his fortune is swept away and asks the loan of forty pounds. The family wilt, and he is at once treated to a sample of their true nature.

But the housemaid, Mary, hands him the forty pounds. Don't you think that Uncle Gregory is a bit overwhelmed when he receives a telegram a few days later, informing him of the joke played upon him, and that his nephew and Mary have married?

LADY LUCY RUNS AWAY—Clarendon (Feb, 5.—Lady Lucy is betrothed to Victor MacCracken. On the morning of her wedding she makes her escape. On the way she meets Sir Ronald Douglas. She falls in love with him at sight. But he cannot very well wed a girl of her station. Then her maid goes to him and tells him her mistress is a real lady. She longs to see him again, and to do so she takes her bicycle, rides to a roadside along which he takes his daily trot on his horse, removes the front wheel of the machine, and lies down as if hurt by a fall. Ronald appears, lifts her in his arms and carries her to his bungalow.

She gets up while he is out of the room for a drink of water, he discovers she is merely acting and thinking her an adventuress orders her from the house. Sadly she goes, then he breaks down in his disappointment, and as he sits at his table bowed in thought Lucy tiptoes back, puts her arms around him and explains why she had done what she did. All is forgiven and he promises to make her his wife. Imagine the chagrin of Victor MacCracken when he reads of it in the papers'

A SOLDIER'S LOVE—LeBion (Feb. 7).—An officer in the French King's army falls in love with a maid though they are not engaged and he does not know for sure that she loves him He decides to kidnap her. He is pursued by her father and his servants and after a long row he is overtaken and the girl is taken home. The next day at the camp of the army he is led forth by the commanding officers and is identified by the girl. This follows a skirmish in which he is wounded and in which he proved his gallantry as he had proven his foolhardiness. The girl rushes to his arms, all is forgiven and the tale ends as do all romances in life.

FITZNOODLE'S NERVE CURE—Savoy (Feb. 10).—Fitznoodle is a young Italian of wealth and many imaginary ills, mostly of a nervous order. He is sent to a famous specialist by his chum and on his arrival at the sanitarium he is put through a course of athletics and massage that he can never forget, but which make a swift cure of his fidgets and shakes. He is sprayed by a hose, is tossed into a tub, thrown out again, thrown onto a marble table and massaged by a giant negro who uses a rolling pin on his body, and lastly he ends in a comical run home in his bathing suit, being thrown from trolley cars, out of a cab and what not. The giant follows him home and there presents a long bill for his services when Fitznoodle makes a rapid retreat in fear and fright. The negro sits down to the dining table and proceeds to partake of a heaping dish of spaghetti.

MY DEAR LOVE—Hepwix (Feb. 5).—Egbert Smythe remembers quite forcibly that to morrow is his wife's birthday and so he writes his friend, Love, the jeweller, to select a pearl necklace as a gift, beginning his letter "My Dear Love." Now, Mrs. Smythe comes upon the letter and not being able to make it all out and thinking the necklace is for another woman, starts to arrange for divorce proceedings.

All is at last cleared for her after she h engaged a detective whom Smythe throws t of the house, and on the introduction of Mr. ove, she comprehends and begs for forgiveness wh is speedily granted.

A TEST OF AFFECTION—Clarendon (Feb. 9).—Two sailors are wedded and compare notes the merits of their wives. John's wife is u monstrative and seemingly cold. Bill's wife the opposite and when John discovers this he ma his mind up to test his wife's love. They g to a doctor and lay their plan before him.

John goes home, pretends to be very s on the arrival of the doctor and Bill he nounced dead. His wife is distracted wit Then he gets up and tells her the joke. Bill decides to try the same plan on his w John's wife hurries across the street and her. So, when he tries to play dead, his half is not a bit surprised or grieved. I she goes through his trousers, sells his clot then invites all of the neighbors in for a tion. It is too much for poor Bill and he from his bedroom in his nightgown and en sitting room in high dudgeon. All is explai again there is a laugh all around.

OLD INDIAN MINE—Oklahoma (Feb.).— prospector writes to his father for more wherewith to develop the mine he has dis but his father cannot spare the funds an his son to come home. The little boy of t pector has made friends with Lone Bull, Indian, and when this redman is seized by Pete, a renegade, the little boy sees t with his bow and arrow shoots and kills the men. The old Indian is accused of th by Mexican Pete, but the boy tells he di to prove his skill the old Indian places on his head and permits the boy to shoot with an arrow. In repayment for saving the old Indian then gives a bag of gold to and mother and gives the boy a half int the mine for all time.

THE SPELL OF THE HYPNOTIST (Feb. 6).—The villain is the chief of a rob who plot to slay a rich old miner and wealth. But the chief does not wish to com crime himself nor have one of his band act it, and so he uses his knowledge of h by placing a house servant of the old mi his spell and making him stab the old m the others make off with the spoils. Wee when one day the sister of the accused discovers a cuff link on the floor of where the murder was committed and t to the capture of the real criminal, who apprehended and made to confess.

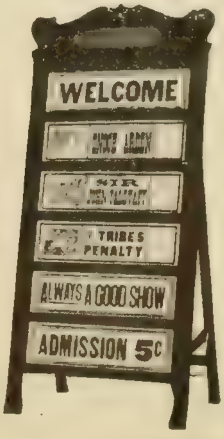
BE A BOOSTER ROOSTER

Do you know there's lots of exhibitors
  Sittin' round in every town,
Growlin' like a broody chicken,
  Knockin' every good thing down?
Don't you be that kind o' cattle,
  'Cause there ain't no use on earth,
You just be a booster rooster,
  Crow and boost for all you're worth.
If your show needs boostin', boost 'er,
  Don't hold back and wait to see
If some other feller's willin'—
  Sail right in, this country's free;
No one's got a mortgage on it,
  It is yours as much as his,
If your show is shy on business
  You get in the boostin' biz.

If things don't jest seem to suit you,
  And the worl' seems kinder wrong,
What's the matter with a boostin'
  Just to help the thing along?
'Cause if things should stop again,
  We'd be in a sorry plight,
You just keep that horn a-blowin'
  Boost 'er up with all your might.
If you see we've got the right thing
  For to make your business go,
Send us in your order promptly
  That's a cue to let us know
That you're not going to knock it,
  Just because it ain't your shout,
But you're goin' to boost a little,
  'Cause we've got the best thing out.



WE WILL FURNISH YOU WITH ALL BACK POSTERS (36 PER WEEK) FOR $1.00 PER WEEK.

SMILING BOB RESCUES HIS RIVAL

SMILING BOB

Smiling Bob, a miner, is in love with Molly, the pretty daughter of another miner. Molly likes Bob, but likes Jim, an Easterner who arrives in the camp, better. Bob and Jim become fast friends even though they are rivals. Jim is unjustly accused of a crime. The miners hold a Judge Lynch trial and are about to hang him when Molly begs Bob to save his life. Bob holds up the crowd, rescues Jim and locks the miners in the room in which they held the trial. And though it means losing the girl he loves, Bob takes Molly and Jim safely across the border, where they are married.

Berlin, Wednesday.—An incombustible cinematograph film which will lessen the possibility of panic in moving picture theatres was demonstrated recently before the Berlin Chemical Society and is now reported to be a success. The invention is greeted with enthusiasm in Berlin where several panics have occurred at film shows, the latest of which happened yesterday, passing off, fortunately, without loss of life.

BOOM BILLY

For years Billy Quirk has been making people laugh. They have been laughing their heads off. But all in Licensed houses. Independent exhibitors have never had a chance to show him to their audiences. Here's your chance. Billy Quirk is known everywhere and to everyone. Feature him big and write to us and we'll tell you how. Billy is coming forth in a series of comedies. These comedies will bring a laugh with every foot of film. A thousand laughs in a thousand feet.

Remember, Comedy day is BILLY QUIRK DAY

Scene from "Hubby Does the Washing"

RELEASED SUNDAY, FEBRUARY 18th.

THE WISE WITCH OF FAIRYLAND

This is a winning Indian legend with a strong mystic atmosphere. It tells the story of an Indian girl's love and of a love potion which caused the death of a black-hearted redman.

RELEASED WEDNESDAY, FEBRUARY 21st.

HUBBY DOES THE WASHING

A Billy Quirk Comedy. Billy is a husband who has false ideas about economy. Before he gets things straightened out, both in his mind and in his home, he has several laugh-provoking experiences.

RELEASED FRIDAY, FEBRUARY 23rd.

GOD DISPOSES

"Man proposes and God disposes." A man proposes to rob and kill, but God interferes. Through the intervention of Heaven a son is prevented from killing his father. The story is a tense drama of the stage, finance and society.

“SHERLOCKO & WATSO”

The World Famous Sleuths in Champ Exclusive Pictures!

The first release on February 26th introduces these strange but popular characters at their ingenious trade, solving a mystery surrounding the theft of a railroad lantern—A dark deed! See the film and learn how they solve it.

“THE ROBBERY AT THE RAILROAD STATION”

Do you realize what it will mean for you to advertise “SHERLOCKO AND WATSO” for your theatre? Don't you see the profitable results? Of course you do, and you're not going to miss them!

Champion films are surpassed by none. The quality is there all the time. Every release in February with a Champ trade mark to it is a big feature.

“WRONGLY ACCUSED”

Released February 28th

At a party, a little girl appropriates a pearl necklace for her Dolly and thereby causes suspicion to be directed at her older brother. Trouble quickly gathers, but is as quickly dispelled when—When you see it, you'll find out.

No doubt you notice the handsome Champion posters accompanying our recent releases, but you haven't seen the beauts that are coming out now. Ask your exchange for Champ film and Champ posters.

THREE IMPS EVERY WEEK

WILL YOU GET THIS THURSDAY IMP?

On Thursday, February 22nd, the Imp will release a Civil War drama which will be talked about for months afterward. It is the kind of story all classes of people love—the kind that will give your theatre a tremendous boost in popularity. Are you going to get it or will you miss it? It is for YOU to say. Make arrangements for an early booking and do it now. The title is

"THE LIE"

(Copyright 1912)

On the Monday before "The Lie" is released, we bring out a totally different sort of drama, but just as powerful in its way as war stories are in theirs. It is called

"A MODERN HIGHWAYMAN"

(Copyright 1912)

On Saturday, February 24th, you will get a split reel, a typical Saturday Imp Split. The first half deals with

"ICE BOATING"

(Copyright 1912)

The races between ice boats and automobiles are fine. The scenes were snapped on the Shrewsbury River, in New Jersey. On the same reel we release

"THE BROKEN LEASE"

(Copyright 1912)

Showing how a shrewd young fellow got rid of an apartment lease by making his neighbors miserable. A genuine comedy. Go after it!

in what age or clime the nagging woman originated. But—ssh!—we really think there's a little of the shrew in every woman, and that the first henpecked husband was a man named Adam, who gained fame from the notorious apple incident a few years ago, for which reason we call it "Adam's Apple," because we've got it in the neck.

As a means to the end of portraying the near-harmful results of the nagging tongue, we have made a picture with a wife who is mean to the end. She is shrewd, but fate wins.

"THE HEART OF A MAN"

MONDAY, FEBRUARY 12th

It comes out clear and plain that the young cowboy is a diamond in the rough and has the heart of a man, that wins a woman, who gives him with interest the love she at first refused.

"WINNING IS LOSING"

TUESDAY, FEBRUARY 13th

This is a case of "heads, I win; tails, you lose." It wins any way you take it. It's all about a racehorse that wins when it is expected to lose. "Little Dan Cupid" takes the reins and brings two happy couples under the wire prize winners in the race of love.

"BUNNY AND THE TWINS"

WEDNESDAY, FEBRUARY 14th

This the day that "Saint Valentine" comes around. "Bunny and the Twins" is a comic Valentine the Vitagraph Company will send out. See that you get it. It's a big "laugh getter" and "biz getter." It will get the crowds.

"THE CHOCOLATE REVOLVER"

FRIDAY, FEBRUARY 16th

It hits the mark and strikes home. In the hands of a child, it proves an excellent burglar alarm. She proves a little heroine, who wins the applause of all hands.

"THE HOBO'S REDEMPTION"

SATURDAY, FEBRUARY 17th

Makes good. Nine times out of ten a good man, when given half a chance, will win out. Here's an instance. Down, and up against it, a worthy fellow makes his way to the top and gets a good wife in the bargain.

Facts and Comments

HIT a reformer a light blow from the hammer of truth and you will often penetrate the outward semblance and reveal the plain and shocking outlines of what is commonly called a grafter. A person named H. P. Frey appeared on the moving picture horizon a short time ago, preaching the gospel of superior censorship. He had selected the good, old town of Reading, Pa., for the field of his activities and he soon made the welkin ring with his loud cries of reform. According to reports of Reading papers it now appears that Frey was willing to sell the sanction of his committee for small sums of money, going in one instance as low as two dollars. The committee had in all respects acted in good faith and was as much deceived by Frey as the public. Frey resigned as secretary of the committee under fire and has quit Reading, sensibly concluding that his career of usefulness in that delightful burg of beer and pretzels had come to an end. Two prominent Reading exhibitors renew his attempts at censorial "reform" in some other city. We comply with their request by printing their letter in another part of this issue.

THAT distinguished journalist, Dr. Bok, the editor of the Ladies' Home Journal, sees with the vision of common sense, where many in the same profession with him are positively unable to see the slightest fraction of an inch beyond the length of their own noses. Speaking of moving pictures in the last issue of his widely circulated publication, Dr. Bok frankly tells the rulers of churches and schools that they have been left far behind by "the alert purveyor of public amusements," who saw the possibilities of the picture for his own uses and "is reaping the harvest of his discernment." Answering the tiresome cry of the mole-eyed "reformers," that the motion picture is "a menace to the young" and must, therefore, be stopped, the editor says that the real trouble "is not with the motion picture, for we do not object to it, when it is rightly used in lecture and travelogues, but with its abuse." The article goes on to say that "wholesale condemnation of the motion picture is absolutely wide of the point." The concluding paragraph of the editorial is well worth quoting in full:

"We must make up our minds that it has come to stay, and if we cannot induce the local shows to give the thousands of young people who attend them the right kind of pictures, then the church, school or club must wake up and use the motion-picture film and put up an opposition show, as has already been done in some towns with excellent results."

THE response to the offer of the MOVING PICTURE WORLD to supply materials for an active campaign in favor of a legalized Sunday exhibition of moving pictures has been so emphatic and general that we have decided to devote several pages of coming issues to this important subject. In this way we hope to satisfy all the exhibitors who stand in need of such materials. While on this subject we would like to impress upon exhibitors the fact that agitation, to bring results, must, above all things, be persistent. Think of any of the great beneficient reforms brought about within recent times and you will agree that it has taken years of unremitting effort to achieve success. Agitation for such measures as Postal Savings Banks, Legislation Against Child Labor or Municipal Ownership, had its beginnings at least a decade ago. We believe that the efforts for a legalized Sunday exhibition will be crowned with success in a much shorter time, but they must be conducted with intelligence as well as with persistence. We must be careful not to offend prejudice, which is often held honestly, if ignorantly. The personal element in warfare for a principle must b avoided. Courtesy, patience, toleration are the best weapons in conducting a crusade against ignorance and deep-seated prejudice. It is well to aim high, but we should not expect a complete victory at the first onset. We should make our first and most earnest appeal to the press. Public sentiment favors a Sunday exhibition under proper restrictions. It is for us to crystallize this public sentiment and give it the most forcible expression possible in the newspapers. We have prepared the text of a bill, legalizing Sunday entertainments. This bill has been drafted by an attorney with legislative experience, and its main provision will be found suitable for every State in the Union.

IT seems not to be generally known that the legislature of the State of New York passed toward the very end of its last annual session a law prescribing a certain kind of booth for the exclusive use by moving picture exhibitors. The law, which is State-wide, does not apply to cities that have local ordinances now in force which provide for fireproof booths of any kind for moving picture machines or apparatus. From the language of the statute it appears that some special manufacturing concern was back of this legislation. The impression is deepened by the fact that exhibitors in parts of the State to which this new law applies are receiving letters from a manufacturing company urging the immediate purchase of their particular kind of booth as the only one that complies in all respects with the law. A similar graft was perpetrated upon the Pennsylvania exhibitors within recent years. If the exhibitor does not buy the booth offered by the company, the local authorities are urged to enforce the law and the urging is always done by the manufacturer who wants to sell his booths in the interest of the public. It seems to us that the law requires a substantial and not a literal compliance with its provisions and that, if the matter were taken into the courts the greedy manufacturers might find themselves beaten at their own game. The law was fathered by a legislator more renowned for his gaze upon the main chance than the interest of the public. It is to be hoped that, hereafter, the exhibitors will be heard, as they have a right to be heard, before laws, vitally affecting their interests are enacted by the legislature.

Studio Saunterings

By Louis Reeves Harrison.

AFTER skimming the edge of a back yard and wading 'cross lots through the muddy and unsightly approach to the Vitagraph Company's works we reach a happy-family atmosphere which is so abundant that it seems to spill over the walls. I think genial Brother Spedon is a large factor in the general sociability that prevails—he makes the visitor feel that he is a welcome guest instead of, as at many other studios, an outsider if not an intruder. He is not only a centre of radio-activity, but a friend-maker for the entire institution. There is, however, a democratic spirit throughout the yards and studios; the air of the place is free from forced inequality and servility, and all hands work better because of this freedom.

Gentlemen performing on the "legitimate" stage have called the motion-picture artists "dummies," probably from the way they are moved about in the small scope afforded by interior representations; but this is hardly fair. Occasional ensembles are necessary in many productions; they cannot always be given outdoors, and acting amid the chairs, vases, tables, sofas and other studio properties huddled together on any interior scene, means depicting emotion with a yard-stick measurement. It is not an easy matter to balance consistency with action under such cramped circumstances. There are dummies on the legitimate stage, and I do not refer to those who hold a wooden spear at that. I am one of those who have yet to see a young American actor conduct himself like a gentleman on the boards.

One great trouble is that the actor rarely emerges from the primitive egotism which makes him childish and silly in the company of real men. The quiet dignity and thoughtful courtesy of a thoroughbred man of the world will never become the property of one who only reads press notices of himself or glances over the columns of a periodical devoted to the industry in which he is vitally concerned to look at the pictures, especially those of himself. How can any individual, given to judging everything by its relation to his own interest and importance, be classed with those trained to give full consideration to the rights and feelings of others. Such is a gentleman, and such is rarely an actor. To be a gentleman on the stage a man must be one at all times.

From out of the mass of so-called dummies emerges the cool, sensible and undemonstrative character of Miss Florence Turner. Very sweet and unaffected, with a plain sincerity in her freedom of manner that puts one at ease while addressing her, she has exhibited a sturdy fidelity combined with high courage in all she has done as the central figure in Vitagraph photodramas. She is one of the few women showing in the pictural plays capable of giving the central figure in them due importance. In uniting the component parts of a drama into one perfect whole, the playwright has always to consider the necessity of engaging human sympathy, and this is often done by arranging all scenes, incidents and plots so as to lead up o and uphold a central figure. This may not be noticed by the audience, but it is part of the art of telling a story in action. This central figure must be strong enough to dominate all others. Though not necessarily a superior ersonage, the chief character must hold a conspicuous lace throughout largely by the art of the dramatist, but uite essentially through certain personal qualities which Miss Turner possesses in a high degree.

It is amusing to see the artificial poses of those who try o enforce themselves in screen dramas, the self-consciousness of their attitudes, showing plainly that they are less interested in what is going on than in making a full-face or profile impression on imaginary spectators, because the audience is chiefly concerned, if it is interested at all, in the outcome of the pictured story. Perhaps the reason Miss Turner grasps the fitness of the entire composition and easily merges her personality in that of the characters she assumes is because she is a January girl. If so:

> Here's to the January girl of brains,
> Of courage, endurance and clear life aims.
> She's the peer
> Of all in loyal devotion. We must > Accord her esteem. She's worthy of trust,
> She's sincere.

A January man of brains, who dominates the entire situation at the Vitagraph works, who has the ability to plan and execute in a business of large magnitude combined with exceptional appreciation of art values is J. Stuart Blackton. Only a musician can fully appreciate the technical difficulties and emotional possibilities of his medium of expression, and so it requires a man who knows a great deal more than the alphabet of form and color to dress his ideas in pictures so that they will command attention. The trouble with a great many men engaged in the production of moving pictures is that they start with art ideas on a par with those of the noble Indian who revels in war paint and red blankets. Mr. Blackton started as an artist, and had he remained one he might have been what Mark Twain regretfully stated that he might have been if he had stuck to getting up early in the morning and keeping country store, "poor and respected by all." Starting with a knowledge of tone and gradation, of chiaroscura, of perspective and atmosphere, of drawing, form, texture and all the values, Mr. Blackton found his way through dramatic exposition of his craftsmanship to what may eventually prove the broadest known medium of thought communication. Quick as a flash to seize opportunity, he became one of the pioneers in the production of moving pictures and has been a solid contributor to the evolution of the new art. Without losing sight of the fact that the first purpose of a business was to make it profitable enough to permit of its amplification from what it earns, giving due consideration to the fact that he was addressing mixed audiences of more than one nationality, ever open to suggestive criticism, he has turned out some exceptional photoplays and he struck a great chord in humanizing the photodrama.

I have always wondered, as Mr. Blackton is a judge of what is natural and harmonious in color, that there is such a gray monotony in the Vitagraph motion pictures. I may be wrong, but I love the variety of low-toned, deep-toned and rich-toned pictures. I do not mean the calico-colored daubs, but bluish-green depths in the marines, mellow lights like those of Titian and Rembrandt where tints are applied to interiors, where the reds glow softly, and rosy dawns, because what is generally appropriate in tint, though it may be uniform, is refreshing to the eye. Colors soothe us and give poetry to the commonplace.

I would like to see the photodrama reflect life as we find it, modern in motive and emotion if not always so in its general environment, so that it may reach out and grasp the human heart for the best purposes conceivable by noble minds. Once the quality of performance gains the respect of the great intelligent mass of American people, moving pictures will become a tremendous factor in our national life and in our evolution as a progressive race. Therein lies the grand opportunity.

Some Timely Observations.

By W. Stephen Bush.

THE text for this article is furnished by the following letter of an intelligent and experienced exhibitor, Mr. William C. Bettis, of the Colonial Theater, Toledo, O. As the letter is typical of the character and intelligence of a growing class of exhibitors we feel justified in subjoining it in full:

THE BETTIS AMUSEMENT CO.,
Colonial Theater.
Toledo, O.

Toledo, O., January 23, 1912.

Mr. J. P. Chalmers, Editor Moving Picture World, 125 E. 23d St., New York:

Dear Sir: I beg you will permit me, through the columns of your valued publication, to enter a protest against the enormous amount of Indian and cowboy productions released by the Independent manufacturers.

It seems to me that manufacturers should be alive to the fact that intellectual people everywhere have taken kindly to moving pictures and the exhibitors must, for the success of their future business, depend upon this class of patronage.

The pictures I speak of are tiresome and nauseating to an intelligent public, which is gradually being driven away from the better class of picture theaters on account of them.

There is really no excuse for this condition as there is a large demand for pictures of educational and uplifting qualities, showing the great industries and the beautiful scenic spots of the world.

Good dramas, clean comedies, industrial and scenic films are always appreciated by every class of patrons and there is really no excuse for the wild and woolly Indian and cowboy stuff, which is a libel on our great Western country.

I have been an amusement manager for more than twenty-five years and was one of the first men in the United States to see a future for the moving picture, and to embark in the business. I have seen it grow from a film of 50 feet, running over a rack of spools to the present magnificent productions of some manufacturers, and from an artistic as well as commercial view, I have the future of the business greatly at heart. In most cities, and I have traveled extensively, I find that interest seems to be on the wane and after talking with patrons have come to the conclusion that the reason, therefore, is the sameness of many productions, coupled with the fact that there is a great lack of educational subjects, particularly on the Independent side.

It does seem to me that men of great capability and intuition, backed by an enormous capital as our manufacturers are, for the sake of the future, would listen to the men who are in touch with the public daily, and whose business it is to please their patrons, as the success of the manufacturers depends upon the success of the exhibitors.

I built a theater last year; seating nearly one thousand people, expressly for the purpose of exhibiting moving pictures, accompanied by appropriate music and sound effects, and I cater especially to the best people of the city and you can imagine my disappointment and chagrin when I found a few days ago three out of the four reels that I run at each performance were Indian and cowboy pictures.

If there is anything more likely to ring the death knell of the moving picture than such a program, I should like to know what it is.

I must admit that the manufacturers are not wholly to blame for all the faults in the film business. The average exchange cares little or nothing about sending to the exhibitors a well balanced pleasing program, or one that appeals to his patrons. If manufacturers, exchanges and exhibitors could only be brought together to see the importance of these things and work for each other's interest. I can forsee a wonderful and successful future for all. If not, I am afraid we will all live to regret it, as I believe the patronage will fall off instead of increasing. Very truly yours,

WILL C. BETTIS.

The writer, it will be seen, is no idle theorist, but has an experience in the amusement field extending over more than a quarter of a century. The most striking part of his letter is the admonition to manufacturers to realize the fact, "that intellectual people everywhere have taken kindly to moving pictures."

There are many manufacturers, who have realized this fact for some time past; indeed, intellectual people never would have taken kindly to moving pictures if certain manufacturers had not improved the quality of the pictures. In the choice of subjects, in the matter of presenting big and exacting themes, the progress of certain producers has been most commendable. We say this without reference to any organized groups of manufacturers. Some of the finest feature films of recent days have been made by manufacturers who were not allied with any organization of film makers. It is, however, no more than just to say that the big features of the producers who supply the demands of the market every day in the year are entitled to especial credit. Such films as "Vanity Fair," "Cinderella," "David Copperfield," "The Hunchback of Notre Dame" and "Foul Play" have added to the profits of exhibitors and the prestige of the industry. Every one of these features constituted an appeal to the "intellectual people." It is but too true that many cheap, nasty and lurid "sensations" have also been put upon the market, but their success has been questionable and a sound public taste and love of decency have rejected them. None of these abominations, it is just to say, has been fathered by a manufacturer, belonging to any of the organized groups.

While there is room for improvement in every quarter it is only fair to say that in the matter of quality we are going on the right road, though we may not be fast enough.

The point must also be emphasized that exhibitors, no less than manufacturers, should be prepared to receive and properly treat the best kinds of audiences. We have, on numerous occasions, dwelt on the profund change that is taking place in the quality of moving picture audiences. This change has been apparent to the great majority of exhibitors and they are doing their best to meet the changed conditions. Their practical elimination of the illustrated song is one of the manifestations in point. Four or five years ago exhibitors deemed it an article of faith to have a male or female step forth between the reels and in a vocal agony recite "What Happened to Willie and Jennie Under the Green Apple Tree when the Cows Went Home in the Morning." Except in isolated instances this sort of thing has ceased; the improvement in the quality of the audience is responsible for this happy change. The pictorial cowboy, with all his dramatic trimmings, is likewise dying out. It seems to us a little unfair to blame one group of film producers more than another for the excessive production of cheap "Western" drama and comedy. Enough sins have been committed in this respect to go round in both camps.

Too many exhibitors are not severe enough in their treatment of the disorderly elements, which are always present. Unless these elements are dealt with in summary fashion they will frighten and keep away the desirable people. Too often have we seen a good theater practically given over to the antics of crowds of rowdies, simply through laxity of the management. Orderly audiences are as essential to success as clean pictures. Where the management feeds the patrons with cheap vaudeville in addition to pictures a spirit of roughness grows up with the swiftness of weeds. These are the theatres where scorbutic-looking youths with atrophied brain cells are hanging about the lobbies. The sight of them alone is a distinct threat to a normal man's appetite and digestion, and women avoid such places, as if they were infested with the plague.

A WORD IN SEASON.

Experienced and intelligent exhibitors know that between New Year's and Easter week is the best time for featur films of the sort of the Pathe "Passion Play," Dante's "Inferno" (Milano production), and "The Crusaders, or Jerusalem Delivered." By a singular coincidence every one of th features mentioned is especially suitable for exhibition i and near the Lenten season. To put these features on fit tingly and profitably get our booklets "How to Put On th Passion Play," "How to Put on the Crusaders," "How t Put On Dante's Inferno" (Milano production). They con tain lectures covering every scene and running evenly wit the pictures, musical suggestions and hints as to effect based on experience, together with other valuable matter to great to be enumerated in detail. "How to Put On th Passion Play" is in its second edition and the author has ha numerous letters from pleased exhibitors, who have used th booklet to advantage. All these booklets are copyrighted an their author is W. Stephen Bush, whose lectures on motio pictures have attained much popularity, wholly based o their merits. The price of the booklets is nominal, a dolla will bring any of them to your address prepaid.

"The Moorish Bride."

Beautiful Cines Subject Laid in Medieval Days—Kleine Release.

Reviewed by Jas. S. McQuade.

A STORY of the Moors, laid in Spain during medieval times, has been filmed by Cines under the title, "The Moorish Bride," and will be released by George Kleine on Saturday, March 9.

While this subject cannot be classed with "Brutus" or "Joseph in Egypt," by the same company, it is well above the average film in beauty of backgrounds and interior settings, in picturesque and correct costuming and in the easy, natural massing of large concourses of people. The photography is uniform throughout, and shows good camera work and careful technical treatment of prints in the factory.

There are three commanding outdoor scenes in this film—the meeting in the palace square, before John of Austria, to hear the new tax proclamation; the retreat of the Moors to their mountain fortress, and the storming and capture of the latter by the Spaniards. The scene showing the long line of men, women and children winding through the mountain defiles, with herders conducting sheep, cattle and asses—the latter heavily laden with household and other effects—is very picturesque. Here is best shown the painstaking of costuming. Note how varied the costumes are, in keeping with the composite character of the crowd.

The story of the film is adapted from "El Tusani," a drama written by the Spanish Shakespeare, Calderon de la Barca. The love of a woman is the cause of an outbreak between the Spaniards and the Moors, both races occupying Spain at the time.

Clare is the beautiful daughter of a rich Moorish merchant, who holds a seat in the Senate chamber, in which the majority of the members are Spaniards. Clare's hand is sought by a proud Spanish gentleman and soldier, Mendoza, but she shows her preference for Tuzani, a young man, gentle bred, of her own people. Mendoza secretly vows revenge.

In the Senate chamber he craftily introduces and carries a bill that increases taxation of the Moors to the point of persecution. Clare's father vainly opposes the measure and, on meeting Mendoza by chance, in the square, after the dismissal of the Senate, he vehemently upbraids him for the injustice done his race. Mendoza seizes the merchant's cane and beats him severely. Next day, to add to the discontent of the Moors, the new tax proclamation is read before the assembled populace, in the presence of John of Austria, commander-in-chief of the Spanish forces.

We next see the secret meeting of Moorish chiefs and leaders, at which Clare's father is asked to accept the kingship of his people. He refuses, but names another. Then follows the flight of the Moors to their stronghold in the Alpuzarra mountains, Clare and her father among them.

Tuzani, who had been away during the troublous tax imposition, learns of Clare's whereabouts, and succeeds in reaching and entering the mountain city after many perils. His arrival is immediately followed by the storming and carrying of the Moorish stronghold by the Spaniards. Mendoza seizes Clare and carries her off to his tent in the Spanish camp, but is followed by Tuzani, in disguise, who succeeds in protecting her at a critical moment.

Tuzani and Clare are brought before John of Austria. On learning of Mendoza's treachery, the great soldier honors Tuzani and Clare by giving them freedom and honorable conduct outside the Spanish lines.

Important Patent Decision.

Judge Hand of U. S. District Court Dismisses Patents Company Complaint Against I. M. P. Co. in Latham Loop Case.

The United States District Court for the Southern District of New York (Judge Learned Hand) has just filed an opinion directing that the Bill of Complaint be dismissed with costs in the case of the Motion Picture Patents Company, Complainant, against the Independent Moving Picture Company of America, Defendant. This suit was begun on February 10, 1910, for infringement of Letters Patent of the United States No. 707934, issued August 26, 1902, to Woodville Latham, for projecting kinetoscopes. The Motion Picture Patents Company claimed that this patent dominated and controlled all the projecting machines employed by the Independent exhibitors throughout the country, and all the cameras employed by the Independent manufacturers. This claim was denied by the Independents. The suit which has just been decided in favor of the Independents was accepted by both sides as a test case and a large amount of testimony was taken, beginning in May, 1910, and ending in August, 1911. Altogether upwards of 2,000 printed pages of testimony and exhibits were presented to the Court when the case was argued at final hearing on November 22, and 23, 1911.

The case was argued on behalf of the Complainant by Mr. Parker W. Page, of counsel, on the brief of Messrs. Kerr, Page, Cooper & Hayward, solicitors and of counsel for the Complainant; and by Mr. Wm. Houston Kenyon and Mr. Richard Eyre, of counsel for Defendant, upon the brief of Messrs. Kenyon & Kenyon, Solicitors and of counsel for Defendant.

The opinion of Judge Hand, which directs that the Bill of Complaint be dismissed, is based upon the finding that the Defendant has not infringed the patent. The Defendant used a camera having feed mechanism claimed by the Complainant to be the invention of Latham, and to infringe claims 1, 3, 5 and 8 letters patent No. 707934.

The Complainant argued that the Latham invention was as applicable to a camera as to a projecting machine and that it was first embodied by Latham in a camera. This argument was essential to its case because Armat and Jenkins (and not Latham) were the first to embody the feeding mechanism in a successful projecting machine.

The Court in a carefully considered opinion holds that the patent does not cover cameras, and applies that holding to the question of infringement, going no further than that because that was sufficient to dispose of the case. But the holding leads equally to the conclusion that the patent being for a projecting machine is anticipated by Armat and Jenkins and consequently wholly invalid.

The Court says:

> "In spite of the many questions which this case raises there is only one that I shall consider, because it seems to me quite fatal to this suit, although it does not, directly at any rate, affect the validity of the patent itself. I mean the point that the patent does not cover a camera, which is the only infringing device in evidence."

After discussing the Patent Office Interference between Latham and Armat and Casler, in which the final decision of the Court of Appeals of the District of Columbia, filed on January 8, 1901, was in favor of Armat

> "upon the especial ground that Latham had not perfected his machine as a projecting machine in the spring of 1895."

The Court proceeds:

> "After that decision it was therefore conclusively settled that Latham could never get a patent for a projecting machine which covered the substance of the issue which had been framed. While it was open to him, therefore, upon his prior application to get a patent for anything not covered by the interference, nothing else was open to him."

And again:

> "Hard cases should not make bad law, and a patentee who has had the whole field to choose from, cannot justly complain if he be held to his choice. Out of all of the discussion which this subject has called forth, I can see nothing that finally remains except that a court should on the one hand try sympathetically and intelligently to understand what the inventor meant by the words he used, and on the other should hold him to that meaning, or candidly avow that his patent is not the measure of his rights.
> "Now when the patentee says that his invention consists of an apparatus for projecting pictures, he is speaking not of a single disclosure, used for purposes of illustration, but of what the 'invention' is, and the 'invention' is to be found in his claims. It is precisely equivalent to saying: 'what is to be found in my claims is an apparatus,' etc. Any ordinary intelligent man reading that preamble and then reading the claims would surely think that the claims were only for a projector. This is especially evident when one looks at Latham's patent for a camera and a projector filed six months later, which shows that he distinguished between projector and camera, and that when he thought a machine capable of both he said so clearly. In view of this application filed after the application for the patent in suit, but before these amendments were made, and with it, as it were, staring the patentee in the face, can there really be any ground for insisting that the patent should now be allowed to cover cameras?"

And again:

> "Therefore, I insist that the whole proceedings show from the outset a continual purpose to cover only projectors, starting expressly with that purpose, and changing only with another purpose in mind, at least avowedly. It is not, therefore, a narrow or technical construction of the patent: It is a construction which tries to understand the proceedings as a whole, and really to interpret them. It is rather the complainant which seizing upon words of general applicability and neglecting to read them in their history, is really twisting them beyond their proper scope through the invocation of liberal canons which have here no application."

And again:

> "So much for the argument drawn from the formal change in the claims; but the vice goes to the essence. In his second patent, which as I have said, he made expressly applicable to cameras and projectors, etc., etc."

And again:

> "I am now assuming for argument that the changed claims now cover cameras which before they did not. If so, then the complainant's dilemma is this, in so far as the 'invention' resides now in the 'positive feed' feature it is a complete abandonment of his position for nearly six years after the application was filed; in so far as it resides in the 'rest' feature, it completely ignores the interference litigation as though it had never occurred. As to the former, I think I have already shown it in enough detail; there was no suggestion anywhere of it till the date I mention; there was repudiation of its accuracy in the second patent. The means to secure the rest were of consequence only in so far as they actually did assure the period of rest. If the patent abandons that, and substitutes the 'positive feed' as the patent, it has become a 'new invention' in every sense.
> "Moreover there are more important considerations than the mere lapse of time. Armat and Casler had machines which in respect of 'positive feed,' as the complainant now understands it, infringe his present claims. Furthermore, in respect of that feature probably his camera use is sufficient to antedate them. By this change of front he has included those whom before he did not except by the original feature of his claims upon which he was beaten, and this by the selection of a feature he had originally abandoned. Now, the policy of the statute was to prevent that very thing; it was to prevent a man's gambling upon his ingenuity, avoiding the expense of a patent till his invention proved successful, and then, after others had acted upon his inaction, getting a monopoly for the full period of seventeen years. If Latham had waited so long without filing any application, he could not have succeeded, and the rule against allowing him to amend is designed to prevent his doing by indirection what he could not do directly.
> "Coming now to the 'rest' feature, the complainant's case is even worse, for his attorney quite naively got those claims upon the theory that the interference issue was a mere nullity and effected nothing. Now, it is not necessary to determine how far the issue was correct and how far 'pause and illumination' have anything to do with 'rest.' It may be that Latham suffered by the reduction of his claims, though I think it quite clear that he did not, but he fought it out upon that issue for nearly five years, and it is really rather too hardy a position to take in a court, however it may be before an examiner, that such an assent does not estop him. While Latham's attorney conceded that Armat got the benefit of the interference, yet, since he denied that Latham's claims were embodied at all in the issue, it is hard to see what Armat did get. The matter is indeed quite confused for the only relevant claim Latham then had was original claim ten and that was a very special one. However, it said nothing of 'illumination' as distinct from 'rest' and the patent was throughout based on the supposition that the 'illumination' and the 'rest' occupied the same period. The courts did not deny that the patents so intended, but they did deny that the use in the spring of 1895, reduced that feature to practice, though Latham's attorney seems to have supposed that the courts had confused the two. To reinstate the 'rest' claims of which claim eight in suit is one, was really a most extraordinary vagary of the lay mind, as it seems to me, and deprived Armat of not only the substance of his success, as did the substitution of the 'positive feed' claims, but even of the semblance of any fruits of victory whatever. It cannot be necessary to show that the Patent Office is not the place in which to play fast and loose, like that.
> "Much of the last argument goes beyond the question of whether the claims cover a camera, but I mean to decide nothing else. My point is that if they do include a camera, they were brought in by an amendment which was in part a radical departure from the invention, after six years and when others had secured rights with much expense upon the faith of the application as it was; in remainder, a mere disregard of all the proceedings theretofore had in the Patent Office. What the effect of this may be upon the claims or any other purpose, I leave to be decided when it may arise.
> "The bill will be dismissed for non-infringement with costs."

The court thus holds that the claims of the Latham patent 707,934, do not cover cameras. The suit being directed against a camera, the court finds non-infringement and stops there because that ends that suit. However, the next logical step (in case the patent is asserted against a projector) is that the patent is wholly invalid, because anticipated by Armat and Jenkins. If the use of a camera after the patent does not infringe, then the making of a camera before it cannot give date to the invention or support the patent.

The Moving Picture Educator

THE effort of Mr. R. G. Hollaman, of the Eden Musee Company, to exploit the pictures along educational lines culminated on Wednesday, Feb. 7th, in the most narkable demonstration of the educational scope of the tion picture that has ever come to our notice. It began th a special exhibition at 4 o'clock of a series of pictures de by Mr. W. H. Harbeck, of Seattle, Wash. These rep- sented the result of several months' arduous work last mmer in Alaska and gave a very graphic description of at little known territory.

Utilizing his knowledge of trick photography, Mr. Harbeck ry ingeniously showed on the Alaskan map the position of e principal towns, rivers and railroads. These appeared d disappeared on the map as the lecturer described them. e navigable portions of the rivers and bays were illustrated forms representing vessels; a novel idea and one that can used to great advantage in the preparation of educational ns.

Mr. Harbeck lectured to his own pictures and at the close s warmly complimented by prominent Wall Street finan- rs present who are directly interested in the Alaskan lway and mining developments. These men had never ited Alaska, but said, after seeing the pictures, that they re as fully enlightened as if they had made the journey. e Alaskan pictures will shortly be shown before the Pres- nt and members of the cabinet in Washington.

In the evening a two and a half hour's show was given der the auspices of the Educational Committee of the tham Club. Among the ladies present were Mrs. Alfred ooks, president; Miss Josephine Walton, Mrs. A. A. Cloud, s. Minnie Baer, Miss Marie Baer, Mrs. James G. Blaine, s. J. E. Palmer and Miss Mary Lawton Metcalfe. Also presentatives from other societies, including Mrs. Wm. mmings Story, Regent of the Manhattan Chapter of the ughters of the American Revolution; Mrs. Mary W. eene, of the Staten Island Chapter, and a number of mem- rs of the Minerva Club, the Illuminate Club, of Brooklyn, e Civic Club, and a number of school principals, both male d female.

The program embraced almost every branch of study. riculture and mining, by a splendid series of pictures of e Canadian Northwest, by W. H. Harbeck; History, by "ands Across the Sea," an Eclair picture of the war of the olution; drama, by "The Tempest," a Thanhouser interpre- ion of Shakespeare; Travel, Botany, Agriculture, Zoology, ence and Microscopy were represented by selections from umont and the Urban Educational Series. About 400 wit- ssed the exhibition, and the applause was frequent.

Lectures were given with the pictures which were run nost without intercession on two machines, over 10,000 t being shown. In the brief intercessions Mr. R. G. Holl- an spoke of his desire to see the picture more widely used educational work, and Mrs. Mary Lawton Metcalfe and ers prominent in educational work voiced their apprecia- n of the interesting demonstration and pointed out the eat future for the picture in educational work. Mrs. Alfred ooks, president of the Gotham Club, in thanking the man- ement of the Eden Musee for the exhibition, said that in e two hours and a half she had learned more about the ces and things that had been shown than she could have ned by years of study and travel.

We understand that it is the intention of the Eden Musee mpany to set apart certain nights of each week for the hibition of educational pictures.

HOW PLANTS ARE BORN, LIVE, AND DIE.

A little while ago we were pleased with the instruction en by a film showing the birth and life of a plant from germinating seed to its full growth. We have now an- er similar yet more complete lesson, giving the full history a plant from its inception to its latest end. Directed by instructions we are told:

"1. This picture of plant life was taken in such a way that the development which takes place in nature appears here, in scientifically correct reproduction, accelerated 800 times."

It is certainly a striking coincidence that while the life of the plant is thus shown with such accelerated speed, the knowledge of the student is equally increased, for does he not learn in an incredibly short space of time that which previously took a laborious and ofttimes impossible length of time is so far as its adaptability to school knowledge was concerned.

As a lesson in botany the next series is exceedingly interesting and instructive. The writer well remembers the time and patience required by experiment to learn that which is here both instantaneously demonstrated, taught and learned by aid of this most powerful and silent teacher.

"2. Under the influence of the moisture and heat the grain swells, and its envelope bursts in the bosom of the earth.

"3. The germ develops; the roots spread out to get the nourishment in the soil which the stalk pierces.

"4. Its principal roots divide into secondary roots.

"5. At the extremity of the stalk appear little by little, the leaves, which are the 'lungs' of the plant."

The knowledge is amplified by its illustrative adaptability to the extent of teaching the source of "daily bread," thereby increasing the admiration of the student of that marvelous combination of wisdom and power, which have brought together these wonderfully reproductive agencies in nature.

"6. In this way develop the grains of wheat which supply us with our daily bread.

"7. Wheat stalks coming out of the soil."

The powers of maturity, which is also the age of beauty, being fully established, there of necessity follows the lesson of the further powers of reproductiveness.

The lesson of the seed and fruit-bearing nature which was ordained to have "its seed within itself" vindicates and honors its creator, and commands the admiration of the human mind which is blessed with the knowledge of these, its inferior wonders.

"8. Completely developed, the plant will produce a flower from which more grains will come into being—a new source of life.

"9. The hyacinth shoots forth proudly a bloom of exquisite perfume.

"10. The autumn comes and nature falls asleep. The leaves and petals become yellow and the flower droops and dies."

Nature's continuous resurrection, is a fitting definition for this glorious repetition of nature, which pleases and fascinates the beholders.

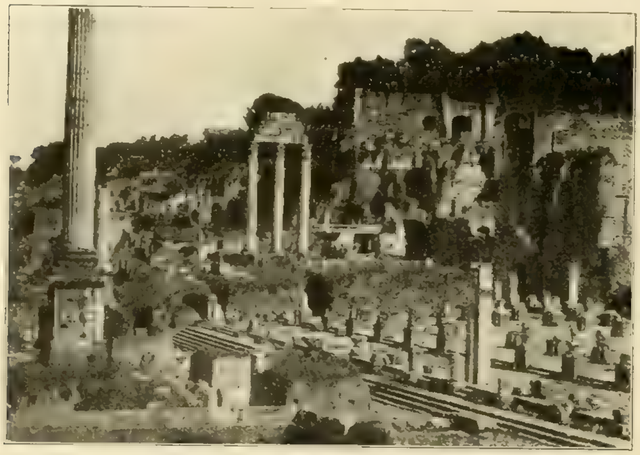
PICTURES HELP LIBRARIES.

Mr. George W. Fuller, librarian of the Public Library, Spokane, Wash., makes the statement that moving picture shows stimulate a desire for reading, which finds expression in an increased patronage of public libraries of which he is in charge. "There has been a marked increase for the demand of 'Dante'," said Mr. Fuller, "since the Inferno pictures have been produced in this country." Mr. Fuller further states that pictures do not keep children away from the libraries, but on the contrary since pictures became popular the demand for children's books has shown a remarkable increase.

ANCIENT ROME AS SEEN TO-DAY.

Old Rome is ever new! The historian, the sage, the student, all seek to read its unwritten history. No traveler fails to "see Rome," indeed he would not miss seeing it; is it not a part of the world's richest history? In every school to-day a picture of the Coliseum is as familiar as almost any local scene to the scholar; a knowledge of Rome has become as necessary a part of all education which follows after the three R's. It is not surprising, therefore, that a new film has been released illustrative of the Rome of to-day, life is now given to the otherwise dead scenes, giving the children in school the equal advantage with the traveler, who goes far to see that which is now brought to the classroom.

An engraving of the Appian Way was of dry interest to the scholar who had to learn of its building thirty-six centuries ago, but seen upon the screen with the yoked oxen drawing a load of provender as of those days of old, one can almost fancy one's self treading those time-worn pavements over which emperors, apostles, martyrs, and indeed many of the world's worthies have passed in triumph or in defeat; as victors or as victims.



The Forum.

The arch of Constantine and the forum each speak with an eloquent silence of the things we know have taken place within their shadows and glorious ruins are as an echo of the departed glory which enshrined them in the days of their perfect grandeur.

Coliseum.

The familiar Coliseum, so far as the exterior is concerned, becomes a new lesson, as its interior is given in detail, showing a massiveness of construction almost age defying, while one seems to be traversing its corridors once resounding with the tread and rustle of proud, rich, yet bloodthirsty citizens. Again history is easier to learn by a system making forgetfulness difficult, and the school which can take its children through the everlasting ruins of ancient Rome, is imparting a twofold lesson of lively interest, instead of one of dreary monotony. May many other such films follow this, from Greece and Egypt and Syria!

HARRY SPOOR RETURNS TO LONDON.

Mr. Harry A. Spoor, London representative of the Essanay Company, sailed Wednesday, January 24th, on his return trip to England. Mr. Spoor carries back with him knowledge of elaborate preparation being made at the Chicago studio of Essanay for some brilliant productions in the near future.

The Folk Proposition is Generally Favored by Civic o-cieties—It May Pass.

The Committee on Laws and Legislation of the New rk Board of Aldermen have received many letters in refer ce to the new ordinance proposed by Mayor Gaynor's m-mittee regulating moving picture shows in the greater y. At the recent public hearing on the ordinance many pe le attended and gave their views on the matter. Some of he views expressed by representatives of the sheet iron inte ts were to the effect that the new provision in regard to n-struction of booths would shut them out entirely from r k-ing sheet iron booths under the new ordinance. T ey wished for a section similar to the State law, which ey claim allows them to manufacture sheet iron booths u er the provision as to fireproof structures, claiming that s et iron is absolutely fireproof.

Censoring of the films was discussed at considerable le th by those in attendance under the "public morality" cl se of the ordinance and the Aldermen were told how the n worked in Chicago under the police rule. There was p c-tically little opposition to the ordinance as constructed d it is very probable that it will be passed by the Alderme

Some of the letters received by the Aldermen will s w the attitude of the writers toward this measure:

Secretary, Board of Aldermen, City Hall, New York City:

Dear Sir.—We have been much interested in the progress of discuss n the Board of Aldermen regarding the motion picture ordinance and ve urged upon many of the men of the churches a support of the new ordin e.

I am heartily in accord with the phases of the ordinance introduced st Tuesday.

First.—As touching the increase of the seating capacity of the halls to 0.

Second.—The elimination of the vaudeville stage for fire safety and p lic morality.

Third.—As committing the licenses and programs of the shows to the is-cretion of the Mayor, since it places upon the shoulders of one man res si-bility and also gives him the machinery for enforcing the law. And,

Fourth.—As it affects the lighting of the auditorium in every case.

I trust this amended ordinance, as introduced, will have your support nd that of your committee, and that it may soon become a statute.

Respectfully submitted, ORRIN G. COC

The Recreation Alliance adopted these resolutions:

Whereas, The proper regulation of motion picture theaters is one o he important problems ahead of the City government, in view of the fact t a third of a million citizens patronize these theaters every day; and

Whereas, The Commissioner of Accounts, after investigation, reporte to the Mayor in March, 1911, on the condition of motion picture shows and de certain recommendations; and

Whereas, Subsequently to this report, the Mayor appointed a committ of citizens to draft an ordinance based on the report of the Commission of Accounts and other such data as might be available, which committee s. after several months' work, recommended a complete ordinance gove ng the motion picture theaters, be it

Resolved, That the Recreation Alliance endorses the report of the Ma 's Committee and recommends the adoption of the proposed ordinance dr ed by that committee with the following suggested amendment:

That a section be inserted reading substantially as follows: "The B au of Licenses, through its motion picture inspectors, shall inspect the char er of exhibitions in motion picture theaters and shall report to the Mayor ay offense against morality or public welfare. The Bureau of Licenses, er authority of the Mayor, shall supervise the programs of motion picture e-aters from a moral standpoint."

Executive Offices, The City Club of New York, 55 W. 44th Street.

To the Board of Aldermen of The City of New York:

Gentlemen.—We respectfully call your attention to, and urge your f r-able action upon, items 87, 88 and 89 introduced by Alderman Fol on Tuesday, January 9, 1912.

These resolutions, with a few minor changes, embody the recommenda ns of the Mayor's Committee on Motion Picture Shows. It also embodi in all essentials the recommendations made by the Commissioner of Acc ts in a report to the Mayor dated March 22, 1911. That report was made er an extensive investigation.

The matters which seem to us of great importance and worthy of e re approval are:

1. Seating Capacity.—The maximum seating capacity for motion p re theaters is increased from 300 to 600. This will enable profitable m r picture enterprises to be conducted in entire accordance with the le, eliminating moral and physical hazards which now exist.

2. Clearly Defined Requirements for Safety. The requirements as to struction, ventilation, lighting and beating are made clear and definite.

3. Concentration of Responsibility.—Responsibility for the enforcem f the proposed ordinance, if enacted, will rest upon the License Bure d its action and the action of various City Departments with regard to m picture shows will all be made a matter of record.

We believe that the opportunity is presented for a constructive and r-able piece of legislation which will reflect credit upon those responsibl or its passage. Respectfully submitted,

The Prison Labor Question.

A Sociological Problem Propounded by the National Committee on Prison Labor, Solved by Edison Picture.

ANOTHER of the Edison sociological pictures is soon to be released under the title "For the Commonwealth." This subject has been made by the Edison players at the instigation of the National Committee on Prison Labor and under its direction and co-operation. It has long been a question of prisonology as to what is the best means of giving employment to the inmates of State penal institutions. At first the prisoners were farmed out to contractors, who installed plants for the manufacture of various necessaries of life, which product was sold in the general market in competition with free labor, to the great detriment of the latter. In some states this method still prevails. Of later years other methods have been tried, such s road making; but as that is an occupation requiring no kill it has been considered inadequate to meet the demand hat the convict should be put in a position to earn an honest iving upon being released from prison, if he is to be pernanently reformed and turned into a good citizen. Students ind authorities on the subject have urged that the prisoners e given an opportunity to learn a trade and that their roduct may be used to supply the needs of other State haritable institutions not otherwise provided for, which will, n a measure, withdraw it from competition with free workrs. It is to bring out this phase of the question of prison abor that the picture "For the Commonwealth" was proluced. Members of the National Committee have inspected he picture and have pronounced it most satisfactory.

Scene from "For the Commonwealth" (Edison).

The story of the picture is, in the light of the subject, of considerable interest and congratulations are due the Edison players for having produced an interpretation of an idea that is at once lucid and interesting. An unskilled laborer applies at a shoe factory for employment and is told that he will not do, as men with brains rather than muscle are needed. He returns home, where poverty of the direst sort reigns. His wife berates him for his inability to obtain food for herself and child, whereupon he leaves the house in a rage and does not return. Days afterward the poor woman sees her husband on the street and points him out to the police. The policeman attempts to arrest him, but he snatches the officer's baton and beats him over the head. At this juncture another officer rushes up and the man is arrested and later sent to prison for assaulting an officer.

To keep from starvation the wife, now cast upon her own resources, obtains work from a shirtwaist factory which pays her a pittance for her labor. The husband is in prison and we are given a glimpse of him in his cell as the Governor of the State passes along the corridors on a tour of inspection, on which occasion he announces that the prisoners are to be given a chance to work.

In the next scene the prisoners are shown in the new factory where an instructor is teaching them how to operate sewing machines on shirtwaists.

Coming back to the wife the picture shows her, with others of her class, delivering their finished work at the office of the shirtwaist factory and receiving the information that there will be no more work, for the reason that the competition of convict labor has cheapened the product to a point where it is impossible for the makers to employ free labor. This seems to be the last straw and the poor woman is compelled to seek refuge with her child in the poorhouse.

Scene from "For the Commonwealth" (Edison).

Finding their means of livelihood gone, the shirtwaist makers get together and send a committee to the Governor to explain to him the awful situation that has resulted through the competition of prison labor. The Governor listens to their story and dismisses them, but he remains in thought. He realizes that his efforts to ameliorate the condition of the state's wards has resulted in the impoverishment of its free citizens. What to do is a problem that is difficult for him to solve.

Our next view of the Governor is when he is upon a visit to the poorhouse—one of the many where the utterly impoverished are compelled to seek refuge. Here he finds that some of the inmates are without shoes and calls the attention of the keeper to the circumstance. He learns that there is no money at the command of the poorhouse authorities for such purposes. This gives the Governor an idea—he will set the convicts at work making such things as are needed in the State institutions.

As a result we are shown another view of the prison shop, with the prisoners at work making shoes under the direction of a competent instructor.

After a lapse of time the husband is released from prison and again seeks employment at the factory where he was turned down at the beginning of the story. This time, when the manager intimates that they want nothing but skilled labor, he is able to prove that he can operate a shoe-making machine and is given employment at once.

The conclusion of the story is the happy reunion between the husband and the wife and child in a neat little home which his industry has provided.

The cast of players in this picture includes the following:

An unskilled laborer	Barry O'Moore
His wife	Mary Fuller
Their child	Edna May Weick
Governor of the State	Robert Brower
Warden of the prison	Charles Ogle

A CLEVER EDISON COMEDY.

For clean, straight comedies the work of the Edison players has long been commendable. They have been able to produce an interesting picture without resort to cheap tricks or questionable situations. Here is one that will be appreciated by the general run of picture fans. It is entitled, "Lost—Three Hours." The principal characters are "a jolly good fellow," who is impersonated by Mr. Augustus Phillips, and his wife, which part is taken by the charming Gertrude McCoy. Mr. "Goodfellow" has been in the habit of staying out late nights, much to the disgust of his lovely wife, who remonstrates with him upon the selfishness of his course in neglecting her for his club friends. He promises to be good, but just then one of the boys drops in and insists upon his going to the club. "Just this once," he begs, and his wife lets him off. But it is two o'clock when he returns home and finds her in tears waiting for him. Then he promises never again. But the very next night an urgent telephone call of important doings at the club tears him away from his beloved wife. We get a glimpse of him at the club transacting the very important business of opening jack pots and crooking his elbow.

Scene from "Lost—Three Hours" (Edison).

So frequently does he practice the latter athletic exercise that he arrives home in a comatose state. Wifey is waiting in a chamber above and calls to him. He has promised to be home early and insists that it is only eleven o'clock. Just then the cuckoo clock in the hall registers two o'clock and to make good his statement, hubby has to "coo coo" the remaining nine times. He thinks that he has deceived his dear little wife and retires. But she is wise and, while hubby is sleeping the same kind of a sleep said to come to the just, she is fixing the alarm clock and hubby's watch to agree with the time as announced by him, setting the clock back three hours.

Hubby gets up in the morning much earlier than he has any desire to rise. He attempts to eat his breakfast and goes to the office, where he is greeted with much merriment by his fellow workers, who point to the time of day, but with great severity by the old man, who calls him down proper for being late at business. He compares the time of the office clock with his watch and slowly it dawns upon him that his wife has played him a clever trick; so when he gets home that night he has to admit that he was not so smart as he thought he was. Also he promises to be good in the future, and keeps it.

The portrayal of the wife by Miss McCoy is one of the best things that this young lady has given us in some time.

"THE YARN OF THE NANCY BELL" (Edison).

Among the "Bab Ballads" by Sir W. S. Gilbert is the "Yarn of the Nancy Bell," being the story told by an ancient mariner to a gullible tourist. It is an odd bit of picture making, something quite different from the usual run, and must be seen to be properly appreciated. The story which the old tar tells is that of the ill-fated "Nancy Bell," long since gone to Davy Jones's locker, and of which he is the sole survivor. He relates how he and his companions, escaping to a desert isle from their stranded ship, feast upon each other until all are consumed but himself. The story is illustrated in the picture and, one by one we see the crew of the "Nancy Bell," from the captain down to the sole survivor, cooked and eaten. It is a pleasant novelty in the picture line.

Scene from "The Yarn of the 'Nancy Bell.'" (Edison).

"THE HEIR APPARENT" (Edison).

In the line of drama, "The Heir Apparent" is entitled to a leading position in the week's releases. The story is laid in an imaginary principality in Germany, over which presides His Serene Highness Duke Humbert. The Duke's son, Rudolph, is his father's successor. The picture opens on a winter's scene with a young woman artist sketching the castle of the duke. The man approaches and calls her attention to the "No Trespass" sign, and the girl packs up her stuff and hastens away, accompanied by the young man, who helps carry her easel. The acquaintance thus began ripens into love. Returning to the duke, we are told that on account of his illness he will be represented in the grand celebration about to take place by his son. The son appears in full uniform and is greatly admired by his royal father. He then goes out, enters the carriage and the procession starts.

Scene from "The Heir Apparent" (Edison).

Passing the grandstand, an anarchist dashes toward the carriage with a revolver in his hand. The young woman artist, all unaware that the young duke is her lover, is the first to see the assassin's attempt and by quick action prevents the murder. The man is arrested and the girl, tempo-ily overcome by the excitement, is quickly lifted into an omobile by the young duke, who recognizes her and stens to her home.

The brave act of the girl in saving the duke's life decides course as concerns her. He approaches his royal father d announces his determination to marry her. This is more n the old duke can endure. He denounces his son and ders him out of the house. The young man goes to meet sweetheart and they are secretly married. But just bee the marriage takes place some soldiers enter the renzvous and insult the girl, only to be promptly knocked wn by the young duke. Now that the duke has renounced claim to the throne of his father, he may be challenged his inferiors. A duel follows in which the young duke is unded. He is taken to his private residence and his her is advised of his serious condition. Greatly affected the information, the old duke goes to see his son whom believes to be at death's door. As he enters the chamber is confronted by the young wife, whose calm and majes- mien so impresses the old man that he is compelled to knowledge her. By careful nursing the young duke revers. The picture closes with the father's benediction on his son and daughter.

The character of the old duke is portrayed by Marc Mcrmott. The young woman artist is portrayed by Miriam sbitt, and a most impressive scene is that where they e each other for the first time at the bedside of the Duke dolph. It is in every respect a splendid production.

"HOW STATES ARE MADE" (Vitagraph).

s it possible to produce anything new and original in a called "Western picture"? The answer is, yes. The Vitaph has done it, and in doing it has made a big feature the same time. "How States Are Made" deals with a wellown phase of Western life that everybody seems to have erlooked in the mad scramble to supply the demand for "estern stuff." A good old-fashioned "land-rush" is the scene in this interesting picture, with all the other scenes aring directly on it. The subject is one that is going to be ll received all over the world. It will appeal with equal ce to an Englishman, a Chinaman, a Kaffir or a Turk. It is a picture strong in action and full of the affairs of men and, incidentally women. Shorn of the artificialities of city life and the unreliabilities of alleged cowboy life, it stands out like a leaf of true American history as compared with a page from a cheap novel.

A land rush! Who has not heard of such a thing? Yet, how few have any idea of the way it is done, or the great excitement that pervades it. All that most of us know about land rushes is what we have read in news and magazine stories, so this picture is in the nature of a revelation. It gets down to business in the very first scene, in which we see a family of three in a "prairie schooner" making their way overland. Later they come in sight of other emigrant outfits bound in the same direction, and soon there is quite a caravan. They finally arrive at a temporary city near the line of the territory that is shortly to be opened by the United States government. Those who intend to stake a claim are obliged to enter their names at the government agent's tent.

The day of opening arrives and we see stretched out in a long line across a rolling prairie, as far as the eye can reach, a miscellaneous array of vehicles and saddle horses awaiting the booming of the signal gun to start in the mad rush for homesteads. This scene and the one that follows have an element of greatness in them . Every known kind of prairie transportation is represented in the odd line-up: Buggies, surreys, schooners, farm wagons, sulkies, ox-carts, runabouts, omnibuses, carryalls, etc., etc. On looking them over it seems that in such cases the government should have appointed an official handicapper, for it is most certainly an uneven race. As the cannon booms, the start is made, and a great sight it is. The great line advances and quickly resolves into a hare and hound race that is full of excitement and interest. The method of recording claims is clearly shown, including the weaknesses of the idea wherein it affords opportunities for rascality and advantages for the strong over the weak.

Incidentally, in the picture, there is a certain heart interest between the home-seeker and his wife, showing their efforts to remain steadfast to each other in the face of beguilements and knavery. It is a blood-stirring picture, rugged and bold, and the kind that men like to see. It is a feature that will live up to strong billing.

OBSERVATIONS.

BY OUR MAN ABOUT TOWN.

I WAS not surprised that the motion picture exhibitors in favor of increasing the seating capacity of picture houses to six hundred slackened up in their zeal and determination in the movement when the holiday season arrived, nor did a similar suspension of operations on the part of their opponents surprise me. But the inactivity displayed by the exhibitors has puzzled me. Are they hibernating? Now is the time they should be on the job, they really should have been at work before the old year went out. If they had, I believe they would have pretty near won out, or at least been able to so assemble matters that a renewal of the project would not involve as much time as it will now require to get the machinery into motion again.

Whatever the majority of exhibitors may lose by any local or State legislation during the balance of this winter, or the coming spring, will to a great measure be chargeable to an absence of unity, co-operation, an aggressive spirit and the power of discernment in their own ranks. It has always been this way. The moving picture exhibitors, as distinguished from the semi-exhibitor and vaudeville man, has been known to me since he first entered the field, and I regret to say that aside from the management of their individual places there have been but few of them who have not prejudiced their own interests by a lack of courage, suspicion of the efforts of some of their more wide-awake fellow-exhibitors, or an unfortunate economical spirit.

In support of this view I may be pardoned for again recalling the incidents that attended the arbitrary closing of all the picture theaters in Greater New York on Christmas Eve a few years ago. The campaign that was instantaneously inaugurated by a few energetic men who were affected by the unjust mandate was of the greatest benefit to everyone of the exhibitors, yet there were many who did no more to help it along than to attend the meeting called to perfect the arrangements and sign the required documents. They did not put up a cent to help defray the expenses and left all the labor to a few.

When, a few weeks ago, the questions of increasing the capacity of theaters and securing the admission of children to them during certain hours of the day were before the Mayor and Board of Aldermen the indifference displayed by so many exhibitors in the outcome of such vitally important propositions in their behalf was discouraging, not to say astonishing, especially in view of the powerful machinery and strength of campaign put in operation by those who desire to put "the small fry" out of business. At that time I asked several of these people why they were not on the alert and doing something to aid the efforts of those who were engaged in a battle which practically meant the salvation of the small picture houses. Some told me they were personally managing their places and could not spare the time to attend the various meetings and conferences. Others declared that the fight was one that should be made by the film manufacturers, as the latter were deriving their revenue from the exhibitors and should protect them. One exhibitor said to me: "I am not worrying about the outcome, nor do I intend to spend any money on the matter. If the manufacturers who get my money through the film exchange do not protect me and I am put out of business I will be able to afford it as well as they will. I will lose one small place. They will lose many."

At that time I took the view that the manufacturers could not afford to take part in the controversy. I conceded that if many of the smaller picture houses should be obliged to go out of business if not permitted to increase the seating capacity and admit children under certain restrictions the film manufacturers would in all probability feel the falling off of orders for films, but I also maintained that this effect would be only temporarily. The manufacturing end of the business has become so gigantic that millions of dollars are invested in it and there must be a suitable revenue that they will not give up for the sake of having houses in which to put their productions. I do not think the manufacturers are in a position at present to become actively identified with any movement to create additional outlets for their productions, or that they are contemplating such a step. If I did I would not hesitate to say that the threatened exhibitors, in other words the exhibitors who claim they cannot stay in the business if not granted the privileges asked, need not look to the manufacturers for support in their movement. The reason is quite plain. The general trend is towards the establishment of large picture houses and it will eventually be paramount, but this will not come through the enlargement of the smaller houses. It will be brought about by the erection of the houses required. At the present time the relief sought by the small places is being fought by people who already have large places in operation, and as these places are quite numerous and are also customers of the manufacturers it is quite clear that the latter cannot identify themselves with either faction.

I will admit that there are many more of the smaller places than the larger ones, and the former require more reels. I will also admit that more of the smaller places take a much better grade of service than the large places do in proportion to the number. These admissions would seem to justify the declaration that the small places should be accorded the support of the manufacturers, but I have in mind the following remarks made to me by a gentleman closely identified with the manufacturing interests: "The point is not without merit, but it is subject to many qualifying conditions. There are many places that would improve their film shows if they could enlarge their seating capacity, which would mean an increase of payments to the film exchanges and demand for more recent and a l er grade of releases, which naturally would in a measure benefit the r nufacturers, but a great many places, I fear, would go along in the sam old rut and pocket whatever increase of revenue new regulations would ng them. There are too many exhibitors in the business who take no pri in it. They do nothing to elevate it and the manufacturers are not in mpathy with them. They are favorably disposed towards the exhibitor ho takes pride in his house and shows and, if granted the relief asked, v uld become still better agents in the development of the business. It is h ed, for the benefit of these people, that both the Board of Aldermen an the Legislature will enact the laws asked for, but the manufacturers c not consistently take an active part in bringing this about. They deal hly with the film exchanges and have all they can do to keep up witl he requirements of these dealings. They must keep the market supplied ith a certain number of reels weekly and exert every effort to keep u he respective standards. To do this they cannot give time to taking pa in controversies between factions of exhibitors, or between exhibitors an he municipal authorities. The mission of the manufacturers is well de ed. All their time is required to supply and satisfy the exchanges, and th gh them satisfy and hold the patronage and approval of the amusement p ic. If, as is the case in certain fields, the exhibitors were dealing direct ith the producers the situation would be an altogether different one a I would be inclined to say that by helping the exhibitors the manufact ers would be helping themselves."

This appears sufficient to convince the exhibitors that if anything is be gained along the lines laid out before the movement went to sleep it ust be acquired by concerted action in their own ranks. The exhibitors sl ld profit by the example set by their operators. They were ridiculed en they first started out, but they have acquired some important advantage

Advertising for Exhibitors

Conducted by EPES WINTHROP SARGENT.

ON the letter head of the Isis Amusement Company, of Denver, M. L. Smith, who designed the Isis holiday program fronts, writes:

> I wish to correct the writer of the article in the publication of January 20th, page 197, "The Ornamental Isis." The artist worked out these two designs to the letter after receiving the necessary instructions. We are proud to say that we have received a wonderful lot of advertising from this program. We are having calls from hundreds of show shops all over this country. The effect has been far better than was anticipated. Competition has increased (double last year). Our business is fine. The receipts show a marked increase—which goes to show that our methods of advertising are effective and that these two designs have more than satisfied us. We wish to thank you very kindly for the notice and the comment. This also is having its effect.
> Yours respectfully,
> by M. L. Smith.

. L. B. are the initials of S. L. Baxter, manager of the Isis, and his ssfaction with the program seems to be attested by the fact that he pmits the designer to use his letter head and signature, but with all due derence to Messrs. Smith and Baxter, we still maintain that the cover pe designs were weak and ineffective. The house may have increased its biness as well as its competition on the strength of this advertising, most owhich is very well done, but these two specimens of Mr. Smith's work we precisely what we said they were in the first comment.

Keep Your Name Clear.

o ornamental design that makes a puzzle picture of the name of the tter is either intelligent or effective. No advertising of any sort is ective that does not play up prominently the name of the theater. No nter how you may load or overload your advertising with ornamental dess, keep the title of the house clear and distinct. Make it stand out othe mass of lines. Keep it so plain that even the man who gets but a gipse of the matter gets the name of the house no matter what else aprs, and you have at least advertised the house.

Ir. Smith regards the comment merely as an affront to his work. He is aartist and what he doesn't know about advertising values seems to be csiderable. It is the continual battle between the artist and the advertisi man, and in this case the artist seems to have the advertising man under hspell, but whether it is in Denver, New York or Skowhegan, advertising iot advertising that does not advertise and, to give the title of the theater, t appearance of purely ornamental design work is to defeat the advertg end.

o matter what else shows up, keep the name of the house clear and lble, and make the ornamentation subsidary to the conveyance of your rsage. Print pictures all over the place except where the name of the tter appears, but if you plan to advertise your theater let the name sd out and, within reasonable limits, the bigger and more pronounced is the better. This is the first thing the advertising man should learn a until he does learn it, he knows little about his business.

More Mission Work.

t's a pleasure to turn from the Isis to the Mission, in Salt Lake City. Ival W. Daynes says he is a novice at the picture game, but he must he been born knowing, for he sends a batch of stuff that would do cdit to the chief of the craft. His newest idea is to use the fiction story the film in the Sunday paper, the sheet sent showing Selig's "The Isecuting Attorney," illustrated with a layout of twelve illustrations fm the film. It's not an advertisement, but a feature page of the Sunday er. Elsewhere there are seen advertisements that apparently merely te advantage of the fact the story is being used. One of them follows:

Read "The Prosecuting Attorney"—Photoplay Story
MISSION THEATER,
Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday of this week.

he advertisements fill two inches single column and are scattered tugh the paper.

You Can Do the Same.

his is one of the newest forms of advertising, the fiction of the film owing the lead of the Motion Picture Story Magazine. It is only lately t the daily papers have taken it up, but the use of the story is spreading l with a little effort you can get in touch with the press representatives the various manufacturers, obtaining your cut copy and any live paper l be glad to get a page feature free. All you have to do is to get the s and the full description and it's not unlikely that unless the town is y large you can arrange for some free space in return for your share the work. Be careful to keep the story and your advertising separate convey the impression that you are merely taking advantage of the fact t the story is so important that the paper is running it as a feature.

First make certain that you'll get the picture and get it first, but this should be easy outside the larger cities and you're all right if you get the film first run.

More from Salt Lake.

The Liberty Theater in the Utah capital is also turning out good work. They seem to hold to programs and dodgers without using special work. They phrase their work intelligently and we are reproducing their announcement of the Biograph "A Tale of the Wilderness" for the benefit of those who have not yet run the reel. It is attractive and catchy without slopping over, and makes a real appeal. It runs:

A Feature Motion Picture by the Biograph Company

"A TALE OF THE WILDERNESS"

A Big Production depicting Frontier Life in the Pioneer Days of Kentucky. Full of action and Thrilling Scenes.

As Great as "Fighting Blood," "The Last Drop of Water" or "The Battle," all big Biograph Productions which have been shown at the Liberty in the last few months.

OVER 100 PEOPLE IN THE CAST

From New Jersey.

Last week we commented on the invitation to the Criterion, Rutherford, issued by Vick, Collins and Lawrence. Now Carey Wilson sends in the opening program. It has some of the rough edges to be expected of a new publication, but it gives a clean-cut talk about what the house expects to do that is free from bluster, hints at coming attractions and altogether "makes a noise" like a regular theater. Some vaudeville acts will be run—which we think is a mistake—and two performances a night are given. In the program to hand the subjects are not announced, but there is a page which has spaces for the titles of the films and the names of the acts on the style of the Theater Record now popular in big city programs. For the information of others who are wrestling with the reserved seat problem we give a quotation from the program:

> Tickets, that is, reserved seats, for the Criterion Theater may be purchased ahead. Our telephone may be used at any hour of the day or evening to secure tickets for the current performance or for any performance during the following week. We expect to bill our feature attractions ahead and therefore you may insure yourself good seats for the feature you desire by calling or 'phoning to our Box-Office. Telephone Rutherford 800.
> Reserved seats are purchased only for one performance. The holder of any reserved seat may occupy it only during the present show, but should he desire to remain for the second, may keep his seat until the coupon for the same is sold to some one else, when he may take any unoccupied seat in the unreserved section.

Mr. Wilson also sends a dodger utilizing The Time, The Place and The Girl idea for "Cinderella" even more effectively than could be done in the original newspaper form.

More Royal Reports.

Miss Dolly Spurr sends in another good issue of Royal Reports for approval—and gets it. It's one of the snappiest regulars that comes to the desk and with its little sister, Ruffles, is doing the Royal Theater, Marion, Ind., a lot of good. In the last issue the compositor is experimenting with border for box heads with no very good results, but apart from this the typographical appearance is not bad and there is enough general matter, germane to the films, to tempt the reader clear to the back page. It seems like a waste of space to take it for notes of the players and plans of the companies, but in reality it is far more effective in creating new "fans" and keeping up the interest of the old that a straight run of synopses of coming subjects. Each is valuable in its way. The combination is the most effective. Our hats are off to the hustling young woman who in a recent interview in the local papers said she didn't want to get married. If she is as good looking as her portrait we imagine that her opinion will be changed one of these days, and if it isn't it will not be for lack of effort.

Put This in Your Program.

The Cameraphone Bulletin, of Pittsburg, is another weekly sheet that shows good editing. They issue a two-column sheet and one-half is given to general matter. From a recent issue we clip this paragraph. It should be printed in every house organ. Read it, then see if you can do better. It will take a lot of beating:

FILMS DO NOT EXPLODE.

> Ever so often someone asks us if we ever had any films explode. Should a fire occur in a moving picture theater the reporter always speaks of it as an "explosion of films," You may possibly know that this does not happen, but if you are ignorant of the fact let us assure you. Films burn up—so do newspapers, and like newspapers, they make a quick flash and rapidly consume. If you set fire to a newspaper on an asphalt street you wouldn't get in a panic, would you?

All moving picture theaters are compelled to have asbestos or sheet-iron covered booths. In the Cameraphone theaters the booths are lined with asbestos and covered with sheet iron also. If we are unfortunate enough to have a film catch fire it will make a quick blaze—just like a burning newspaper—and will become consumed in a minute or two. The fire will cause some smoke and may leave a mark on the sheet-iron covered floor, but the chief damage will be to our pocketbooks. It will cost us $100 or more—and the only explosion will be when we "blow up" the operator for his carelessness.

Here's Another One.

Here's another clipping from the same source, apparently following out a suggestion made in this department some weeks ago. Bait your hook with this:

> GIVES THEM TO HER PUPILS.
> One of the East End school teachers who is a regular patron of the Cameraphone and a constant buyer of our $1 books of 24 admission tickets, explained to us why she was compelled to buy so many tickets. "I give several tickets each day to my pupils as a reward of merit, and I find them the greatest incentive to good work and proper deportment that I have yet discovered. My children are on the alert to secure these prizes, and I am certainly obtaining pleasing results."

Casts, Too.

The Surprise Theater, South Bend, Ind., having added cuts to the well-printed little sheet, now also uses casts where they are to be had. It has developed one effective catch-line in "Spend your noon hour with us," an appeal to the crowd that should pull business. The line might be put on advertising boards and sent through the streets from eleven to one with good results in the cases of houses which open early. The Surprise starts in at half past nine and is the only house in town with an early opening.

Advertising "She."

The Lyric Theater, Mena, Ark., played "She" for a feature and S. A. Arnold describes his campaign thus:

> In the first place, before putting out the bills, we ran in the daily papers several lines merely announcing "She" with no other matter. We also painted the sidewalks with the one word and in the house ran the same on an advertising slide, in all cases using a big question mark. On the third day we ran in the paper the World's story of "She," not forgetting to give the proper credit.

The hand bill referred to is three by ten inches folded five times. These were distributed and natural curiosity prompted the recipient to keep on unfolding the dodger until the explanation was found on the last turn, the others being "teasers" so printed that both sides of the paper were read as the strip was opened. The following are samples of the wording:

The Story of
"SHE"
Is Mystifying—Look into This.

Don't Be Discouraged.
"SHE"
Is Coming.

When "SHE"
Is Here You Will Be Pleased.

Rider Haggard's Mystery Masterpiece
"SHE"
2—REELS—2
Everyone has read this interesting and thrilling story; now see the picture with its wealth of scenic splendor.

A Local Hit.

Mr. Arnold also took advantage of the economical streak of the City Fathers in cutting off the street lights to advertise:

STARTING Tonight and continuing every night until all patrons of the LYRIC are supplied with Lanterns —or until the "Powers That Be" order lights on, or until the Great Big Moon shines brightly, we are going to give FREE One Lantern each night.

To help things along the pianist featured "I'm afraid to go home in the dark" in playing out the house. Mr. Arnold adds: "I can't say that my work had any effect, but I do know that within a week after starting the campaign the lights were ordered on again." And in the meantime the Lyric shared the talk with the comment on the municipal action.

Clean Work, But Weak.

Ye College Play House, in the University District, Seattle, sends in a four page program giving three changes of bill, but not making as good use of the space as is possible. The printing is unusually good, the cuts coming out effectively and showing a really handsome house, but with the exception of the Pathe Weekly the reels are not played up properly. "Colleen Bawn" gets some red ink on the front page, but "The Awakening of John Bond" is dismissed with the single line:

"The Awakening of John Bond" (Drama).

Were the program ours we would make a noise over a feature reel such as this even if we had to sacrifice a cut or throw out an outside advertisement. If you do not get enthusiastic over a reel yourself, how can you expect your audience to make a fuss? The same thing is done with "Colleen Bawn," which is advertised in the program in these three eight-point lines:

> "The Colleen Bawn," Part I (Irish drama). (Special.)
> "The Colleen Bawn," Part II.
> "The Colleen Bawn," Part III.

In the same three leaded lines there could have been run some allusion to the fact that the Kalem Company sent an entire company to Ireland and that every scene was made on the ground where the original story is supposed to have happened. It would have been better still to have given the entire box to this one production. It would have brought in more than the effort was worth. Don't be content to merely announce a film. Announce it so that curiosity is aroused and where the release is something out of the ordinary make a howl even if it hurts your throat. This theater is in the residential district, fertile ground for real press work, and the presentation of these two subjects in a single week should have been made the means of drawing many new patrons. If it's worth while printing a program it is an economy to spend a little more and make it effective.

We hope that Mr. Cowen will send us another copy soon with proper display.

A Prose Poem.

Robert O. Graves, who with a fine disregard for Alaska, states that Mansfield, Ore., is the most western city in the United States, sends a poem. We don't care much for poetry, but this is clever and can be effectively worked into advertising and programs. Here it is, with our thanks to Mr. Graves:

The Motion Pictures.

> There is somethin' most magnetic 'out a motion pictur show, and when once we get the habit, we just go, and go, and go; see the motion pictur people doin' things as makes us cry, then, again they quit the tragic, and we laugh till tears is dry; kind o' like them Irish picturs, seems like they're most like home, but the picturs all is pleasin'—even them 'bout Ancient Rome; course the thrillin' cowboy stories is a little over drawn, for the punchers all ain't heroes, neither gentle, like a fawn; then them Injuns' big war bunnets look right odd in times o' peace, but that don't cut any figger when the pictur's showed in Greece; well, the motion pictur habit needn't cause no wild alarm, for the picturs kind o' rest us, and that don't do any harm.

Glory Be! ! !

Here's the proper sort of advertisement. It comes from the Theater Comique, Detroit, and apart from the glad news it contains it is to be commended for the straight from the shoulder way it makes explanation. It is printed as a guide to others who, in time, will come to do the same thing. We like good vaudeville. For ten years we devoted the greater part of our time to this feature of the amusement business and pictures, but the sort of vaudeville that the picture theaters can afford does not belong to the sort of pictures that even the cheaper theaters run and we would like to see the photoplay and the minor vaudeville divorced. Each feature has its proper place, but the proper place for small vaudeville is not in proximity to big pictures and nothing has tended to hold down the popularity of the pictures so much as the impossibility—in many towns—of seeing vaudeville without being forced to endure a grade of vaudeville that is very much below the average of the pictures. The man who drops in to see Vanity Fair or David Copperfield is not the sort of man who wants to see vaudeville of the cheapest sort and once stung he keeps away from the theater. If you want to run cheap vaudeville, run it, but don't run cheap vaudeville and high grade pictures. You're wasting the pictures. Put the vaudeville money into the exchange bills and get fresher stuff and the features. Here is the advertisement:

> For some weeks the management has been gathering data from the patrons of this theater as to whether or not they enjoy the so-called "vaudeville" now so prevalent in Detroit. Over ninety per cent. of the people approached answered in the negative.
> Most every small time act of any merit has been shown in this house in the past five years, and no doubt the public has the correct version: "Enough Ham and Eggs."
> Our ambition is to cater to the popular demand and to that end, commencing Monday, feature motion pictures never before shown in the city, in conjunction with conservatory vocalists and Murer's famous orchestra will comprise the program. Entire change of pictures daily. Show going on from 9 a. m. to 11 p. m.

Other matters must go over until next week.

ESSANAY WESTERN COMPANY BUSY.

The Essanay Western company, who have been operating in and around San Rafael, have moved to Lakeside, Cal. An abundance of beautiful natural scenery, so necessary for successful picture production, is to be found there, and Mr. G. M. Anderson has in preparation a number of excellent photoplays. Miss Vedah Bertram, a new leading lady of the Western company, will be featured in coming pictures with Mr. Anderson, whose creation of the rôle of "Broncho Billy" has become famous throughout the country.

Motion Picture Exhibitors' League

OF AMERICA.

INDIANA EXHIBITORS' LEAGUE MEETING.

League President Advocates Creation of Censorship Board by Theater Men.

The creation of a National Board of Censors by the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America was advocated by its president, M. A. Neff, of Cincinnati, Ohio, in an address before the convention of the Indiana Motion Picture Exhibitors' League at the Denison Hotel on February 5th. The furtherance of the League's effort to limit its shows to the planes of strictest morality, said Mr. Neff, would be greatly enhanced through the operations of such a body, which, according to his plan, should work in conjunction with the governmental censors.

The League president, in emphasizing the necessity of such procedure in the campaign against immorality, cited numerous examples where the standard of motion picture houses was endangered by films of a low grade.

"Such films," said Mr. Neff, "have a tendency to lower the standard not only of houses in which they are shown, but of the motion picture world in general. If we care to pursue our aim with the determination that was evident at the outset, we will take such measures as have been suggested to curb the promiscuous display of that upon which we frown."

Mr. Neff said that an exhibitor needs protection from the large theater which shows pictures on Sunday and the "milker" in the city councils and the legislatures. He said the owners of large theaters should not be permitted to show pictures on Sunday, "because they care little about the industry and do not attempt to raise its standard."

Mr. Neff believes that the interests of the public and the exhibitors are similar and that it is the duty of the latter to see that the public is protected from fire in the theaters and from improper pictures.

He asked the Indiana League to advocate the passage of a law compelling operators to pass examinations and obtain licenses.

At the close of his address he invited the members of the Indiana League to attend the second annual convention of the National League, which opens August 12 at Chicago.

John J. Walsh, State factory inspector, addressed the league on the need of better fire protection in a number of theaters. At the close of his address a resolution was passed indorsing his views and pledging an attempt to obtain legislation to compel careless and negligent owners to safeguard the public against danger from fire.

F. J. Rembusch, secretary of the League, in discussing the growth of the business said: "Motion picture shows are growing in the favor of the public and it is the intention of this league and others to keep it there."

The Indiana League has a membership of about 150, which represents one-third of the motion picture houses in the State.

OHIO LEAGUE CONVENTION.

It Will Be Held at Dayton, in Cash Register Works' Hall—Big Attendance Expected.

The Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of Ohio, affiliated and working with the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America, will meet in Dayton, Ohio, with headquarters at the big, new hall at the National Cash Register Works. The president of the State League, M. A. Neff, called on Mr. O. B. Weaver and Mr. Clem Kerr at Dayton, and, after consulting with them, arrangements were made for Messrs. Kerr and Weaver to take charge as a committee to represent the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of Ohio. They have made arrangements through the Board of Trade of Dayton and the management of the Cash Register Works to give a big entertainment at the hall of the Cash Register Works, which is now being decorated and painted for the occasion.

The first day will be for every bona fide exhibitor in the State of Ohio or elsewhere who desires to attend this grand, big meeting of motion picture exhibitors. The second day will be for the transaction of business, and only members of the league will be admitted. Several sets of slides are now being made at the Cash Register Works, to be sent out through the State of Ohio to advertise the meeting. The league desires the presence of all exhibitors and we hope that every exhibitor in the State will be present. We want all the exhibitors to come, whether they are members of our league or not, and bring as many of their families as they can; the ladies are especially invited to attend. This will be the biggest meeting ever held by the Motion Picture Exhibitors.

President Neff asks every motion picture exhibitor who is interested in this splendid meeting to write him at 1003 Mercantile Library Building, Cincinnati, Ohio, and he will be pleased to furnish them full and complete information. A program of the meeting is being printed, which will be sent to every exhibitor that will kindly send in his name and address. And right here on behalf of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of Ohio, President Neff extends a special invitation to all of the motion picture exhibitors in Ohio, their wives, families and sweethearts, to attend this, the biggest meeting ever held. They will be royally entertained and show not only Dayton, but Ohio, that the motion picture people of Ohio know just how to do things.

Ex-Senator J. B. Foraker, counsel for the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America; Ex-Congressman John J. Lentz, of Columbus, attorney for the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of Ohio; Congressman Cox, of Dayton, Ohio, are expected to deliver addresses. Dayton's efficient mayor will deliver an address of welcome; M. A. Neff, president of the league, will reply.

There will be several attractions in the way of amusement to please and entertain the exhibitors. Don't forget the Board of Trade of Dayton and the Cash Register people are noted for their hospitality and the efficient manner in which they entertain their guests. Remember the dates, March 26 and 27, 1912, Dayton, Ohio, where the big doings take place.

MOTION PICTURE EXHIBITORS' LEAGUE OF PENNSYLVANIA.

233 Fifth Avenue, Pittsburg, Pa.

To the motion picture exhibitors of Pennsylvania and those of other States who are interested in the organization of the exhibitors we ask you to get busy, and give us a helping hand in getting the exhibitors to attend the State convention of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of Pennsylvania, at Harrisburg, Pa., on May 6, 1912.

We also issue an urgent request to all the exhibitors in and around Harrisburg to get in touch with our State headquarters, as we wish them to help us in making the convention the SUCCESS it should be.

We also wish to inform you that we expect to have with us at our State convention the officers of the national organization, and we assure you that we can prove to your satisfaction that we have been benefited in more ways than one, through our league, and we could do much more if our league was only as strong as it should be.

Now we ask of you to get busy, write to our State headquarters; also write to moving picture journals, telling all the exhibitors throughout the State to attend our convention at Harrisburg, on Monday, May 6, 1912.

We remain yours,
M. P. E. LEAGUE OF PA.

Song and The Singer

By Clarence E. Sinn.

MR. TOM MAYO GEARY, whose portrait is given this week, is the live wire connected with the Harold Rossiter Music Co., of Chicago. This young gentleman has a large share in the wonderful growth and prosperity of this rising publisher. Perhaps "arisen publisher" would be better for, as mentioned some time ago, this company is a mighty lusty young infant. It was born in August, 1910, started in two small rooms and in less than a year had to lease an entire floor to accommodate the growing business. And a few months ago had to move into still larger quarters at 217, 219 and 221 West Madison St. Tom Mayo Geary has been identified with the Harold Rossiter Music Co. almost from the very beginning, is a hard worker, well liked by his public and staff and has the interest of his firm at heart. Can you say more for anybody? Here are some of the songs he is pushing: "Let Me Call You Sweetheart," "Girl of My Dreams," "Down In Melody Lane," "Years, Years Ago," "Maybe I'll Come Back," "Singing" and "Oh, You Tease." The Publicity Department is in charge of Mr. D. A. Meany.

Mr. Tom Mayo Geary, Professional Manager of the Harold Rossiter Music Co., Chicago.

Witmark Notes.

Thos. J. Quigley, manager for Witmark & Sons Chicago branch, reports that "Lady Angeline," the latest success by the writer of "Baby Rose," is a sure winner. The song has been before Chicago audiences but a short time and has already made an impression that promises to be a lasting one. Mr. Quigley (his friends call him "Tom") and Mr. Ascher B. Samuels are making a riot with "Lady Angeline," at the States restaurant this week. There is a little phrase in the chorus of this song that makes a very showy "obligato" for a high tenor voice, and Mr. Quigley makes the most of it. The song is fine for a harmony singing act as well as a single. Another hit from the house of Witmark is "If All My Dreams Were Made of Gold," a ballad of real merit Here are a few of the acts who are making good with songs from the Witmark catalog: The Primrose Four are using with great success "If All My Dreams Were Made of Gold" and "Lady Angeline." Thos. J. Quigley and Ascher B. Samuels at the States restaurant and the Orpheum Theater are singing both the above songs to big applause. Emma Carus, Arlington Four, Three Leightons, Jones & Deely, Rathskeller Trio LaMar & Gabriel and Howard & Howard are among the others who are making 'em sit up and take notice with "Lady Angeline" These are only a few; and it's just beginning.

Chas. K. Harris Notes.

Sam Herman is making "the hit of his life" with "My Brown Eyed Baby," at the Circle is the report I get. Sam has made some hits already in his life, and all he wants is the proper vehicle to make some more. "My Brown Eyed Baby" is a good one from all accounts and a great many others are making friends and getting the applause with this song. Rocco Vocco (professional manager for Chas. K Harris) assures me that this number is one of the best sellers that house of good sellers has ever turned out "Fairy Moon" is another favorite which they are concentrating their efforts upon. However, they are not confining themselves entirely to these two songs as a glance at the following "live ones" will show. Will Maher at the Magnet going big with "Fairy Moon," "Don't Blame Me For Loving You," and "Bless Your Loving Heart." Deagon Bros. at the Elite taking encores with "Fairy Moon" and "Don't Blame Me."

Ruth Wilson at the Casino "cleaned up" with "My Brown Eyed Baby Boy" last week. Mart Livingstone is at the Alcazar singing "Bless Your Loving Heart," and "Panama Pacific Rag" to repeated encores. Hale O'Reily the Boy Wonder is now booked by the Circle-White Palace people for two months and reports that "Fairy Moon," "Brown Eyed Baby Boy," "Take Me To Your Heart Again," and "Bless Your Loving Heart" are all to the good. Chas. Falker with the Beehman Show playing the Columbia this week is a riot with "Don't Blame Me."

Earl & Jennings now playing the Edgewater Theater are going big with "Bless Your Loving Heart" and "Don't Blame Me." Henry Catalano at the Marshfield this week reports that "Bless Your Loving Heart" and "Don't Blame Me For Loving You" are big hits.

F. J. A. Forster Notes.

As has been mentioned before, Gus Winkler is now with the F. J. A. Forster Music Co. and is certainly coming to the front. He wishes all his friends to come and see him, as there are some real hits in this office waiting for them. Since my last letter the Forster Music Co. has been compelled to move into larger quarters to accommodate their rapidly increasing business, and have taken the suite formerly occupied by Von Tilzer in the same building. You can now find them at 31 Grand Opera House Block, where Mr. Keithley (professional manager), Gus. Winkler and a staff of obliging attendants will welcome you and prove to your satisfaction that "A Garland of Old Fashioned Roses" is a ballad that doesn't need any more pushing—in fact, it is going so fast now that they can hardly keep up with it. This is no joke. It was almost impossible to get into their old office on account of the crowds, hence the change to larger apartments. Of course, some other numbers on the Forster catalog have been partly to blame for the big business. For example:

Collins & Clifton are making a big hit with "At The Ragtime Ball," in their clever little musical act. Ray Howard at the Majestic Theater, La Salle, Ill., is going big with "At The Ragtime Ball." "Dixie Kisses," a new instrumental number by the composer of "A Garland of Old Fashioned Roses" and "Tar Babies," a rag from the pen of Chas. Johnson, are being used in "The Winning Widow Co." Miss Esther E. Carnes with the "Belles of the Boulevard Co." is using "A Garland of Old Fashioned Roses" and "At The Ragtime Ball" as instrumental numbers and reports that she is "cleaning up" with them. The Varsity Quartette is using "A Garland of Old Fashioned Roses" and their harmony in the chorus pulls down five or six encores every night. Charley Kent, playing over the Western circuit is scoring tremendously with "Garland of Old Fashioned Roses." Friedman & Fiske are singing "At The Ragtime Ball" with immense success.

Gerald E. Griffin the Irish tenor with his big act "The Rose of Old Derby," is singing "Garland of Old Fashioned Roses," and the song is the hit of the act. McFarley & Morrison, with "The Winning Widow Co." are singing "At The Ragtime Ball," and endorse it highly. Harry Hamilton is taking encores with "Garland of Old Fashioned Roses." Robert Myers, formerly with Wells Minstrels is using this song as a bass solo. He likes the song and the audiences like to hear him sing it. It makes some bass solo, too.

Hagehara Sotiro the well known Japanese equilibrist is using "Dream of the Fairies Waltz" in his act. The music just fits the action. Beck & Preston in their great little act are meeting with tremendous success in their rendition of "At The Ragtime Ball," and this pair reports that it has outdistanced anything they have ever used. Miss Preston is also singing "Garland of Old Fashioned Roses," and declares it the most beautiful and effective ballad she has ever used. The Three Southern Roses are using "A Garland of Old Fashioned Roses" around Chicago and say it's "immense." One night last week they took nine encores with it. And it's always good for from four upward. That's saying something.

Aufderheide Notes.

The Diamond Comedy Four are featuring successfully "In Bamboo Land," and report that they are more than pleased with the song. Hoffman & Veley in their act "The Dutchman and the Other Guy" are using "I Want A Patriotic Girl." Jeannette Adler continues to meet with success using "In Bamboo Land" and "Ever Lovin' Bear Cat Dance." Miss Adler is more than satisfied with the results she is getting from both numbers. Jules Held, with his "School Days Co." is meeting with unprecedented success using "In Bamboo Land" in his popular kid act. The Jefferson Comedy Four are harmonizing on "Moontime is Spoontime" and advise us that it always brings the encores.

Dewey & Miller in a comedy balancing act are using songs from the Aufderheide catalog, especially featuring "Ever Lovin' Bear Cat Dance" and "In Bamboo Land." Miss Billie Carpenter is delighted with results from "I Want A Patriotic Girl," her feature number, and remarks that her act is not complete without an Aufderheide number. At the President and Apollo Theaters last week the Aufderheide Trio pleased all audiences with the following featuring numbers: "In Bamboo Land," "Drifting In Dreams With You," and "Ever Lovin' Bear Cat Dance." The trio was assisted by C. McPhetridge, with a French horn solo, a very pretty effect, as the solo was answered from the audience by E. Ham Hood singing "Drifting." The trio also includes Miss Beatrice Harcourt (whose portrait appeared here recently) and Paul C. Pratt, the composer, at the piano.

SPECIAL MUSIC FOR "A SPARTAN MOTHER."

The Kalem Company announces that it has prepared special music for its release of March 11, "A Spartan Mother." This picture is described as being one of the greatest war pictures ever made. The special music has been arranged to accentuate some of the big thrilling battle scenes and the splendid dramatic situations preceding and following the actual fighting. The complete piano score will be sold for the very low price of twenty-five cents, including postage.

Mr. J. Frank Brockliss is due to arrive in New York this week and may be addressed in care of Messrs. Isidor Herz & Co., 422 Seventh Avenue, New York.

The SCENARIO WRITER

CONDUCTED BY EPES WINTHROP SARGENT

The Comedy Story.

MOST beginners have been told that comedies sell better than dramatic photoplays, though the payment is not apt to be as generous and, in consequence, there are submitted hundreds of scripts that are very far from being comedy as it is understood. Most of these scripts represent the old-fashioned comedies that were the outgrowth of the fifty and seventy-five-foot comedy bits that once marked the limits of the motion picture. These are the loosely constructed burlesques on real comedy in which probability and possibility are disregarded in favor of the development of the supposed idea. Many of these might be made into good modern comedies with proper treatment, but are sent out because the author thinks that anything that sounds funny must be a comedy and the picture theaters are looking for comedy of any kind.

A second and more irritating sort are the comedies of a single idea, in which a mass of tiresome action must be endured before the humor arrives in the last scene.

The first is apt to be the work of the absolute novice, the second more generally is the product of the scenario writer who has had some, but not sufficient, experience. In the former the story is apt to be crowded with supposedly comedy action that does not belong and, in this, it is at least more to be commended than the prosy plot that begins in nothing, continues through nothingness and ends in a mild chuckle.

Comedy—comedy action—is essential in every scene of a comedy photoplay of the best sort, though now and then a brief scene of explanation may be intruded. But comedy action must be the comedy of action that belongs to and advances the story. If you make your comedy lead fall over a washtub filled with laundry do not put it there for him to fall over—"just to make it funny"—make it appear that the lead upsets the tub over himself and perhaps the others, not because he is working for a laugh, but because it was impossible for him to do anything else. Make the washtub as much a part of the story as the leading comedian and then when the two meet there will be no straining of the probabilities. Make the story sincere and plausible even though it is a comedy. Do not invent a string of funny happenings, link them together and announce a comedy. Take a central figure, move him or her through a series of events, all related and all bearing upon the climax of the plot, and then see how funny you can make those events.

And give them real humor. Nine-tenths of the comedy offered reads as though it might have been written by a ten-year-old boy. There is no refinement of thought, no carefulness of development. Two or more people do some things and then there is a semblance of a full stop to the action and it's all over. After it is all through it would be difficult to sit down and write a connected account of what happened.

Broken crockery is funny at times and so is a pail of water upset over a person. A man who falls down on the icy pavement can do so humorously and even yet the old maid in search of a mate can be made amusing, but a jumble of these four factors without any story is not amusing because there is no connection between the different happenings.

But suppose that the old gentleman falls on the icy sidewalk and the old maid assists him to rise. He thanks her and passes on. She becomes enamored and determines to win him for a spouse. In various ways she seeks to attract his further attention. She gets in front of him on the street and drops the plates, expecting that he will assist her to pick up the fragments. With a grunt at her carelessness he passes on leaving her dismayed. She spills water on his glossy tile and hurries downstairs to apologize, with the result that he has her arrested by a handy policeman. She haunts his way until in desperation he hires someone else to marry her, only to make the interesting discovery that she has just fallen heir to half a million. Now the familiar incidents have been worked up into a thread of story that binds them together into the semblance of a plot. The story is extravagant, but not impossible and each happening forms part of the plot that advances the story to the climax of the discomfiture of the unwilling object of adoration. The example is rather crude, but it is in this way with varying degrees of skill that the story is evolved from chaotic incident.

Don't rush to the typewriter and then to the mail box with the first thing that comes into your head. Haste is no speed at all in scenario work. Keep hold of the idea and let it ripen. If you think of something funny that doesn't exactly seem to fit in keep at it until it does go into place or until you are satisfied that there is no place for it. Comedy is elastic, but it does not escape the requirement that each scene shall advance the plot one degree nearer the climax and the humor must come from this action that advances the story and not from matter dragged in because the original action is unfunny.

The proper comedy is really double. There must be the comedy of the idea of the story and the comedy of its unfolding. Preparation scenes are necessary at times in dramatic photoplays, but there is small room for them in comedy.

In the dramatic play it is all very well to write in a scene to show that Jack ties his horse to the roadside and decides to walk across the fields about the time that Sue comes out of the farmyard gate and starts to hunt for strawberries. Then, when the two come together you know where each came from, but in a comedy you do not show that the mistress tells Delia to wash down the front steps while you show that choleric old Jones leaves the club to keep an appointment with his inamorata. You see Jones on the street, he turns to look after a pretty girl and in walking backward falls over the pail and mop left on the sidewalk. In the serious story you need to locate Jack and Sue, but in the comedy the scene is merely to explain how it is that Jones gets soaking wet and misses an appointment with the heiress, who elopes with his younger rival while he is changing his clothes. You, who are in the know, enjoy the physical comedy of the wetting while at the same time you rejoice in the fact that it puts a bar across Jones' path to the heiress. You have both the comedy of thought and the comedy of vision, neither of which is appealed to when the mistress speaks to Delia or when Jones leaves the club. Make every action tell both the story and the comedy and you have a comedy. Until you can do that don't write comedy.

Overeducation.

Here's a letter from a correspondent who no doubt will be surprised to learn that he is by no means the solitary specimen he thinks he is. At the same time he expresses his plaint so crisply and completely that he covers all the half-guessed regrets of the others and we give his letter in full. The writer is M. D. Stilson, resident manager of the Schuyler Opera House, Cobleskill, N. Y., and he says:

> Each week when I pick up the Moving Picture World, the first thing that I read is your column, The Scenario Writer.
> The demand in the picture game is for something new. I have my troubles like every one else in the business, but they are a new kind, something altogether different from the hundreds of "kicks" you get from day to day
> I make no claims of being a writer, but after running hundreds of films the thought came to me one day that I could write a manuscript that would make up into as good a picture as some I was paying rent for. I wrote a scenario. It sold. I wrote some more. They sold. Then I made my sad mistake. Saw an ad of a school that taught scenario writing. I donated them some money and took their course. They told me I would make a great writer, and I think I must be. Have not been able to sell a scenario since I finished my course with the picture school.
> Now comes the strange part. My manuscript that I have mailed out comes back from some of the houses that say they make feature pictures only, and written across the face of the little card they so kindly put in when they return your scenario, they say: "Story has merit, but it is too heavy."
> What in the world is an amateur writer going to do, if his manuscript is "so heavy" that none of the manufacturers of motion pictures will make up the story?

At first glance it would seem impossible that such a condition could exist, and yet it was in part this to which allusion was made in this department a couple of weeks ago under the caption of "Getting it fine." The best that any school can teach is how a script should be written. It can teach the author the rules of technique, can tell him what a leader is and how it should be used, can explain visioning and inserts and all that sort of stuff, but it can't teach him to think and, all too often, it leaves in his mind a set of rules where inspiration once had been.

Photoplay education is essential to the success of the photoplaywright, but it is not half as essential as the ability to think out good, strong plots with a tinge of originality.

Technique has been too closely applied. It had robbed the substance and left the shadow. If Mr. Stilson will go back to his original plan of work and busy himself with getting out a story that has a "stinger" in it, he'll find that the technique will take care of itself. He won't have to count the words of leader or insert, or figure up the number of scenes. If he can get something that isn't the same thing he runs every day he can sell the story no matter how poor the technique, and he's pretty apt to find that the subconsciousness will take care of the technical points if his active brain gets busy with the story.

Technique as an adjunct to idea is all right, but when idea is sacrificed to technique it is fatal. It is much the same as learning to use the typewriter. The novice is too busy with the keys to think of the subject matter, but he soon comes to the point where he forgets the machine and his fingers unconsciously hit the proper keys in transcribing thoughts and the use of the machine is as simple as the pen. The typed script is more useful than the longhand copy, but if the typing checks the flow of thought write in longhand and let someone else do the typing or trust to the pen copy. Technique and the typewriter are much the same. Until you learn to use them unconsciously you are going to have trouble.

Get your idea down on paper and get all of your idea down. If it is in proper technical form so much the better, but there is more technique than plot invention around the studio and between the two the plot is the more welcome. Don't slight the technique, but don't make it your master.

And as a last word, the best school of photoplay writing is in the photoplay theater rather than in an envelope. See the picture on the screen, learn to tell the good from the bad and pretty soon you'll be in a position to teach technique yourself.

What Melies Wants.

Although the Melies Company is identified with Western cowboy stories, it is stated that a few seacoast pictures will be made now and then as well as farcical comedies, but the preference is for cowboy and other Western dramas and comedy dramas and where possible the inevitable triangle should be omitted. To quote the editor: "We particularly desire dramas with unusual plots and depth; those without the triangle, if possible." Outdoor scenes are wanted and Southwestern and sub-tropical settings may be used.

According to the unusually lucid sheet of instructions issued by the company, all scripts must be typed and no scene may run more than three and a half minutes. This company likes scripts written rather fully in describing the action. It states that unavailable stories will be turned back immediately and those possibly available will be acted upon within a month.

American Wants.

The American Film Company announces that it is interested only in Western dramas, comedy dramas and farcical comedy. The studios are in the West and stories with a Western setting will probably be given the preference. Their leading man, Warren J. Kerrigan, occupies the same position on the Independent side as is held by Gilbert M. Anderson with the Licensed forces and the dramas should be planned to suit his robust personality.

That Nestor Delay.

Mr. David Horsley, writing of the delays in handling Nestor scripts, points out that until the middle of December there was no scenario department, since scripts were not invited and there was no person especially appointed to look after them. The regrettable death of Mr. R. Guthrie Kelly, the scenario editor, has slightly delayed the organization of the department, but Mr. Horsley plans to supply the vacancy promptly and believes that these vexatious delays will be avoided in future.

Until lately the Nestor studio has been supplied by staff writers; outside contributions not being solicited, and the change in plan is of necessity attended by some delays while the machinery is brought to working order. Scripts are not invited and should be sent to the studio at Hollywood, Cal., and not to Bayonne. Those who have clipped the list recently published in this department will please make correction.

More About Copyright.

The following from Charles H. LaTourette is intended rather for Louis Reeves Harrison than the writer, since it refers to his articles and the position he has taken, but to spare Mr. Harrison's blushes we run it here for him to read. Mr. LaTourette says:

> As an author of short stories, humorous verse, musical compositions, vaudeville sketches and moving picture plays, I wish to congratulate you upon the stand you take in behalf of authors generally, and scenario writers in particular. It is a great step toward better conditions. Your words of encouragement are most deeply appreciated. The first two paragraphs in your editorial of January 27 issue are certainly true, and straight out from the shoulder. "Starvation Prices" is correct! I state from experience that I have received more for one humorous poem than I have from a scenario recently purchased by a "first class" firm. It certainly is a "rank" state of affairs.
> The article "Originality versus Adaptation" also deserves the highest praise. Under the present existing copyright conditions the author of original unpublished work has no show whatever. He is simply thrown upon the mercy of Chance. His sole reliance is the honesty of editors who, as a whole, are honest. But what of the parasites who once in a while creep in to that honorable profession and "help themselves" from the ideas which come to them? There's the rub! And there's the need for a better copyright system. "Common Law" says the kind Register! A mere farce for the author of unpublished work. He stands a beautiful chance with the unscrupulous! Time may get them according to the Divine Law, but that doesn't compensate the poor author living on his "cheap hams and canned vegetables."
> Personally, I have no "kick" coming against the honesty of editors. I have been at the writing game for nine or ten years, and in that time I can't recall an instance where I have had a thing stolen. Perhaps my work hasn't been worth the chance, but, nevertheless, I give them all the benefit of the doubt. To sum it all up, however, a better copyright system is a dire necessity to protect authors not from editors, but rather from those who merely "hold down a chair."
> In conclusion, as a writer I thank you sincerely for the stand you are taking, and earnestly hope that your efforts will bear fruit by bringing forth a better condition of things. Keep the good work up and you will win the everlasting gratitude of every author.

All of this is interesting, but will some of the copyright adherents please tell the writer precisely how ability to copyright a script is going to stop theft or benefit the author in any way? What is there in the magic name of copyright that will throw about the protected script this invisible barrier? What is there to the mystic words that will turn the dishonest to ways of righteousness? In what one particular is the position of the author bettered by copyright? The copyright law specifies certain punishments for infringements that the much despised common law takes care of before copyright and takes care of much more ably. In either case the author must stand the expense of litigation. Where does the advantage come in?

We are not going to print any more letters on this page about copyright until some one makes explanation and in the meantime we submit that the Rev. E. Boudinot Stockton offers to legally "swipe" (in a purely demonstrative spirit) any copyrighted story. And if he can't do it we will. We pause for a reply. The question before the assembly is:

What is a copyright, and why—particularly why?

What's the Use?

What's the use of writing something you've already seen done?

Perhaps you can do it better than the other fellow did it, but that doesn't matter so much. Perhaps there is another story that the other fellow left untold that you can tell and tell effectively, but don't try to tell the same one he did if you want to get back the price of the postage stamps.

If you've some absolutely novel twist to give one of the old-established ideas, go ahead and twist it, but to get the impression that all you have to do to make money is to do the same thing over again is to put you into that spendthrift class that is helping the Postmaster General wipe out the departmental deficit.

Keep away from the old ideas and try and invent some new situations. The chances are that this story that's "a little like" the story you saw at the photoplay theater last week, is very much like some other story from which this was derived. Don't paraphrase, but if some story gives you a suggestion for another keep as far as possible from the source of inspiration in the hope that you'll strike something new. About half the stories that come into the studio are not read beyond the first few lines because they've been read so often before. There is no use sending out stuff just to pay postage on it. Unless it's really a regular story keep it home.

Lynch's Theater, Main Street, Woonsocket, R. I., has changed hands, the new owner being I. W. Smith, of Cambridge, Mass. Mr. Langton retires as manager in favor of Mr. I. W. Smith. Mr. Smith will give his full time and attention to the playhouse.

Inquiries.

C. F. M.—Your guilty conscience told you right. We beat you on quick returns. Exactly thirty-seven hours from mailing to its return and we know it had been read. The Lincoln allusion is good.

A. B.—We have heard several times of some motion pictures Nat C. Goodwin was making or going to make, but they've not yet been exhibited to the men from Missouri. The Rambeau Company is wholly new to us. (2) See elsewhere. (3) Good suggestion, but we can't find the right man.

PICTURE FAN.—A theater employing a Licensed service cannot use Independent material without losing its license, but it can regain the license sometimes on proper representation. Broadly, the answer to your question is "Yes."

IRENE B.—The Lubin Company requests that Irene B. be informed that Romaine Fielding played "The Teamster."

E. B. T.—This is a pretty tough bunch of questions to answer accurately. (1) C. G. P. C. films not shown here by Pathe do not have to be licensed by the Patents Company. We believe that some of them are occasionally brought over by Independent exchanges. (2) This has been done. (3) We prefer to leave this question to some legal mind. We think it can be done but are not certain. (4) We would cite "In the Grip of Alcohol," which was run in an Independent theater here three days in advance of the Licensed release. (5) Mostly feature films are copyrighted and not all of these are internationally copyrighted. The trade mark is a more certain safeguard.

LITTLE MARY ADMIRER.—Miss Pickford is now a member of the Biograph Company. Mr. Moore is not with the company.

J. G. H.—While most companies now and then purchase the synopsis without the scenario, the demand is more for the completed scenario.

M. D. K.—Film producers do not specify any number of scenes. They let it be known that they want approximately 1000 feet of leader and action and leave the rest to the author. As a general thing 18 to 22 scenes will run the thousand feet, though a recent Lubin had about 35 scenes in the same length. The measurement is action, not the number of scenes nor the number of words.

I. M. P.—You would only waste time and railroad fare looking for an opening in a studio. You would stand no chance against trained players who back their facial flexibility with experience. Better give up the idea now instead of being forced to abandon hope through discouragement.

CAESAR.—Francis Bushman and Bryant Watson had the leads in Selig's "He Fought for the U. S. A." (2) There isn't always a wind blowing when pictures are taken nor a draught in interior scenes. You must get a funny lot of films if you cannot recall any where there was no gale. You are remembering Fifteen years back when all studios were in the open air. It is probable that you notice only those where fluttering draperies call attention to the air currents. The breeze in the picture is a persistent newspaper paragraph, but it is not correct.

L. G.—Sorry, but we lack the information for which you ask.

F. H.—George Le Soir is the director of the Kalem Company in New Orleans. We do not place the scenic artist. Wray Physioc was the drug clerk in Eclair's "The Wrong Bottle." Again we pass the scenic artist question.

OPERATOR.—George Gebhart, Jr., of the Bison, is not a regular Indian nor even a partial one. (2) Robert Broderick and Mrs. Brennan were the old couple in Imp's "The Fallin' Out."

G. F. G.—Miss Mabel Normand was Betty in Vitagraph's "How Betty Won the School." Gretchen Hartman was the Rosalie in "For the Flag of France." The Vitagraph is pronounced with the "i" as in pie.

M. E. H.—James Cruze was the Leo in the Thanhouser "She." William Russell was the Stranger in "The Lady from the Sea," George Lessey was Romeo in "Romeo and Juliet," and William Garwood was Miss Snow's bridegroom in "The Honeymooners." Miss Taylor and Mr. Garwood are no longer with the company. In the Rex "The Return," Cleo Ridgley was the girl and the picture was made on Long Island ,though it is not stated just where.

C. R.—James Cruze was Dr. Jekyl and Mr. Hyde.

J. A. M.—See above for Dr. Jekyl. (2) We do not know what you understand by a "complete set" of the Reliance Natural History series, but these interesting films will be continued. (3) The Pathe Freres "Rigoletto" was released November 28th, 1909. Other questions next week.

E. B. S.—The missing characters in She are Job, Holly's servant, and Ustane, but their introduction would have run the reel into a third thousand and the story is complete without.

B. G. D.—If you want to hold on to the story rights, mark your manuscript very plainly, "All fiction rights fully reserved by the author." That covers the ground, but it is liable to hurt the sale of the scenario.

CURIOUS.—The code word you see at the bottom of some film bulletins is for telegraphic use. The exchange needing an extra print instead of wiring the three to six words of title, simply wires the five letter code word. This is especially handy in cabling where two code words may be combined into one ten-letter cipher word and save a couple of dollars.

G. V. T.—John Bunny has done all his motion picture acting for the Vitagraph. Your belief that you've seen him "with several other companies," is erroneous. He is a dramatic player of more than passing note, not an acquisition from vaudeville.

R. P. S.—We fancy that the delay in reporting on Nestor scripts is due to the change of the staff from Bayonne to Hollywood, but we can't understand why no attention is paid your letter. Try again and send a reply envelope. We have had several similar complaints.

NOVICE.—We are reproducing the Lubin slip you speak of in this issue. The first reply may mean almost anything, but it may be accepted as meaning that the company has enough scripts of the sort you sent, or is not going to make that style of story just now. It doesn't matter how you take it. If the story looks good to you, keep it going. We've known scripts to be sold a year or more after the first submission to the very company that first turned it down. No rejection script ever means that the script is worthless. It may suit someone else.

J. G. M.—There is no charge for answering questions under this heading. Send them along, but remember that scenario questions that require the reading of the manuscript are not handled.

LILY.—It's against our rules to reply to matrimonial questions, but there is no reason why Mr. Johnson should quit the Lubin Company just because Miss Lawrence did. They have played together very successfully, but it takes a minister to make a marriage. Mr. Johnson seems to be entirely contented at the Lubin plant and we have heard no hint that he will leave.

L. T. F.—The reason you get your script back unread from the Thanhouser Company is that they do not purchase outside scripts, so they send them right back when they come in unsolicited.

G. T.—Warren Kerrigan is still with the American Company, with no apparent intention of leaving. If you don't get him in the theater you patronize it's not his fault. Kick to the manager.

G. M. C.—The Kalem player is Miss Marin Sais. It is not a misprint for Marion.

D. C. T.—Miss Marguerite Snow was the Thanhouser player in the title role of "The Tomboy."

BET.—You are mistaken. Ten cents by no means represents the highest price of admission to the purely picture house. Several houses employing no vaudeville get 25 cents for the better seats and some charge 50 cents for box seats.

Projection Department

Edited by F. H. RICHARDSON.

MANAGERS.—One of the prime reasons for the low standard of projection in this country lies in the lack of ability of the average manager to recognize excellence in projection when he sees it. There are comparatively but very few managers who can look at a moving picture and tell when it is projected at its best, at the same time giving intelligent reasons for their conclusions. As long as the manager is himself unable to understand what constitutes excellence in projection, it naturally follows that he is in no position to intelligently criticize the work of his operator. It also follows that he is not in a position to put on the best possible show. I shall, therefore, for the benefit of managers, during the next few weeks take up, point by point, the various things which, as a whole, constitute excellence in projection; taking for my first subject, light.

It is absolutely essential to excellence in projection that the light be clear, brilliant and white. But the term "brilliant" is susceptible of various constructions, anyone of which may be correct, according to the ideas of the individual. Some prefer a very bright screen, while others have a leaning towards softer, mellower light, which produces a somewhat more artistic effect. The average audience will, however, I believe, agree with the brilliant screen idea, provided it be not carried to extremes. It must be remembered that the more brilliant the light, the greater will be the flicker. That is to say, if your machine produces any flicker at all it will be largely increased by added brilliancy of the light. With the reflecting and semi-reflecting screens it is found difficult to eliminate the flicker even with the modern three-wing shutter, owing to the exceeding brilliancy produced by their highly polished surface. Considering the question of curtain brilliancy, it is important that all these matters be weighed and taken into careful consideration. The matter of screen illumination is one upon which there is a profound lack of knowledge. Time and again I have had managers escort me into their theater, point proudly to their picture and exclaim: "There, what do you think of that for projection?" while across the entire lower or upper edge of the screen appeared a shadow, faint perhaps, but still a shadow. However, the word "shadow" does not convey the right impression. A discoloration of the light would be more nearly correct. The whole entire picture should be of one uniform, even brilliancy, the light at its furthest edges and corners being as purely white as in its center. With ordinary films it is an easy matter to judge whether the light is right or wrong. The matter is determined by the appearance of any light object in the film. If a lady be dressed in white, and the top of her dress appears pure white and its bottom has a yellowish tinge, however slight, then the light is not right and the operator is careless in its handling. If, on the other hand, the entire dress is of even whiteness and some white object at the top, or the clear sky, appears slightly yellow, or if the discoloration occurs at one side of the picture, then again the light is not centered right, or the operator is carrying his spot too small. There is ordinarily no excuse whatever for any discoloration of the light on any portion of the screen. However, these discolorations are not always the fault of the operator. They are sometimes due to parsimony on the part of the manager who wants the current bills cut down to such a low figure that the operator is unable to secure an even, uniform brilliancy all over the screen, and maintain it thus. The amperage is so low that the spot must be contracted to its smallest possible limit, which means that uniform lighting at all times is practically impossible. In order to insure uniform curtain brilliancy at all times it is necessary that the operator carry a spot which will overlap all corners of the cooling plate, or aperture, from ¼ to ⅜ of an inch. This, of course, means wasted light, but, on the other hand, it means excellence in the curtain illumination. Next week the subject will be continued.

BEAUTIFUL NEW THEATER.—Rutherford, N. J., now has a theater of which it may well be proud. Messrs. Vick, Collins and Lawrence recently threw open the doors of the new Criterion Theater, of which Mr. Carey Wilson is manager. The house seats 800 and is a beauty, both inside and out. At the opening were present the civic officials of eight towns in that vicinity, besides many other invited guests. Words of praise were heard on every hand and the management received a regular shower of compliments on the beauty of the house, as well as the excellence of its appointments. The programme will be combined vaudeville and motion pictures. The operating room is a model of its kind. An excellent programme is issued, in which are given the stories of the films shown, in full—a most excellent feature. We note, at its head, the names of the owners, manager, stage manager and pianist. Let me inquire why not also the name of the operator? Strikes me he is of as much importance to the success of the show as is the pianist.

A BUNCH OF QUESTIONS.—Atlanta, Ga., writes asking our opinion of the following examination questions: (1) How many patches does the law require? (2) How much space do you allow for a patch? (3) What does the crank fasten to? (4) What is the positive wire on a three-wire circuit? (5) What is the voltage drop on D. C. arc? (6) What is the voltage drop on A. C. arc? (7) What side of film goes to light? (8) What is the lens for? (9) What moves the automatic shutter? (10) If your lamphouse is as close to the machine as it will go, and your light as close to the condensers, how can you obtain a smaller light? (11) Which arm do you connect positive wire to? (12) How would you find the positive wire? (13) What should you do in case of fire? (14) What is the friction on take-up for? (15) What are upper and lower sprockets for? (16) Why do cracked condensers show through stereopticon lenses and not through projection lenses? (17) Which is the best outside shutter; 2 or 3 wing? (18) What is a volt, ampere, ohm? (19) What is a travel ghost and how do you remedy same? (20) What is a half moon? (21) What is a ghost in the light? (22) What causes a brown light? (23) Which carries the most current, No. 6 or No. 8 wire? (24) How many feet of film do you run in a minute?

"The above questions together with 25 more, were what a party told me last week constituted the examination given him by the City Electrician. Do you think fifty questions such as this would qualify a man as a competent operator? Do you think such an examination would be worth $5 to an operator? The City Electrician should by all means give a real examination. There is not a single question in the whole fifty which applies to the practical side of a projector. I believe the operator who pays $5 should be given a rigid examination, but not be put up against a bunch of catch questions."

There is considerable more to the letter, but the brother was so careless with his penmanship that I could not decipher it. Atlanta seems to have a wrong idea of an examination. Were I examining a man myself I might ask many simple questions which would tend to determine his real knowledge as well as would those of more complicated nature. The operator possessed of real knowledge need not fear catch questions that are no more "catchy" than those in the list, most of which are all right, though some are not very well worded. Question 1 is a new one on me, and query 20 must refer to some local term. I never before heard of a "half moon" in connection with projection. The only real catch question I see is No. 10. The experienced examiner can largely determine from an applicant's answers to comparatively simple questions, such as most of those in the list, whither or not he has adequate knowledge. If he answers promptly and correctly he may be tried with harder propositions. If he stutters over simple questions, there is no use to try him on hard ones. Questions such as 21 are almost too simple, however. In answering No. 17 it would be expected the applicant would explain why he claims one or the other to be the better, and if the explanation be complete it would require pretty thorough knowledge of shutter action. No. 4 is an excellent query. No. 11 would presume that reasons for answer also be given. No. 12 is good. No. 14 contains more than appears on the surface. Thousands of operators cannot answer No. 16. But it occurs to me that the man who repeated the list of 50 questions to you must certainly have had a phenomenal memory, if he got them anywhere nearly right.

ANOTHER FROM GARY.—Gary, Ind., writes: "I notice where, in the department, an uncommon though not unknown rectifier has been described. This type of rectifier is what is known as the electrolytic rectifier and for the benefit of your readers I will set forth results of experiments made a few years ago. The rectifier as generally used consists of two plates one being aluminum, immersed in the proper solution. Many substances may be used for the second plate, but lead, iron or carbon are those ordinarily employed. Solutions generally used are sodium carbonate, sodium phosphate, potassium phosphate or ammonium phosphate. There are, however, many other solutions which may be used, even city water making a fair electrolyte for experimental work. Such a cell if inserted in A. C. circuit will allow current to pass freely from whatever substance is used for the cathode to the aluminum. Great resistance is opposed, however, to its passage in the opposite direction. The current is thus, to a certain extent, rectified. The apparatus so constructed has, however, two serious defects, viz.: It is rather inefficient. 40 per cent., as against 90 per cent. for mercury arc rectifier, being about the maximum efficiency. Secondly, the rectifier is very imperfect, the current consisting of alternate large and small waves in alternate directions. The small waves are due to the fact that a certain amount of current flows the wrong way, or leaks past the 'electric valve.' I trust the foregoing will shed some light upon this subject. I might add that the electrolyte (solution is what is meant, Editor) gets very hot during use, unless some outside means is taken to keep the cell cool: naturally the hotter the cell gets, the lower is its efficiency. I wish the Projection Department (perhaps I might say the 'operators' friend') every success."

In view of what has gone before I believe comment on Gary's letter is unnecessary. The testimony seems to uphold our own conclusion that that kind of a rectifier would not do for projection work.

COMMUTATOR.—Brandon, Man., Canada, writes: "Regarding the inquiry concerning care of commutator: they should be cleaned very often; every day is not too frequent when running 8 or 10 hours. Instead of doing wrong in cleaning his commutator every day, New York did perfectly right. A commutator which is kept clean will last twice as long as a dirty one. Sparking will be much greater on a dirty commutator. Using emery cloth, however, is worse than not cleaning it at all, since it contains many small particles of steel which may become imbedded in the insulation and produce electrical contact between the commutator bars. The only thing to use is sandpaper. Take a piece of wood one-half inch thick by two-thirds inch long, of equal width with the commutator, and resting it on the sandpaper, bear lightly on the commutator for a moment every day. This is the only thing required if the motor be well constructed. In case there is sparking, due to bits of emery imbedded in the insulation, a tooth brush will sometimes help in removing it. A light touch with a piece of candle will, in many cases, stop the sparking, but do not use much; just a slight touch."

I cannot at all agree with your methods, Brandon, I am sorry to say. Neither tallow or oil is good for a commutator; nor is it necessary to clean the same until it becomes dirty, which should not be, by any means, as often as once per day. I at one time operated four large Edison three-wire direct dynamoes for one year in Palestine, Texas. These machines had heavy output, and sparking at the brushes, if allowed to continue, soon became a very serious matter. I was not long in discovering that, so far as concerned the commutators, it was a pretty good scheme to let well enough alone. As long as there is no sparking of amount, it is not well to monkey with the commutator. I agree thoroughly with the brother who condemned the use of oil and grease on commutators, and believe myself, as I have already said, that a good commutator compound is the only thing to use. I cannot recommend the daily use of a board on the commutator. When after long usage it has become cut and grooved slightly, it would be well to make a curved block to exactly fit about one-quarter of the circumference of the commutator. Line the inside of the cover of the block with 00 sandpaper and, applying considerable pressure, changing the paper several times, grind the copper down to a smooth level surface. After doing this, however, it is necessary to examine the insulation between each bar with a magnifying glass, removing any strings of copper that may have been pulled across the insulation. This procedure is, however, only advisable when the commutator has become quite rough and slightly grooved. Do not imagine that because I cannot agree with your methods I do not appreciate your having written. It is often more practical to teach a lesson by pointing out the mistake, than by simply giving the right method of procedure. To my way of thinking, the brother in Winnipeg has given the best instruction on commutator care, up to date. I might add that the generator experience I spoke of occurred more than 20 years ago.

ALBUQUERQUE, N. M.—Mr. W. B. "Spot" Moore, operator of the new Crystal Theater, Albuquerque, N. M., whose photo appears herewith, is a stage carpenter, electrician and operator, who has been actively engaged in theatrical work in Albuquerque since 1890.

Friend Moore is known to all the old-time show people who have visited that beautiful city during the past 22 years.

LIGHT TROUBLE.—Shelby, Neb., writes: "I am new at the picture business, therefore have had all kinds of troubles, but have succeeded in overcoming a great majority of them up to date. Here, however, is a proposition that has got me going. It may be simple enough, but not for me. I have a type B Edison machine, lamp and rheostat, using 110 volts D. C., ⅝ electra cored carbons. My trouble is to get a spot of sufficient size to work with easily. At times it is about two inches in diameter and of clear white light; then again it reduces to almost one inch. I have tried shifting the lamphouse, changing the rheostat and everything else that might be thought of, but still the trouble remains. It seems to be more noticeable some nights than others. I am using two 7½ condensers. Our house electrician says that the voltage remains practically constant at all times."

Apparently in one of two things your trouble lies. If you really have two 7½ condensers, then, for some reason or other, you evidently are unable to get the lamp close enough to the lenses. However, you must understand that because the condensers were sold you for 7½ it does not necessarily follow that they are. Variation in the size of the spot may be due to some trifling difference in the set of the carbons. I would suggest that instead of using ⅝ cored below, you use ½ inch solid. I think you will get better results. I would not like to say positively, but I am pretty sure you haven't got 7½ lenses. Either that, or else, as I said before, your lamp does not go far enough ahead. Possibly you can scheme out some way to move the whole lamp ahead ½ an inch, which certainly ought to remedy the difficulty. I would suggest you send in $1.50 for a Handbook, which will teach you how to measure your condensers, as well as many other things. Possibly when you get the 2-inch spot you have your carbons angled slightly ahead, thus bringing the arc closer to the lens.

MORE ABOUT COMMUTATORS.—New York City writes: "Before I became an operator I worked at the electrical business. About once a day we used to lubricate our commutators with a piece of parafine wax. Sandpaper should only be used when the commutator begins to get rough. It is a mistake to suppose it ought to be bright and shiny in order to make good contact with the brushes. The natural commutator color is a dark brownish color. Brushes should have just sufficient tension to make firm connection with the commutator. This is easily done in the following way: Place a piece of sandpaper the width of the brush on the commutator under the brush, the brush resting on the rough side of the sandpaper. Have someone hold the brush down with considerable pressure while you pull the paper back and forth, holding it so that it bends around the commutator. When the commutator becomes worn, until the brushes run against the mica between the segments cut the mica away a little with a hack-saw blade. If grooves become worn in the commutator take the armature out and turn the commutator down on the lathe. If, on a cold day, when you start your generator, you find the voltage does not build up, that is to say, rise, take a piece of dry cloth and wipe the commutator off well, as sometimes the lubricant becomes hard when the machine becomes cold, while when it is running the wax becomes warm and soft, and the connection is good. Am waiting to see instructions of other makes of machines in the department. The one on the Power's No. Six is the real goods and I have it put carefully away in a safe place."

I can heartily indorse everything the brother says, except that, as I have said, I believe a regular commutator compound is the best lubricant, though parafine wax has not the objection which oil or tallow has. Possibly the brother in Brandon meant a parafine candle, but he didn't say so. I might remark, however, that the cutting out of the mica between the segments would be too ticklish a job for the average operator to tackle, particularly on a small motor where the insulation is comparatively thin. If the commutator is ground down with sandpaper, as we have previously recommended, before it becomes seriously grooved it will never need turning up, but this could not be done with a motor commutator. However, if the commutator is turned up in a lathe the insulation must be carefully examined with a magnifying glass as more or less copper will most likely be pulled across the insulation from one bar to the other.

FILM PATCHES.—Fergus Falls, Minn., writes: "I can't say too much for the Projection Department. If all operators would study it, it would help out a lot and very greatly improve projection. I was particularly interested in the issue of January 6th, in which appeared a detailed description of the Power's No. Six, and have been waiting ever since for a similar article on the Edison. I am much interested in the description of films and their care, now going on in the department. I try myself to take proper care of the films. As the machine I have been using is rather old, films have to be in pretty good shape to get through it without trouble. I must say that some of the patches made by exchanges would cause the humblest crank turner to blush. I received a reel recently from an exchange which was pinned together in two places with an ordinary pin."

The instructions on the Edison machine will appear in good time. It is quite true that many exchanges could very profitably put in some time learning how to make a decent patch in their films, or if they already know, then the patches they send out are certainly not calculated to demonstrate their knowledge. The General Film Company is, however, I believe, making an effort to correct many of the abuses common in the past, but it will require time and tremendous effort to accomplish the sadly needed reforms.

FROM THE ORIENT.—This department has, during the past two years, been the recipient of communications from Australia, Cuba, South America, the Hawaiian Islands, the Philippine Islands, England, Russia and France. Now the land of the wiley Mongolian comes into the department fold with the following letter from the Arcade Amusement Company, Tientsin, China. The manager of this company writes as follows: "We receive the Moving Picture World regularly and find it very interesting and also in many ways useful. We were particularly interested in the correspondence relating to the Mercury Arc Rectifier, which appeared in the department recently. We are writing the Western Electric Company for further information. Some of our local papers reported lately that Max Linder, Pathe's artist, is dead. This our resident Pathe agent denies. We would like to know the truth of this matter. In this city ours is the only cinematograph show in the Foreign Concessions, but in the Chinese city there are two or three which show films by fits and starts. We rent our films from a Shanghai firm and it costs $600 Mex. per month. Two changes weekly, on Wednesdays and Saturdays, 4,500 feet each change, of which half are subjects already shown and half not shown previously in this city. Being so far away from the centers of production, and having no competition, it does not matter if the films are 4 or 5 months old when we show them here, but we are not able to get such films from our renters. They seem to get very old films from some London firms. The sum $600 we pay each month will work out about G$30 per change or G$60 per week. As you will see from the enclosed programme ours is cinematograph and vaudeville show. Several companies failed previously in this city and we opened this theater in September, 1909. We are running it at a loss and, of course, bad films partly account for this. With a view of improving the quality of the films we wrote to several London firms, to the Edison Company and to the H. Davis Film Service, inquiring if they could supply them, even at a penny a foot. Only one London film, M. Bear & Co., offered to supply ten weeks' run films at a penny. Now if we purchase 9,000 feet of films per week at a penny a foot it will cost us about G$150, and as we have no means of re-renting these films the cost is prohibitive. We find from your journal that there are, roughly, a couple of hundred reels turned out weekly by the several makers. The demand therefore in your parts will be for new films always, and the exchange must have considerable quantities of films accumulated, without any further use for them. We shall be very much obliged to you for any advice you could give us in this respect."

This letter is very interesting in several ways. It calls pointedly to our attention the fact that even among the native Chinese the motion picture is making headway as a popular form of amusement. The figures given for film service are interesting. The fact also is emphasized in our minds that the age of the subject matters nothing at all, provided the film be in good condition and that it has not been shown previously in that locality. The gentleman has been in error in writing to the Western Electric Company. It is the General Electric Company with whom he should have corresponded regarding the Arc Rectifier. I have notified the General Electric to forward information concerning the same. The letter G before the dollar mark I presume to stand for gold. Surely there is, either in Japan or the Philippine Islands, some kind of an exchange, and if so, it would be much better in every way, it seems to me, to secure films from one of these places. Your idea that exchanges in this country accumulate ge quantities of film is not correct. The Licensed exchanges accumulate ne at all for the reason that at the end of a certain period it is required at the films purchased by the exchange be sent back to the manufac rer and destroyed. The Independent exchanges are not, I believe, bound any such requirements, but you may take it from me that by the time e exchange has finished using a film it is in such condition that no self-specting Chinaman would consent to sit through its running. The only ing I can suggest is the investigation of a possible source of supplies om Japan or the Philippines. If films could be had from Japan it is cely that you would have to make your own titles, since they would, of urse, be in the Japanese language. The Pathe artist referred to has been ry ill. He is, however, now recovered and again working. Pathe films which he appears will be released soon. Write Tait's Film Exchange, anila.

LENS TROUBLE.—Valparaiso, Ind., writes: "Am using a Motiograph d was throwing a good, sharp, clear picture at about 55 feet. Recently moved the machine back about 15 feet, with the result that there seems be two pictures, one inside of the other. Is the fault in the lens?"

In the first place, examine your lenses carefully and see if there is not faint finger mark on it. In the second place, take the lens combinations it of the tube and see if one of them is not loose in its holder. These e the only two things I can suggest that might possibly give some such fect. If the picture was clear and sharp before, most certainly something s happened to your lens, or it would still be clear and sharp, though nsiderably larger than formerly. It is also barely possible that you have jacket lens which will not move out far enough to focus at the new stance.

ABUSES.—New York City writes: "You doubtless are aware of the ils of construction of New York operating rooms and that the poor ventation is a menace to the health of the operator. The Health Department rmulates laws and issues rules tending to conserve the welfare of the mmunity, one, for example, being the prohibition of expectoration in blic places. Another city department compels us to keep the operating om closed at all times, and demands that the projection apertures in the all be of the smallest possible size, all of which tends to prevent any lequate ventilation, which most certainly is unsanitary and highly inrious to the health of the operator. Since the Health Department is so sirous of conserving the health of the people as a whole, and also cerin favored portions of the people, why does it not also protect the operar? There is absolutely no doubt as to the unsanitary condition of the ajority of operating rooms in New York City. I trust that you have fficient influence to do something in the matter. I might add that in any places the operator actually eats his meals in the dirty, unventilated erating room. Certainly reform should be speedily forthcoming."

My dear sir and brother, if there lives any one man outside of Tammany all or some equally great political wigwam, aside from the multi-millionres themselves, who could have any influence in the matter of securing dent conditions for anybody or anything in New York City, I would like to ake that individual by the hand. It is, as you say, a notorious fact, that undreds of New York operating rooms are miserably ventilated, and out as unsanitary as anything well could be. The remedy is perfectly mple and perfectly easy, and it has been pointed out time and again in is department. Its installation would not only do away with the unnitary conditions, but would also, in a large measure, obviate the fire anger. It is simply a matter of installing a ventilating pipe of ample size om ceiling of the operating room to the open air. If our Fire Departent, Building Department or the Board of Aldermen were doing their uty, they would immediately compel the installation of such vent pipes. p to date, however, they have made no move in this direction, though me few managers of their own volition have done so, and the act was ghly to their credit. So far as the sanitary end of it is concerned, you ust remember that the motion picture operator is a poor man, and the or man in New York City receives as much consideration as—well you ve in New York and you know how much attention is paid to the man ithout a bunch of money—or, in lieu thereof, a "pull," usually political.

A PUZZLE.—Camden, N. J., propounds the following: "When I open e show in the evening I have new carbons in the lamp and the light is ne and white all over, but after an interval of about 5 minutes it gets ark. I use an Edison transformer and if I increase the current the carons burn to a point; the bottom ones being consumed more rapidly than e top. I installed all new wires, but that did not remedy it at all. Have d other operators run the machine, but they are unable to locate the fficulty. I use electra carbons; have 105-foot throw. The light keeps inking all the time the machine is running, although the stand is anchored ghtly to the floor."

You say that the lower carbon is consumed more rapidly than the top d that the carbons needle (burn to a point) when you use heavy amperge, but you do not say what amperage you are now using. I think the ouble certainly must lie in your transformer, though what it is I cannot y. If any other operator has had a similar experience we would be glad hear from him. Would suggest you take the matter up with the Edison ompany, Orange, N. J. I am sure they will do all they can to help you.

WIRING.—Lompac, Cal., sends the following: "I have something I am nable to work out, hence pass it along to you. The electrical company ave us wired as follows: 110 wire to the motor, with 250 volt, 60 ampere use; meter is 100-110 volt, 50 cycle, 25 ampere, fuse 110 volt, 25 ampere. o. 10 wire to operating room fuse which are 110 volt, 30 ampere No. 10 ire to the lamp. I have a 55 ampere, 60 cycle, 110 volt formastat. The urrent here is 110 volt, 60 cycle A. C. I know I get every bit of light possibly can. Have tried No. 6 wires to the lamp, but the light is no etter. Am now using solid wire straight to the lamp. Please give me a le for finding the capacity of different wires. Is it necessary to study ght course in order to pass an operator's examination?"

You have made a mistake in striking the keys of your typewriter when u stated the amperage you were using at the arc. Instead of two figures u have an exclamation point and a question mark. This prevents me om figuring back to see whether your wires are large enough or not. ne thing I do see, however, and that is that the electric light company as installed 60 ampere fuses to protect No. 10 wires, the capacity of which only 24 amperes rubber covered, 32 amperes weatherproof, therefore far as those fuses are concerned your wires to meter are not protected all. I also note your meter is 50 cycle. Exactly what would be the effect in working a 50 cycle meter on 60 cycle current I don't know, but if I were in your place I would certainly insist on the installation of a 50 cycle meter. No. 10 wires are large enough to furnish 60 amperes at your arc, which is on the secondary of your formostat. 60 amperes on the secondary of the formostat should mean about 20 on the primary. I would suggest that you send in $1.50 for the Handbook, which will give you the capacity of all wires, as well as much other useful information. It is not necessary that you take a light course in order to pass the examination.

SHUTTER TROUBLE.—Merridien, Ohio, writes: "Am using an Edison exhibition model machine. Throw 64 feet, with a Bausch & Lomb special lens. Have 6½ condensing lens. Distance from cone to aperture, 19 inches. Current is 105 volt A. C. Use 30 amperes through a Ft. Wayne compensarc. The picture is clear, but the letters in titles seem to be double—that is to say, a haze seems to extend about [illegible] inches to the left. Have examined the lenses and find them to be O. K., as far as I can see. Have used a piece of ruled mica for focusing, therefore know the trouble is not in the lenses."

I would not like to say positively, but I think your trouble is due to the shutter not being set right. There are some types of the exhibition model, if I rightly remember, on which the shutter being out of time produces some such effect as you describe. Loosen your shutter on the spindle and move just a little and I believe the difficulty will be overcome. If lines on mica project straight, and without distortion, then the trouble certainly is not in the lens. Distance from condenser to aperture is excessive.

MOTOR SPEED REGULATOR.—Brandon, Man., Canada, writes: "I notice operators have trouble with regulating motor speed. I attach sketch of speed regulator which will work with any motor. I have used it for months and it works fine.

Some time ago I noticed an operator had trouble with his Motiograph which began to pull hard after half the film was run. The trouble lies in the take-up belt. While the belt does not seem tight, it being a flat belt, if there is some oil on it, it will adhere too much to the pulley and not slip easily. I eliminate this trouble by keeping the belt clean and dry. I think the operator in question has noticed, as I did, that even though his belt was very loose the film was rewinding too tightly, therefore his trouble was in the belt. I had the same difficulty with my light that the brother in Canton speaks of in the January 20th issue. I eliminated this by cleaning all the connections, starting with the main switch. The manufacturers do not give sufficient attention to the lamp. The lamp should be made as they are in France, so that the carbons may be adjusted in any direction. Many ghosts are due to wrong set of carbons. The set must be changed with various positions of the machine and different currents. With the present lamp it is almost impossible to handle the light properly."

Your speed regulator looks very good, only I would suggest there would be some danger of the cord wearing quite rapidly, with the constant slipping and breaking in the middle of a run. I thoroughly agree with you that the American lamp has not in the past been at all satisfactory. There are on the market now, however, several lamps which are a great improvement over those heretofore in use, and one company will presently market a lamp which, I believe, will be very nearly perfect, since all adjustment of the carbons may be made from the outside of the lamphouse. That is to say, the top carbon can be moved sidewise either way in relation to the lower one, or moved straight back or ahead in relation to the lower one, by means of regulating wheels outside of the lamphouse. This is a thing that has been sadly needed. It has been already done by some manufacturers, but not, I believe, in the best possible way. Doubtless it will be but a short time when all lamps will have these adjustments in practical form. The Motiograph take-up belt, of which you speak, I regard as a very excellent form of belt. However, what you have said concerning it is quite true, and operators will do well to take notice and keep their belt clean and free from too much oil.

SHUTTER, ETC.—Cooper, Tex., writes: "Am constant reader of the World. Could I make a three-wing shutter out of a two-wing one? Edison machine, Model B. How should I go about it, if it can be done? How would I go about getting pointers on a Power's Six machine—that is, regarding the mechanism?"

Really, Cooper, you are amusing. You say you are a "constant reader of the World," and then, in the next breath, ask how to go about getting pointers on Power's Six mechanism. Surely you cannot be a very "constant reader." Better secure copy of the World, January 6 issue. No, you cannot make a three-wing shutter out of a two-wing. Edison Company will, I believe, supply you with a two-wing shutter. If you mean that you want to install an outside three-wing shutter on a mechanism now equipped with two-wing inside shutter, that is something else again. It can be done, but you'd better have the Edison Company do it for you. Write them for prices.

POWER FACTOR.—Brooklyn, N. Y., writes: "I enclose picture and descriptive matter of Helios Arc Lamp. You will find underlined the fact that the lamp is single burning on 110 volt, consuming 400 watts, taking 10 amperes through the arc. If there is 10 A at 110V, then there should be 1,100 watts, instead if 400. Due, however, to the power factor of the circuit 1,100 watts is reduced to 400 watts, therefore proving that volts times amperes does not give watts in A. C. calculations. Kindly inform me if this statement is true. A bet depends on your reply and both parties refer the matter to you as an authority."

The lamp in question consumes but 400 watts of energy, though it requires 10 amperes, due to the following fact: In the upper part of the lamp, within its casing, is a reactance, in the form of a choke-coil, I believe, which, with but small waste, reduces the voltage to approximately 35. As the arc operates on approximately 35 volts pressure, and not 110, and as the reduction is effected with comparatively slight waste, you figure wattage by multiplying arc voltage by amperes This gives 350 and the extra 50 I presume represents the loss in the reactance. The power factor referred to is the product of amperes times volts taken at half way between zero and maximum of each alternation. It is due to the fact that ampere rise and fall and voltage rise and fall do not follow the same course.

MULTIPLE.—Portland, Ore., writes asking: "Which is the better, two rheostats hooked up in multiple, one pulling 18 and the other 22 amperes, or both pulling 20? As regards St. Louis inquiry about Adam and Eve and the Edengraph (P. 208, Jan. 20 issue), I will cheerfully answer that when he tells me what voltage Noah carried on his ark."

Well, Portland, inasmuch as Noah had a pair of electric eels on board that ought to be easy. However, if Anna ate an apple, would the apple be Indiana? Help, John! He's biting my finger! No difference in rheostat connection.

NEW RULES.—New York City asks: "Will you send me copy of new Underwriter's rule which requires machines to be placed in two operating rooms instead of one? If you cannot, then where can I procure copy?"

Had not heard of any such rule. Address National Board of Fire Underwriters, 135 William Street, New York City, asking for copy of the alleged rule.

ADDRESSES.—Cleveland, Ohio, writes asking for addresses of film exchanges between Port Arthur and Winnipeg. Will some one send same to him? Address Mr. A. J. Sukachie, 1236 E. Ninth Street, Cleveland, Ohio, Suite 39.

????? Peabody, Kan., writes: "Inclosed find $1.50 for another copy of Handbook. Lent mine to an operator—it's gone. About six weeks ago we changed from Independent to Licensed service. Since then my aperture plate seems to wear down in the center. What would or could cause this? Business is good in this part of the globe. When will instruction, similar to Powers and Standard, be published on the Motiograph? I am running that make of machine."

Motiograph instructions are in course of preparation. Will be published as soon as they can be completed. It is some task, however, to get out such instructions. I haven't any gray hairs now, but before those instructions are all done—well, mebby. You will have to describe the effect on aperture a little more definitely if I am to form any conclusion as to its cause. Changing from Independent to Licensed films had nothing whatever to do with it, however.

HUMPH.—Susanville, Cal., writes: "Must say the department is very interesting and invaluable. Would like your opinion in the following matter: Am using 110 volt, 60 cycle A. C., supplied from a 4-Kent transformer, then through auto transformer and through resistance consisting of ten feet of galvanized wire, No. 6 gauge. By test voltage is 55 at the arc. When arc is struck voltage on line drops to 98, and to 49 at the lamp. After arc opens pressure rises to 102 on feed wires and 51 at arc, but never over that mark. Why this drop and why does not the pressure on main leads ahead of the little transformer recover to 110? Entire wiring from pole to lamp is No. 6 and No. 2 wire. All connections are tight and heating reduced to a minimum. Light is yellowish. Pole transformer carries no other load. Very little heat at the resistance."

Your arc voltage should not exceed 35, or 38 at most, when working with A. C. If voltage between pole transformer and auto transformer drops to 98 when you strike the arc, it is plain that either the feed-wires or the pole transformer is overloaded. From your statement I take it that wires from pole transformer to house are No. 2, which have a capacity of 131 amperes, weatherproof. This precludes overloading these wires. Inasmuch as pressure does not recover, it follows that overload is continuous, and that is very bad. On the other hand, if the voltage on feeds come up to standard your arc voltage would probably be still higher. I don't know enough about the auto transformer you have to offer advice with certainty, but this much is sure: your arc voltage is entirely too high. I would try the effect of cutting in sufficient additional resistance to reduce it to 38 anyhow. If that doesn't improve matters you'd better get a more suitable operating room transformer. With an A. C. arc voltage of 51 you will never in this world get good light. It is plain that your auto transformer is not at all suited to the work it is doing. You get comparatively very little resistance from ten feet of No. 6 galvanized wire. Get No. 8 instead, and more of it. The very fact that the resistance is not heating shows it offers slight resistance. That is what resistance is for—to dissipate surplus voltage in the form of heat.

NOTICE.—I would like to have reports, in detail, of the performance of both A. C. and D. C. motor-generator sets. Give make, length of service, cost of repairs, economy as compared with whatever was used formerly. In fact, all pertinent information which will enable me to form an intelligent conclusion as to the degree of satisfaction such sets are giving. This information is not necessarily for publication, but for the editor's private information. Lay full stress on any faults found, as these will be submitted to manufacturers of the devices—without your name—to the end that they be remedied. It is high time that we stopped wasting energy in rheostats. Rheostat waste is probably costing theaters in this country not less than $5,000 every day in the year. All this could be saved. Much is now saved by use of Mercury Arc Rectifiers and transformers on A. C., but to date the operation of D. C. motor generators, the generator operating without resistance, is still a matter for some questioning. Transformers of A. C. stop waste. However, why use A. C. when D. C. is so far superior, if a really satisfactory D. C. generator capable of operating without resistance can be had? The Mercury Arc Rectifier, made by the General Electrical Company, unquestionably is good. It has stood the test of time nobly. With that, and satisfactory no resistance generators, I can see the finish of rheastatic waste and A. C. projection current in the near future. Now come on in with those reports, gentlemen, and make them complete.

SEVERAL THINGS.—Messrs. Brown & Dowell, San Diego, Cal., write: "In regard to Leadville's article, January 27 issue, we think your summary is correct. As stated in our first article, where a constant current is desired, a compound wound machine is preferable. Mr. Hallberg stated that the machine should be slightly over-compounded. This we described in our second article, which was not published. In regard to the rectifier as described by Gary, would say that a rectifier practically the same was described in detail about a year ago in Popular Electricity, except that it was for charging purposes. Two of the boys here attempted one of sufficient capacity for an arc, but found that the brine boiled and the stench was enough to condemn it. As regards New York's article would say under no circumstances should emery cloth be used on the commut of a motor or generator when same is being run. Use the finest s paper procurable. No. 0 is good. A little commutator compound a times a day should be sufficient lubrication, provided the brushes do rub too hard. For a machine motor a little commutator compound drop of oil on a cloth is sometimes good. We think the tension de recently described and illustrated is rather complicated for picture mac use, though it will undoubtedly do the work. Can see no provision f bearing between sprocket and the casing, as it should be for most chines. If the bearing were not placed there the pulley would be ou alignment with the magazine pulley."

The dynamo description was excellent, but has not yet been publi for lack of space. Your conclusions bear out my own and those of de ment correspondents.

How you can get a picture of the carbons on the screen, through densers and projection lens, passes my understanding. From the sk you send, however, it seems to be the carbons all right. Light, as Tho ville sketches it, shows dark blue on triangular space from top to bo and out to center at left, and light blue over similar spaces at Bright in center and dark spot just below center with light below it. top, center is dark brown with bright below. Changing clamp screw nothing to do with it. How does your spot look? That might te something.

POOR PHOTOGRAPHY.—Washington, D. C., writes: "Please tell why so many of the Licensed films are so blurred and out of focus days; they didn't seem to be before? I ran an Edison film last nigh an Edison Type B entitled 'Eleanore Cuyler' and I couldn't get a focus at all; the managers want perfect projection, but we cannot gi to them unless the manufacturers put out clear pictures. I think if s of them would take a hint and get up to the Essanay quality they woul better off; this is not meant as a slur. but for their benefit and ours Am a union operator belonging to Local 224, I. A. T. S. E., of Wasl ton, D. C."

Yours not being the only comment on Licensed films lately, I have the matter up with the powers that be to the end that the matter be vestigated and, if a fault has developed, it be remedied. Investigati under way. Possibly there is no just ground for the kicks—possibly is. Anyhow, we may rest assured that if anything is wrong it will spee be made right.

HELD OVER.—Many letters are unavoidably held over. We swamped with mail and we are about ready with another machine inst tion—the Simplex.

NEW FEATURE FILM COMPANY IN NEW ORLEA

A new feature film company has been incorporated un the laws of the State of Louisiana and has opened offi at 725 Maison Blanche Building. The title taken is Feat Film Company. Dave Wolf is general manager, and Tho Walsh advance representative. While the company's char permits it to manufacture and rent pictures and deal in sorts of accessories, its chief purpose is to handle feat pictures. It has already acquired the Southern State rig for "Zigomar," "Twenty Years in Sing Sing," "Tracked Bloodhounds," "A Life for a Life," "Tracy the Band" "Trailed by the Blackhand," "The Siege of Calais" and several others.

The incorporators are Dave Wolf, formerly manager the Texas Film Exchange, as president; Thos. Walsh, merly Western manager of the Curtis Aeroplane Compa vice-president; Wm. H. Gueringer, at present general manager of the Fichtenberg enterprises, consisting of a ch of twelve moving picture theaters, secretary and treasu A. G. Shear, formerly manager of the Consolidated F Company, as general manager. All are well known to exhibitors of the South and all experienced motion pict men. Prospects are so good that the new company pects to purchase three prints of every feature picture offe

AMERICAN BACKGROUNDS ATTRACT ATTENTI

Samuel S. Hutchinson, president of the American F Manufacturing Company, returned to Chicago on Mon Feb. 5, after two weeks with the Western company in Mesa. Mr. Hutchinson was delighted with conditi in the Western studio and expressed himself as hig pleased with the line of subject emanating from the fer mind of his producer, who has scoured southern Califo for backgrounds for his pictures. Recent releases and th booked for the near future show the results of this car canvass. Ranch scenes are staged mostly on the estates famous Americans who possess vast ranches in and aro La Mesa. Where "dress-suit" backgrounds are desired, American is particularly fortunate, having within easy ac some of the most superb hotels in the world. For insta a coming picture entitled "From the Four Hundred to Herd," is a delightful combination of these essentials. early scenes are staged throughout the grounds of famous United States Hotel, while the latter scenes h been produced on the ranch owned by historian Bancr American backgrounds are attracting much favorable co ment in the trade.

Comments on the Films

"A PROBLEM IN REDUCTION" (Vitagraph), February 3.—A picture at gives a clear narrative, logically and smoothly carried forward; but it not a dramatic picture. In it, Miss Gardner plays a woman who is get- ng fat and who is determined to reduce. A good comedienne also plays, it, the part of a beauty doctor. In the end, the woman's husband says, love you just the same." It is well photographed. For the right occa- on, it will make a good feature. It is a picture that is wholly good- tured and that will amuse at all times. It is well photographed.

"THE LAW OR THE LADY" (Vitagraph), February 5.—An artistic elodrama of political life, it has much quality in its plot, its acting, its neral stage management and its photography. The plot is simple and tural and the story is carried forward speedily with no flat places and th a steady deepening of interest.

Perhaps, taking it as a picture of life, and it is very convincing, its ost interesting character is the astute machine boss (played by Brooke). c see him confronted by a knotty problem. He must save the railroad esident (played by Eldridge) who had broken the law and who was to tried before a judge (played by Costello) who is known to be just. s first attempt to suborn the judge fails and he then craftily makes use the fact that the accused man's daughter (played by Miss Neason) is gaged to the judge. But his scheme fails completely by the merest ance. The other three characters were also intelligently and clearly own and were very interesting.

One of the most noticeable qualities of the picture is its quiet dignity. gets this largely from the fact that it is one whole, and not a broken ries of situations. Scene follows scene without padding or complication any kind. The center of interest keeps its balance, so to speak, as it is nded from scene to scene. There is also little suggestion of stage craft it. Every scene at once throws the interest to the center where it be- ngs and keeps it there regardless of other considerations. We don't tice the furnishings much; nothing is obtruded; everything seems just have happened. It takes great pains to arrange naturally. The photo- aphs also are natural or are the kind that seem so. There's no doubt out its being a feature. It is a very good melodrama.

"THE BATTLE OF POTTSBURG BRIDGE" (Kalem), February 5.—A ar-time picture, showing a Southern heroine successfully firing the tim- rs of a bridge on which an interesting, but not very convincing skirmish tween Jeb Stuart's cavalry and Union infantry is raging. It is a picture at will please the gallery a great deal. It is very well photographed for e most part.

"A NEAR TRAGEDY" (Biograph), February 5.—A good comedy in ich a pair doing a vaudeville sketch figure. It gives a chance for some ry good acting and shows some amusing characters. It is interesting, well otographed and made the audience laugh.

"LILY'S LOVERS" (Biograph), February 5.—A farce showing how Lily twitted three or four of her presumptuous lovers. It caused laughter.

"THE LITTLE STOWAWAY" (Selig), February 1.—It has been re- rked in our hearing that it is a pity the Selig photographs are so dim, ce their settings and backgrounds are so excellent. In some of the enes in this picture poor photography even lets in some confusion. The ory of the stowaway and how she came to be dressed as a boy and on e ship on which the parents of the little boy who was stolen were voyag- g, and also how she was able to do the mother of her little friend, the len boy, a double service, and which ends in a happy family reunion, in- ding herself as an adopted daughter, is very interesting. It has the at- osphere of real life. It is full length and a good filler.

"COWBOY VS. TENDERFOOT" (Melies), February 1.—There are me very well photographed views of rough mountains and of Western e on a ranch in this picture. The picture might have been called "An sterner, But Still a Good Fellow." It tells a not very original love and alousy story in which the heroine finds the lost half of a note. This rows a new light on the other half, signed with his name, which nearly t him hanged. It's a filler.

"NIAGARA FALLS" (Edison), February 3.—An extremely fine scenic. is well photographed and worth while.

"LUCKY DOG" (Edison), February 3.—A delightful picture that will ake the Edison bull pup Rowdy popular from one end of the country to e other. His owner, simple-hearted father of a family, was going to vest his earnings in mining stock. It looked suspicious, but the two pro- oters looked even more so. The man happened to drop his pocketbook just tside the promoter's door. The dog saw it fall and mounted guard. me street crooks also saw it fall and the dog had to "get out," taking e purse with him. We saw it being buried beside his kennel. The man, ying to buy the stock, finds the money gone and is much disturbed. The ening paper came and he then saw that the mining scheme was a fraud. comforted him some to know that the sharpers did not get the money yway. We now see the bull pup digging and presently he walks into the chen with the purse in his mouth. The picture has qualities that make a sure feature and a fine picture for children, and also for private en- rtainments and in churches. It has only one marked awkwardness. The g is made to pick up the purse twice. This losing the purse for the sec- d time shows the man is too careless and isn't convincing. If it was cessary to prepare us for the dog's action, which is doubtful, it could ve been done in some other way.

"JENKINS AT THE CIRCUS" (Cines), February 3.—A picture of a circus ring with ponies, dogs and clowns. Jenkins was one of the audience; but when the clowns were performing jumped into the ring. It delighted the boys in the gallery. No one laughed at this downstairs; but the picture of a circus interests the people.

"LOST" (Cines), February 3.—A picture which gives a most startling representation of a city-destroying earthquake, with three-story brick buildings shaken and tumbling to the ground. If it had been printed on a reddish film and some smoke added, it would have been tremendous, even appaling. The scenario must have contained a very good story; but, as produced, it lacks convincing power. The photographs are very clear. The studio sets seem cheap; but the backgrounds were very well chosen. As a picture of an earthquake it is the sensation of the week.

"AN INDIAN ROMEO AND JULIET" (Vitagraph), January 30.—A very pretty picture in beautiful Mohawk Valley backgrounds, featuring Miss Florence Turner as an Indian maid who is loved by a Huron Romeo, but whose father, the Mohawk chief, has set her apart for a rich Mohawk warrior. The Indian Romeo and Juliet meet by stealth, are married by stealth and, on the eve of the marriage with the Mohawk which she can't escape, she gets from the medicine man a potion which makes her seem dead. The ending scene is exactly almost like the old ending but in Indian settings. It will be a good feature picture although the story is not very vital. The photographs are very beautiful.

"THE JEWELS" (Edison), January 30.—After a long illness that had used up all his money, a man is told by his wife, who had been compelled to take service, of her employer's beautiful gems. The man had just received a note from his landlord telling him that he must either pay back rent or get out and he was worried. He falls asleep and a strange dream comes to him. He sees the gems all around him. They lead him to the apartment of his wife's employer and he breaks in and steals the gems. The woman and her maid, his wife, come in. He hides and his wife's voice wakes him and he realizes that he has stolen them. The maid, his wife, leaves the room and he comes out. The woman faints. The wife comes back, recognizes her husband and they bring the employer back to her senses and then the man faints. The wife tries to explain. The employer takes up the telephone. The spectators don't know that she isn't going to call the police and that the wife seems to understand. The change when we realize that she is calling for help to take the sick man home is effective. Miss Fuller plays the wife; Miss Nesbitt the employer, and Mr. Shaw the man. It might be made a feature; but it will surely serve as a good filler.

"THE POOR RELATION" (Lubin), January 29.—A Cinderella-like picture of modern life, featuring Miss May Buckley as the poor relation of a very bad tempered aunt and cousin. The story is not powerfully convincing in its details, but, broadly viewed, it is satisfying. It has some very pretty scenes, one of these is a dance in a big hall with a balcony above and the stairs. There are many pretty girls in this picture and distinguished gowns. The poor relation, slavey and maid of all work that she is, isn't permitted to come down. She watches the dancers from the balcony and there the man who stands for the prince of the old story finds her and falls in love with her. It is a very pretty picture with good humored comedy; the leading lady gave a clear interpretation and she was well supported. It was well photographed and the audience seemed to be delighted with it. If carefully put on, it will serve as a feature. It has no especial strength, though, as a story.

"WHERE THE MONEY WENT" (Vitagraph), January 29.—A comedy of misunderstanding. The young husband wanted to make his wife a birthday present of a house and lot. It cost him $10,000 and his wife wondered what he was doing with the money. We had seen him bargaining with his friend, the real estate agent. The agent had presented him to his wife and they had gone out to the piazza where a snap-shot had been taken of the husband talking with the agent's wife who is holding her baby. The agent sends a print of this with a note saying that the deed is ready. The husband goes for the deed, leaving the unnoticed print on the floor. The wife finds it and thinks she knows where the money goes. She follows her husband, has an unpleasant time, but discovers the mistake in the end. Miss Helen Gardner plays the lead very well. The photographs might have been better. It is very light and will serve as a good filler.

"AN INTERRUPTED WEDDING" (Kalem), January 29.—A melodramatic picture with a bit more thrill than usual in photoplays that have set forth this story. Two Western lovers are separated by the financial difficulties of the girl's father which make the girl accept the unwelcome attentions of a rich but undesirable neighbor. The girl dislikes him, but she doesn't see him in the same light that the spectators do—he's a scoundrel. The unhappy lover leaves the district. He is elected a sheriff and learns that his rival is wanted for a crime. He gallops hard and enters just at the middle of the ceremony, which he interrupts. The film is of full length, it is fairly speedy, well photographed and the audience seemed to like it.

"A BLOT ON THE ESCUTCHEON" (Biograph), January 29.—An excellent two reel picture of a very interesting poem. Browning's scenario stands out clearly, as shown, and the story is intensely dramatic. The play has been produced several times, but has never been very popular. Perhaps it is due to Browning's peculiar style, for the picture has the elements of popularity in a marked degree. The Biograph producer has also made a scholarly production in it and deserves high commendation. Not only did the three principals act it with much intelligence and suggestiveness, but the choice of the scenes, their management, and the choice of backgrounds and settings are very satisfactory. The story is well known and the argument can be found on page 330, issue of January 27. Browning's philosophy is a little hard, Puritanical, and the story is apt to leave a slightly unpleasant taste in thoughtful spectators. But the story is very famous and the situation is poignantly intense. It is the week's greatest feature picture. It should be advertised among schools and teachers and people of culture. It is just the picture to win new recruits to the photoplay patrons. It should be carefully put on and with well-chosen, appropriate music. No exhibitor should regret having put it on; it ought to be a business getter.

"PRINCESS OF THE HILLS" (Kalem), February 2.—A love story in Mexican costume; it is set in an orange grove and palm backgrounds which are pleasing, especially at this winter season. There is little that is new in the story; but it is kept clear and holds attention. It makes a good filler.

"THE WIDOW OF RICKEY O'NEAL" (Selig), February 5.—A very fair comedy in a ranch-life setting. It is not perfectly photographed but it is well played and gave several good laughs. It is not quite a feature.

"UMBRELLAS TO MEND" (Vitagraph), February 5.—What probably is one of the best umbrella anecdotes of recent years furnished the idea for this picture, which, as played by the Vitagraph Company's comedians, John Bunny, Flora Finch and Kate Price, is very funny. It certainly tickled the audience. It is not very long, perhaps 500 feet.

"IDEAL" (Vitagraph), February 5.—"Ideal" is the swimming name of a very clever young lady diver and fancy swimmer. She is a wonder and this exhibition of her art is instructive. It is a good feature picture for those who want to learn how to swim.

"ALKALI IKE'S LOVE AFFAIR" (Essanay), February 5.—A burlesque in which the well-known Essanay cowboy character plays the lover of a stout young lady. It made the audience laugh more than once and seemed to be popular.

"THE PASSING OF J. B. RANDALL & CO." (Edison), February 5.—A story of a broker who failed and of a newsboy who kept him from killing himself. The broker is played by B. F. Wilson and the newsie, Jimmie Quinn, by Robert Tansey, who didn't look very Irish. It is not up to the average Edison in interest. There were a number of scenes that seemed not wholly necessary and, at the climax, the story, as shown, didn't powerfully convince. But it has a first-rate, human-kind idea and is a wholesome optimistic picture. It will serve very well as a filler.

"THE GIRL HE LEFT BEHIND" (Selig), February 5.—A very interesting picture which is convincing in spite of reason. Perhaps chiefly because it isn't permitted to drag, it disarms criticism. The producer has dressed the heroine in snowy white with a willow plume and several of the scenes are very pretty. The characters are clearly contrasted and interesting, although the unhappy inventor of the story looked very much like an old actor rather than a scientist. It is not quite a feature.

"EARL'S COURT, LONDON" (Eclipse), January 31.—A scenic film giving a very good idea of London's great amusement park, its scenic railroads, coasters, crazy roads, etc. It is well photographed and interesting.

"KITTY IN DREAMLAND" (Eclipse), January 31.—This delightful fantasy shows us the land under the pansies and buttercups where very pretty fairy dances take place. The story has an evil genius in an old witch, who tries to do harm, but is prevented by a good fairy who brings her to trial. Two grotesque dwarfs execute her. Her head is on the block and the axe falls; but there is no blood. She dies as they do in fairyland; she vanishes leaving only her cloak, an old rag, in the hands of the executioner. The reviewer was able to see only the last three-quarters of the film, but it delighted him greatly. It is a good feature for a children's program, or any program for that matter, even for private entertainments. It is well photographed and very pretty.

"LOVE VS. STRATEGY" (Lubin), January 31.—Two young men, in this rather old-fashioned melodrama, are rivals in love as well as rivals in business. The denouement turns on a contract which both are striving for. It is understood that the girl will be the prize. The villain employs tramps to capture the hero and hold him secure until too late to get the coveted contract; but he happens to drop the note written to him by the tramp and the girl learns of the trick. She brings help and the schemer is foiled. He also loses the contract. It is very well pictured, is coherent and clear and will serve very well as a filler.

"THE FIRST VIOLIN" (Vitagraph), February 2.—A sentimental picture the same in kind as The Music Master. It is well acted and although it makes use of shop-worn expedients gets over pretty effectively. The first violin is played by Van Dyke Brooke. Coming from the theater one day he finds a little waif (Helen Costello) whom he takes home and cares for. The little player was never sweeter than she is in this picture. She is shown playing actress and it makes a thoroughly delightful little comedy. The Children's Aid Society won't let the old batchelor keep the child. She is taken to an orphanage and, later, adopted by a lady (Miss Finch). She grows up into an overworked slavey, and from this point Miss Hazel Neason takes the rôle. She runs away and becomes an actress. The method used to bring her and the old and now poor violinist together was, we are sorry to say, very trite—her automobile runs over him. Once or twice Bunny appears in the picture.

"THE HOSPITAL BABY" (Essanay), February 2.—Nearly all the Essanay pictures for some time back have had noticably fresh scenarios behind them. This is no exception to the rule. The life of a baby in a hospital is saved by a young doctor of the institution who gives some of his blood to her. This transfusion operation is not a very pleasant scene and is perhaps the weakest part of the picture. The doctor becomes very much attached to the child who is later adopted by wealthy foster parents. They lose track of each other. The doctor becomes famous; the foster-father dies poor and the child, now grown to a fine young woman, gets employment in the doctor's office as secretary. They do not recognize each other. Some thugs decoy the doctor to a rough neighborhood with intent to rob him. The girl suspects and leads the police who arrive in time to capture the gang. The doctor takes the girl home and the foster-mother recognizes him. There is a wedding and a memory picture that shows the doctor describing the operation to the girl. This double exposure is not very well made. It is a feature picture; but not the best of the week. It is well photographed and of about full length.

"THE GRIP SNATCHER" (Essanay), February 1.—A good, fresh comedy which made the audience laugh and seemed to please them. The grip snatcher was waiting around in the depot for something to turn u One of the sweepers ordered him to get his grip out of the way. I looked down, saw the grip and took it home. There were little bottles it; they smelt good and the snatcher drank up what was in a couple them. He felt very sleepy. In the meantime we are shown a famo physician just back from Africa and who had lost his grip in which had specimens of the sleeping sickness. He advertises it in the pape stating that in the bottles are enough germs to depopulate the whole cit When the snatcher wakes he gets a paper and sees this ad. The docto name had been on the tag and he becomes very very much worried. I hurries to the doctor. The doctor quickly examines the contents of t satchel and, looking away so that the poor man won't see, smiles. Aft impressing the worried man with the seriousness of his condition, he te him that he has been cured and makes him promise to reform. It is bo brisk and bright and will probably be welcomed everywhere. It is just t kind of comedy to brighten a program.

"THE TRANSFORMATION OF MIKE" (Biograph), February 1.— melodrama of the underworld with incidents of the usual, outworn ki such as escapes down a dumbwaiter, the escape of the crook with the he of his sweetheart, etc. The picture's story shows a gangster reform through love. The meeting of this youth and the girl and the progress the romance at the dance hall and on the stairs of the tenement, etc., a often pretty, but not very new or vital. The gangster got a glimpse money in the possession of a collector who was the girl's father, but didn't know this. He broke into his rooms at night. The girl's sm brother got down the dumb-waiter and brought the police. But in t meantime, the girl and the gangster have recognized each other and wh the police arrive, she helps him to slip away, not very convincingly. will serve as a very fair filler, because it was artistically posed and pho graphed, even if it wasn't very convincingly written or acted.

"A TIMELY RESCUE" (Vitagraph), January 31.—A Boer War pictu with skirmish scenes and an interesting picture of Boer cavalry advanci on the English lines in irregular order. The backgrounds do not strong suggest Africa. There is also a little confusion at a critical point in t story, due to the fact that it is hard to differentiate the soldiers in u form. Greater pains must be taken under such conditions than whe difference in dress helps one to recognize different players. The acti soon picks out the hero and the villain;- but, for a moment, something lost. Aside from this, the story is clear and interesting. A false cle gets his fellow clerk discharged for a theft he himself had committed. T innocent man joins the army, but soon the other also is discharged a both go to the front together. The honest man is shot and the one w had had him discharged saves his life, but, doing it, is mortally wound and before he dies confesses. The other is then reinstated and the lo story is also happily completed. The photographs are pretty good throug out. The acting is intelligent and dignified. The picture may serve as feature on ordinary occasions.

"BUNKIE" (Selig), February 2.—A story in which "Bunkie," a s dier's horse, figures largely. It is fresh and interesting; at its clim it held the audience's attention very strongly. In fact, this part of t picture, so well conceived, so simply acted and conducted as it is, deserv high praise as a true work of art. Bunkie is owned by Lieutenant Bro (Hobart Bostworth) and in the early scenes saves his life after he had be badly wounded by Indians. The horse helps him up and then carries h safely to the post. His wounds bring on fever and delirium throu which he is nursed by his fiancée and by an Apache girl, a sort of serva who also loves him. The climax, in which this Indian girl attempts to le him in his delirium, away to her people so that he may marry her, is led to by a fairly convincing train of circumstances. The horse, being loo follows. The drama, up to its denouement, is then carried forward these three and is finely accomplished, Bostworth and the Apache maid bo showing marked artistic work. Because of this, the picture may be lied upon as a safe feature. It is well photographed and of full length.

"THE PHYSICIAN'S HONOR" (Lubin), February 1.—Mr. Arth Johnson in this well-photographed picture plays the part of a physici who was true to his duty. He was taking his fiancée to a ball when got an urgent call from a poor patient. In spite of the displeasure of t girl, who is shown as being somewhat wilful, he accepts the call. Wh he is at the patient's bedside, the girl thinks it over and repents. She f lows and in his office when he has returned makes up with him. It is ve well posed. At the end of an excellent scene, showing the little patient the road to recovery and the joy of his mother, some one in the New Yo audience (he must have come from out of town) broke in with merit applause. At the end of the picture, the applause was more general. will serve as a feature on ordinary occasions; but this same theme has b handled in a more vital way in other pictures.

"THROUGH THE DRIFTS" (Lubin), January 27.—A very melod matic picture which tells a clear story in interesting backgrounds; but wh is full of peculiar inconsistencies. This was so plain that people behi the reviewer laughed at them. There were no drifts, but a light snowf of about three inches, just enough to make snowshoe tracks. It was sn ing fiercely just around the cabin door, but hardly any outside. It is, fact, perhaps the most artificial, so far as production goes, of any Lu picture. The Western postmistress is loved by two men and, at first prefers the coward and turns the hero down. Her little sister goes fo ride with the coward who is the mail carrier. A furious blizzard swe snow almost across the postoffice when she opens the door and in anxiety she gets the hero to go for her sister. He finds her where she been abandoned by the coward. After several incidents that show how a character this hero is and how cowardly the other, the postmistress gi her affections where they should have been at first. It will serve as a fil where the audience isn't very critical.

NOT WITH THE NATIONAL.

The Fox Motion Picture Company, of Los Angeles, C desire this paper to deny that they are in any way connect with the National Film Distributing Company; neither they contemplate being connected with them in any mann Previous announcement to this effect was not authorized the Fox Motion Picture Company.

Independent.

"THE REAL ESTATE FRAUD" (American), February 5.—A young an and his mother are very hard up, but suddenly they receive a legacy. he man goes to the West and there falls into the hands of a fraudulent nd dealer. He is saved from wasting his money by the man's stenographer. few days later, there is a wedding. It is dramatically effective but ght; it also has instructive qualities (several of the "Flying A" films have en instructive in this way lately) and is very acceptable. The photo- aphs are very good indeed, one shows the panorama view of a western ty, perhaps it is La Mesa. It will serve very well to strengthen a bill.

"TOTO, A DOOR-KEEPER" (Itala), February 10.—The door-keeper in large hotel wins the first prize in a lottery and neglects the door to hold "jamboree" in the dining-room with the other servants. Meanwhile, the te guests come to the closed door and can't get in. It begins to rain. here is also trouble inside the house; the guests are disturbed. The otographs are very good.

"HUNTING DUCKS" (Itala), February 10.—This picture shows the ooting of ducks from a boat with a very large gun, a cannon. On a autiful reach of water the sportsmen are shown rowing up near decoys at are attracting wild birds. The work of the dogs is also shown. It s interest. The split reel will serve very well as a filler.

"A TENDERFOOT'S REVENGE" (Bison), February 9.—The tenderfoot d brought an electric battery with him from the East. It was such as ctors use and a big one. The punchers on the ranch horsed the tender- ot badly and he and the ranch girl, who had become his sweetheart, got venge by means of this. They rigged it up to the tin plates on the din- er table and had the whole bunch held fast while they got married at the rsonage. It isn't convincing; people know too much about electricity. shows very fine camera work on very poor stock; the pictures are faulty, ut clear. It is about full length and will serve as a filler. Miss Grandin ays the ranch girl.

"THE PROTECTION OF THE CROSS" (Bison), February 6.—A exican story of passionate people. There's a mistaken posse in it and innocent man and woman suspected of murder. The woman takes fuge in a church and the padre protects her. The struggle in which e supposed murdered man lost his life is then described to the sheriff ho declares the suspected ones to be innocent. The scenes were chosen d made by an artist; but, although these are extremely pretty, they have en photographed on defective film. The defects do not destroy, they erely mar the beauty of the pictures of the scenes. The action is car- ed forward smoothly and doesn't drag. The picture will make a first- ass filler.

"MRS. CRANSTON'S JEWELS" (Solax), February 9.—Cranston, in eat need of money, takes an impression of the key of his wife's jewel se and is filing a key like it when his wife, who has found out his nancial predicament, sees him at work and by some means, knows or sus- cts what he intends doing. She removes the jewels and when Cranston nds them gone he calls the police. The butler had seen the wife opening a indow (she had done it so that her husband would suspect that burglars d stolen them). When the detectives hear the butler's story, the wife's t is disclosed. It is an interesting picture, fairly fresh; but it has a ot very vital theme. The camera work is only so so. It will serve a filler.

"GUILTY CONSCIENCE" (Solax), February 7.—The opening of this cture may remind spectators of an old joke; but it breaks away from the ke and uses a somewhat fresher idea; one that the Lubin people used a w weeks ago. It is, however, a very much better picture than the one st noticed, chiefly because it is played by a number of much more in- resting characters. One amusing scene finds the man who lost his um- ella hunting in vain, among the scores that were left on his piazza, for e one he had had taken from him. The old joke appears in the last ene again; but is so amusingly shown that it is very acceptable. As very light comedy it will be very good to brighten a bill.

"CALLED BACK ON THE RIGHT PATH" (Ambrosio), February 7.—he married man was making love, as a single man, to another woman. is little girl's doll in his pocket accused him and the woman left him, he went back and made friends with his wife and family. It is very ght; but there is a good picture on the same reel.

"TWEEDLEDUM AS A RIDING SCHOOL MASTER" (Ambrosio), ebruary 7.—Out of a job, this clever character got a position in which it as his business to follow the horses on a bicycle and whip them over ostacles. These obstacles are hard and risky and many a rider has a bad ll. It is more interesting as a picture ot excellent and eccentric riding an on account of any farcical quality in it. It is a picture that is re to be popular; the riding and the horses will make it so. The photo- aphs are very good.

"THE AVIATOR AND THE AUTOIST RACE FOR A BRIDE" Champion), February 5.—The girl was out with the autoist, but slipped way to ride with an aviator. This made the autoist jealous and he en let it be seen. The aviator follows as they drive off and we see good race. The auto breaks down and again the aviator takes the girl. here's another good race. She proposes then that the two men race and e one who wins takes her home. The result is an exciting race in which e bird-man wins. It is very good and will serve very well as a feature. he photographs are fair. It is nearly full length.

"THE DIVIDED FAMILY" (Champion), February 7.—A picture full the most sensational incidents. The story is complicated, but very clear d in places it is rough. It is fairly well acted by a part of the cast. It ill serve as a filler in places where an exciting, sensational picture is de- red.

"THE STOLEN LETTER" (Reliance), February 7.—The picture might so have been called "Between Two Loves"; for the dramatic struggle takes ace in the hearts of two lovers. The girl knows that the man is en- ged. Perhaps she also knows that the man loves her more than his ncée. It was she who stole the letter. She knew it was from the other rl; but not that it broke the man's engagement, for, in contritition, she turned it unopened. The end is happy for her. The picture tells a pleasing story in a pleasant way and is likely to be popular. Miss Robinson and Miss Fernley play the parts of the two girls.

"BEDELIA'S BUSY MORNING" (Reliance), February 10.—A character farce giving a cook's experience for a day. It ends by her being fired. It is a very fair character picture and is amusing.

"RELIANCE EDUCATIONAL PICTURE NO. 3," February 10.—An intensely interesting picture showing how big rattlesnakes are captured and also how snake-bites are cared for. It is commendable.

"THE NURSE" (Powers), February 6.—There are some very pretty backgrounds in this picture which are well photographed. The story is fairly reasonable and is well acted. It tells how a woman's schoolgirl chum, when in later years she was invited to make a visit, made trouble between husband and wife, who had one child, a pretty little girl. She did this by working on the jealousy of both until the wife and mother ran away from the home. The child became very sick and the news of this brings the mother back in disguise as a trained nurse. The nurse came in a wig. The spectator doesn't know it is the mother and when the child knocks off the wig, we have an undramatic surprise. It is not a feature, but will serve well as a filler.

"THE SIGNAL CODE" (Thanhouser), February 9.—A spy story, telling how a clever woman worked to obtain a signal code book from a young and somewhat susceptible lieutenant in the United States Navy. The lieutenant falls in love with her and, as his guest, she visits the ship determined to secure the code. One of the ship's sailors has reason to be grateful to the lieutenant, and when he weakly permits the girl to take the code book, craftily substitutes in her bag a brick for the book. The backgrounds were obtained during a recent visit of a large fleet to New York; they include a dreadnought's deck and bridge, the Hudson River, with the ship at anchor, and the scenes about the decks, etc. These pictures are very interesting. Most of the photographs are good. It will serve as a filler.

"THE TROUBLE MAKER" (Thanhouser), February 9.—These scenes have the prettiness we naturally look for in Thanhouser films. Excellent photographs, with carefully made stage sets, make the backgrounds seem alive. The story is human and typical in a fair degree. Two young married people (Mr. Russel and Miss La Badie play the parts) grow suddenly rich and come to the East. Social ambitions lead the young wife into perilous places and nearly bring about an irreparable break in the relations of the pair. Both in deep trouble start back toward the old home in the West. They encounter each other again and again on the trip and although they had got a divorce decide to get married again in the same little church. It has more truth and likelihood than Clyde Fitch's "The City" has; it is not so sensational and is artistically a better production. It will make a first-class feature.

"I NEVER SAID A WORD" (Nestor), February 10.—Mrs. Tittle overheard Mr. Joy talking with his dear wife over the telephone. She supposed he was making a "date" with a woman and went out of the office. She found Mrs. Tattle just outside the door and together they manage to get the story spread all over town that Charlie Joy is running after other women. Three of the "cackling old hens" come to tell Mrs. Joy; but are coldly received by the lady who sees through it. It is well photographed and amusing.

"TITEWAD PAYS FOR A DOG" (Nestor), February 10.—Wifey said that her husband was "too stingy to live"; because he wouldn't buy her a willow plume nor a puppy. She got into such a rage that Titewad, when she wasn't looking, hid the wad where he thought she wouldn't find it, in a shotgun. It stayed there all right until that night when a dog made a bad rumpus outside and Titewad fired both barrels covering the dog with bits of greenbacks. There's a hearty, good laugh in it.

"WHITE CLOUD'S SECRET" (Nestor), February 7.—A story is told by a dying Indian to his son, just back from school. It begins with the murder of a white man by the Indian who found him crossing the desert alone. The man had had a bag of gold which the Indian had later abandoned. The son goes out to recover this. In the desert he encounters a white man who treacherously robs him of his horse and water and leaves him to die. He is saved by the son of the man whom his father had murdered and, on discovering this fact, returns to him the gold by leaving it with a note on the kitchen table and then departs from the cabin alone. The complications of this story are what chiefly keep it from being most effective. Such stories are apt to break themselves up into loosely connected incidents, and the changing of the situation keeps the mind from grasping anything very strongly. The photographs are very good. The picture drags a bit in places; but has much that is interesting and will make a good filler.

"DOG-GONED LUCK" (Nestor), February 5.—A boarding house farce helped by the Nestor subtitles. The impecunious boarder is ordered out of his room for non-payment of rent and, to get even with the lady of the house, he steals her dog, a white poodle. The man then suggests to her that she advertise a reward and this he collects with the help of a friend outside. Because his advertisement had so quickly brought back the pet, Mr. Hopkins is soon back in favor with the mistress. It is amusing, but very light. It is very hard to get anything effective, and original, too, out of the boarding house situation. The photographs are good and the subtitles very clever. It will serve as a filler.

"CARDINAL FARLEY'S RETURN" (Nestor), February 5.—The night pictures of the illuminations on St. Patrick's are the best views in this picture. The views of the parade are not so clear as the best among the others that have been released.

"THE BARGAIN" (Rex), February 8.—This reel has been reviewed on page 492, issue of February 10.

"A BURGLAR'S LOVE" (Great Northern), February 10.—A melodrama with a very novel idea. A burglar enters a house to steal, but, because of the beauty of the owner of the gems, he leaves without taking anything, much to the disgust of his pal. In the next two or three weeks he manages to get acquainted with the girl whom he saw asleep and later becomes her accepted suitor. He is still dishonest and at the races steals a hand bag from a lady by cutting it from its strap. A motion picture camera was pointed toward him. Later, he takes the girl into a picture show and the very scene is projected. The girl sees him commit the crime. He proves to the girl that he has turned over a new leaf and she forgives him. It is a well designed picture, but depends for its interest chiefly on the novelty of its idea. The thread of the story seems hardly reasonable enough to be very affecting.

"THE TRAMP'S DOG" (Lux), February 9.—The dog adopted the tramp and when his new master was unjustly arrested for highway robbery, played detective and led the authorities to the hiding place of the true robber. There is much in the picture that is very interesting. The photographs are fair.

"WEAVING CARPET" (Lux), February 9.—This valuable industrial on the same reel with the above shows the different steps in the weaving of fine carpets. It is clearly photographed. Together they will make a fair addition to the program.

"MRS. MATHEWS, DRESSMAKER" (Imp), February 8.—A picture of a dressmaker's difficulties. She was a widow with one little girl, who had fallen sick. She had no money to get the necessary medicine—a rich woman who owed her money had refused to pay, because the dress was a minute or so late. She stole the medicine and was arrested and this fact softened the rich woman who came to her assistance. It is not an original story, but it is a truthful, human one, within limitations. It is well acted and very well photographed.

"THE HELPING HAND" (Imp), February 5.—Troubles don't come singly very often. Just when a big debt fell due as shown by this picture was the time the factory needed to lay off men and the old man is out of work. He has almost enough to pay the debt and, after returning a hand bag that he picked up on the street, is given enough to make up the amount due. He pays the debt and saves his home. There is heart interest in the picture and it is well acted. The photographs are good and it leaves a pleasant taste in the mouth. It is not quite a feature; but will make an honored place for itself in the bill, as a filler.

"A GRUBSTAKE MORTGAGE" (American), February 8.—The foreman of the quartz mine has a pretty daughter. She is loved by the young engineer on the works and also by a prospector who salts a worthless hole in the ground with gold dust and induces the girl's father to mortgage his home to grubstake him while developing it. The father is injured and dies just before a payment on the mortgage becomes due, but the girl gets an extension. The superintendent, who holds the mortgage, becomes interested and sends the young engineer to inspect the claim. He tells the truth and the mortgage is forclosed; the girl is homeless. She is near the mine when the villain forces unwelcome attentions on her. The hero comes and there is a lively struggle in which the bad man is disposed of. The acting is of the well-known "Flying A" quality without the usual leading lady; it is good and the photographs also are. It is a desirable filler.

College Students Compete for "Odyssey" Prize.

Monopol Film Company Offers Reward for Best Essay on Great Poem.

To stimulate interest in Homer's "Odyssey," the Monopol Film Company only last December offered a cash prize of $100 for the best thousand-word essay on the greatest of all epic poems. Ten thousand letters were written to school superintendents and principals throughout the United States and Canada. The rules of the competition were simple, yet wide enough in scope to embrace a contest that would reach far and wide. The students of every school, college and university were invited to submit essays, which were to be read and passed upon by a committee under the direction of the Rev. Doctor Stockton.

To date, nearly 1,000 manuscripts have reached the Monopol office. As a publicity getter, this has proven one of the best and most inexpensive stunts devised. The students became enthused over the contest; they in turn worked up an interest with the parents at home, and this occurring in nearly every town in America, the interest in the Odyssey became universal.

The winner's name and photograph will be reproduced in the trade papers and also in the home town of the student. Another feature of unique importance is that the Monopol Film Company has on file at its office letters from every university president in America commending the "Odyssey" as a masterpiece of world's literature.

There's a thriller in the "Odyssey"—a genuine one—something that should give the press agent a real chance to use the dictionary, it being granted that big adjectives are only found in the dictionary. The thriller comes in the last scene. There are other thrillers, of course, but here's this one: Ulysses has returned home from the Trojan War to find his wife beset by many suitors seeking her hand in marriage, it being believed that Ulysses is dead. The hero is transformed by the Goddess Minerva into a tramp, and in this guise gains admission to the palace to beg alms.

On this very day, Penelope, the wife of Ulysses, has been made to promise that she will select a husband from among the many suitors, but imposes a condition. She will marry only the man who must be as much a man as Ulysses. The successful suitor will be he that can bend Ulysses' bow and shoot an arrow like the master could. It looks simple. All are eager for the contest, anxious to be the first, as it looks so simple. One by one they fail to bend the bow. The la suitor has given up in despair, when Ulysses, ragged as tramp, grasps the bow; a second later the arrow whizz through the air.

Now the thriller! The crowd is amazed. Amazeme turns to consternation as it dawns upon them that Ulyss has reappeared. There's a flashing of shiny steel as the weapons cleave the air, forty against one—but Ulysses as for no quarter. Silently, swiftly and deadly he spurts arro after arrow into the fighting, struggling forms. All but o suitor are stretched on the floor. He springs at Ulysses ju as the arrow leaves the bow; the dart pierces his body, i sharp point being plainly seen protruding from the man back, with a considerable length of it showing imbedded his chest.

That's the thriller. Of course, it is trick photography; the haven't reached that degree of realism, as yet, when the actually murder even to get a good picture; but the impre sion is there—you'll think it's murder; it's a clever dece tion. The wounded man, apparently in the throes and to tures of death, wheels, turns and squirms, his white rob are seen to redden as the blood apparently gushes from t heart—it's an achievement of master craftsmanship in t art of photoplay deception. The story of the "Odyssey" not gruesome. It is not like some that have gone before repellant to sensitive natures. It's not depressing; there an intertwining of romance, a kaleidoscope of wondrous ill sions, and a varied series of scenes of majestic splend State rights on the "Odyssey" are in better and quicker d mand than any picture ever handled by the Monopol Fil Company.

REFORMER COMES TO GRIEF.

Secretary Frey, of the Reading, Pa. "Committee of Seven Caught Grafting—Leaves Town.

A few weeks ago the Moving Picture World published article from Mr. H. B. Frey, Secretary of the "Committee Seven," of the city of Reading, Pa., duties of which co mittee, as explained by Mr. Frey, were to be the censoring public entertainments. Mr. Frey told at some length wh the committee proposed to do and what it had accomplishe The proposition looked reasonable on its face and mig have worked out in practice to the benefit of Reading a the other cities that might have adopted it.

Now it transpires that the lofty minded secretary of t "Committee of Seven" has proven himself to be actuat by a sordid desire to acquire filthy lucre and, as a resu has been told that Reading is entirely too small a town f his activities. According to a rather lengthy story in t "Reading Herald" of January 30, the "blow off" came wh Mr. Frey attempted to collect a little "honorarium" of $1 for permission to exhibit the Dante pictures in Readin Fortunately for the promoters of the Dante pictures, th only paid Frey $2 on account before they called his game.

A meeting of the "Committee of Seven" was called at t office of Daniel J. McDermott, one of its members, whe Mr. Frey was given his "ticket of leave." Mr. Frey depart from Reading the following day, declaring that he was inn cent and intended to come back to prove it. Lest "Secretar Frey should resume activities along the same lines in oth cities, it is well for moving picture men generally to lo out for him. He is about thirty-five years old, five fe nine or ten inches in height, and weighs about 165 poun He has dark hair and eyes, smooth, full face and speaks wi a slightly Southern dialect. His beginning in Reading w as a member of the staff of the "Reading Telegraph," whi shortly after began a crusade against the moving pictur which resulted in the organization of the "Committee Seven," with Mr. Frey as secretary.

RICHARDSON REFUSES TO BE BURIED.

An undertaking establishment is located next door the studio of the American Film Manufacturing Company, Mesa, Cal. Along the wall in the rear of the undertaki house is a long row of pine boxes used to ship coffins One day last week, Jack Richardson, the "heavy man" the American, came in from a most trying and tragic pict feeling much depressed. He strolled into the rear of t building and there, to his utter amazement and dismay, found that someone had posted a placard on each b which read "Jack Richardson." Did this cheer up t "heavy man?" It did not, according to other members the "Flying A" company. Richardson is said to be s searching, craftily and carefully, for some carelessly dropp word that would inform him as to the exact whereabo of the gentleman or lady who conceived the joke.

The Pictures From the Public Viewpoint.

Observations in a Kindly Critical Tone by a Confirmed Moving Picture Fan.

THE very backbone of the silent drama is realism of effect—actuality of background and accessory—the feeling that what is seen really happened because it appears to happen in natural surroundings. It is the reason why the acting in a silent drama in front of painted scenery must be forty times as strong as that which occurs in the open, with nature for scenery, and it is the reason why so many Western pictures "get by" when the audience is heartily tired of the subject—the intense realism of the scene and action, unduplicatable by the finest stage manager on the best equipped stage in the world.

Producers are forever trying to get new ideas of realism and to set silent drama in new but none the less obviously natural surroundings. We are taken from ship to shore, from railway to steamboat, from jungle to the far north, in search of the new and novel but nevertheless unquestionable reality of scenery.

Gaumont has gone a step further in this search, and in "The Early Christian Martyrs" has given us a piece of work which has small hooks indeed on which to hang criticism—so perfectly is it done, so simple is its plot, and so strong and sustained its interest. Taking its theme from those cruel days when Nero threw Christian men and women to the lions in the arena, this photoplay doesn't dodge the action with side scenes and implication—there are real lions—and lots of them—men are thrown in with them, and only a miracle, which actually happens (or seems to) saves the victim.

We are shown poor Christians gathering wood, and see them terrified at the roars of the lions. We see them flee, and learn that one, more courageous than his fellows, determines, as he may not kill the beasts, to tame them. Then we see him feed them, and, creeping closer and closer, finally pat and embrace these lions and make them his friends. No, it isn't faked. They are real lions and it is a real man—probably he was a lion tamer and "played with his pets."—but he is a mighty good actor, at that—so are the lions!

Then we see the Christians taken by the soldiers to Rome and in a very well-managed scene indeed watch them praying in the dungeon near the arena, with the lions roaring behind the bars of their cages. The arena, which certainly presented difficulties to the scenic producer, is excellently done, and the little touch of realism of about a dozen lions being whipped about the arena by two men and finally forced into their cage is the last touch necessary. Finally we see our Christian thrust into the arena and a lion loosed upon him. That lion made straight for the man, but instead of eating him, caressed him! It was the same lion the same man had tamed—before he was caught for the use of Nero in the arena! And, naturally enough, the spectators think it a miracle, and Nero, the cruel, turns his thumb up, and the Christian and all his companions were saved. It wasn't a wonder, after all,—it was perfectly natural, yet as the title asks you, was it not, after all, a miracle.

My compliments to the makers. It is a film rich in realism, true to history as we know it, and not spoiled in the telling with any side issues of love tale or revenge motif—simply a little bit of a great human drama. It is highly educational, extremely interesting, and with so happy and human an ending that in spite of the dread theme of human sacrifice on which it is built, it would give no child bad dreams. I would there were more like it made in this country.

The first few minutes of "Love and Lemons" (American) seemed to promise that the audience was being handed a bunch of the end of the title. It was because of the photography, which was pretty poor. Now, why a manufacturer should put out a reel of film which is mostly well photographed and yet permit a couple of hundred feet of decided under-exposure to begin it, present scribe does not know. It's poor business. It gives people the idea the film isn't going to be worth looking at. Which in this case was not so. It was worth looking at. It not only tells a reasonable probable love story in a reasonably probable way, but it brings up a brand new way of winning a girl, introduces the audience to some things they never heard of before, such as lemon-testing rings and the necessity of cutting lemons instead of pulling them, etc., and is, altogether, not only reasonably entertaining, but thoroughly instructive and interesting. It's a sort of human interest lesson in lemonology—I wish there were more like it, the first part being poorly photographed, to the contrary notwithstanding!

The curious conception of their own abilities which some people have is often astonishing, isn't it? But in the theatrical profession it isn't often that you find someone doing something so distinctly inartistic, so ridiculously inappropriate, as to be positively grotesque, and coming out in print in sober praise of it!

Do you ever hold imaginary conversations with yourself when looking at a film? Do you suppose a producer ever does? I can't help thinking that that particular producer who staged "Mother and the Girls" did so. It ran like this, I imagine:

What is a comedy?
A funny play!
When is a play funny?
When it reflects common everyday life so we see the humor of it.
Is a man chasing a dog funny?
He is not.
Is a man careering over the street and knocking inoffensive old apple women into the gutter funny?
He is not.
Is a runaway automobile which knocks people down and smashes up store windows funny?
It is not.
Well, let's then, make a funniment which is funny.
All right.
What is the final test of fun in a comedy?
Seeing whether the audience laughs!

Well, the audience does laugh. It laughs because it's true to life—the half-baked girls, thinking of beaus and parties, the mother slaving for the girls—the father raving but helpless. Then mother falls ill and the girls must housekeep and cook—note the cook. And beaus come to call with flowers for mother, and Dad asks them to stay for supper—and such a supper. Bread like stones, meat like wood, and the rest on a par. There is no proposing or ring-giving that night. And two tearful daughters learn housekeeping as soon as Mamma is well, and the next dinner tells a different tale! Simple, natural, unaffected, well acted, well staged, it is really funny and really well done, and in a dearth of funny films worth the name, stands out exceedingly well. My compliments to Edison.

I am told on no less authority than that of the editor that the only sort of criticism which is worth anything is constructive, not iconoclastic criticism. In other words, if I object to what has been done, I should suggest something better. So here goes for a trial.

The matter in hand is Bison's "Empty Water Keg." It wastes some good acting and beautiful scenery, together with fine photography and well-managed "settings" (although practically all out of doors) on a rather threadbare plot. There are several misfits and improbabilities in it. In the first place, miners of twenty years experience set water kegs on end, not on their sides—they don't take chances with spiggots getting loose when no water means death. If the keg had to leak water to make the man die of thirst, the horse could have kicked it, or a boulder dropped on it. It didn't have to be an unnatural carelessness. But listen to this, carefully: One small keg, between this man and death by thirst—where was the water for his horse? Horses drink a lot! Also, when he found he was waterless, and went away on his horse, why and how did he lose him? We are not told. He was easily within horseback ride of water because two lovers are shown in a stream, ahorse, and they find him, apparently in his death agony.

All this doesn't "hang." He shouldn't have had a horse, in the first place, and, if he was to be found by a girl and a man, they shouldn't have ridden off for an afternoon's jaunt—it puts them too close to him—and he was supposed to be dying of thirst in a desert! We can pass over this dying of thirst—it is somewhat doubtful if men do die of thirst when they are strong enough to talk and to draw diagrams in the sand describing locations of mines—especially just after having a drink. But why not have him already have the diagram made? Even a dying man can sometimes point to his breast! Finally, why call it a "desert" when there are grass and trees growing, and when, on precisely the same character of ground we see a cattle range scene?

Scene from "The Lemon" (Essanay).

Cattle have to have water No, I won't say anything of the man who with twenty years' experience hunts nuggets ("pocket hunters" they call them) in a "desert," and where there is no water, nor the fact the nuggets are not usually found lying loose on the surface, nor that practically the only gold mining the individual can do, outside of "pocketing" is placer mining, which requires water. Enough has been said as it is. Bison was hard up for a plot and got a bad one. And in these days of the critical audience, it's only the good ones which get the hand. The more the pity, too, when cast, scenery and photography are so good.

Majestic's "Old Lady of Twenty" is delightful—delightfully conceived and as delightfully played—a comedy, well carried out, with practically only three characters (and two of these the same person in different guises) is as rare as it is acceptable. Outside of its humor its charm is in its daintiness and the restraint in its acting.

I have ranted so much in these columns about films which libeled physicians that I am glad to note two which do not—and one of them is Essanay's "Hospital Baby," which has as fine a hospital scene as one could wish to see—natural, strange, curious and interesting and well, well played, even to the lack of the start and stagger of pain bravely repressed which one couldn't help expecting of the young intern when they stuck a knife into him to get his blood for transfusion to the sick child—and which he, very properly, didn't give. And, what is even more unusual, the last scene, in which the saved child, now grown, saves the doctor's life, is as good as the first scene, and a bit of sentiment when she, recognizing through her mother's words that this is the man who saved her from death as a child, is exceptionally natural and well played.

The other medical picture is Lubin's "Physician's Honor," in which a doctor has to choose between his girl and a party, and a professional call. Leaves the girl—gets his ring back from her in a pet, saves baby's life, girl repents, puts on ring—all well. Not much to it, but does show, what is surely a fact, that to a doctor, and a good doctor, there is nothing —not even his best beloved's pleasure, which must come before his professional work.

But why drag Dad into it? Why have the doctor quarr with father over a game of cards, first—why have the docto ask girl and father to this party, why not confine the stor to the doctor, the girl, the poor mother and father and th sick child, and the footman? I think I know why—that fat ful sign which hangs in the brain of every producer- One Thousand Feet! The film had to be padded—henc Dad, a quarrel over cards, and a lot of side play that didn belong to the story at all—could be bodily chopped fro the film and leave it the stronger for the chopping.

I would I had space for a lengthy review of Thanhouser "On Probation." I haven't, and so I won't hurt any one feelings (supposing any one's feeling can be hurt by wh happens in this column). But in the reaching after effe here, it seems to me as if a very slight alteration in th plot—even, in the titles, would have saved this film from a atmosphere of gross improbability. Here sister has broth accused of theft he didn't commit—nay, has him arreste before a dinner party—to gain another and supposedly dea brother's income. Here Great Aunt treats with great cruelt her grand-niece for no special reason except that she wan to. Why have this person a sister? Why not a cousin, a dead daughter's dearest friend? Such animosity, suc criminal willingness to destroy one's own flesh and bloo for the sake of money we see in court now and then—b do we look for it in every day life? No. And it is the li of every day, on the screen, which we find convincing.

One must, however, pay one's respects to the cast—th supposed weak brother, who is idle and not trusted, show himself rather a sweet natured chap in a very artistic mann —the two children are sharply contrasted in nature an acting, the Thanhouser kid attractive and rather grown up i action as usual, but very dramatic—the bad boy distinct a badly spoiled child—the villainous sister most unusuall well played with no histrionics at all and the rest of the cast acceptable.

But the "theft" was very amateurish. You can't put a met bag, even a small one, into a man's coat pocket and h not feel it—and when he has to swing his arm away fro his body so he won't accidentally feel it, the effect is ver bad. Please, Mr. Director, why couldn't it be slipped in a overcoat pocket and found there by a servant?

"A WESTERN KIMONO" (Essanay).

One of the very funniest of Essanay's popular "Snakeville" eries is "A Western Kimono," which is booked for early elease. The "Snakeville" comedies, originated and proluced under the personal supervision of Mr. G. M. Anderson, ontinue to bring joy to the exhibitor's heart as he listens o the shrieks of laughter from his audiences as they watch he droll antics of "Alkali" Ike, "Mustang" Pete and other amous fun-makers, and in the present release "Alkali" certainly gives lovers of clean-cut comedy a great run for their noney.

Scene from "A Western Kimona" (Essanay).

The story goes that pretty Betty King is adored by "Snake-le's" entire contingent of cowboys, including "Alkali" Ike d "Mustang" Pete, Ike and Pete being the strongest rivals her hand. Alkali wins. A year later the stork gallops to his corral and presents him with a bouncing son and ir.

It is at this time that the community becomes greatly rmed over an article in the "Snakeville Bugle" reading to s effect:

> Citizens and Ranchmen Worried.
> A new disease that is puzzling our doctors has made its appearance in our midst. It is termed "KIMONITIS," and seems to attack women and babies. Ranchmen will do well to be on the watch.

'Holy mavericks!" yells Alkali when he reads the item. ll sure have to warn Betty and see that the yearlin' don't ch anything in that brand uh diseases!" and forthwith he es down the trail toward his shack.

Finding the door ajar, Alkali hustles in and is amazed to find both Betty and the baby missing, but sees a note on the table and reads:

> Sweetheart:—
> You must get your own dinner to-day. I am compelled to go to Pocatello to get my kimono cut out. WIFEY.

"Alkali" lets out a wild yell of terror at the thought of his precious Betty having contracted the new and horrible disease, "Kimonitis." With the one insane desire to get to Pocatello, "Alkali" reaches the railway station just in time to be too late to catch the Pocatello train. Dashing up the track he comes upon a section gang bowling along on a hand-car. With a whoop "Alkali" knocks them off with one sweep of his lusty arm, jumps on the car and pumps off for dear life.

Arriving in Pocatello, winded and exhausted, he rushes down the main street and suddenly bumps into his darling Betty coming out of a store. Under her arm is a rather bulky package and she amazingly shows no signs of being a "kimonitis" victim. "Alkali" finally finds his voice, relieves her of "Alkali, Jr." then questions her about her "operation." Suddenly Betty begins to laugh and, while "Alkali" plies her with questions, she gets him on the next train and they return to the shack.

Here it is that poor "Alkali" is brought to realize what a locoed idiot he has made of himself, when Betty opens the package and flaunts the new kimono before his gaping eyes, and he sees it to be a thing of calico and frills instead of the dreaded disease he had thought. Whereupon, Betty takes him in her arms, soothes his ruffled temper and laughs while he solemnly swears off on "kimonitis" and all kindred ills.

With Augustus Carney in his favorite rôle of "Alkali," this screaming comedy is a sure-fire winner with any audience. It is booked for release Saturday, February 24th.

IT'S THE NEW ROCHELLE 'PHONE AGAIN!

Buzz—Buzz—Buzz—

'Twas New Rochelle trying to get the World office; and then—"Hello, Moving Picture World?"

"Yaas!"

"Well, this is Thanhouser Company talking. Say, did you hear how our 'Thanhouser Kid' stopped the show at the Exhibitors' Ball in New York last week?"

Scene from "Washington in Danger" (Thanhouser).

"Shuah, Bert, we did. What about it?"

"Well, we just wanted to tip you to watch for the Kid in our George Washington picture, 'Washington in Danger,' out Tuesday, Feb. 20th."

"All right; but what has that to do with the Exhibitors' Ball?"

"Nothing much, Jim, coming to think hard on it! You see, I'm an almost press agent—good-bye!"

"IN DIS-A COUNTREE" (Lubin).

Angelo Ragone was one of the happiest men in Italy the day he married Marie Perfetti. She was a pretty little doll of only 15 years and she was good, too, for she had been brought up with due regard for her religion and respect for her parents. They were hard-working people and did not complain at their humble station in life, but when Angelo realized that he had a wife to take care of, he felt that he wanted to do better for her, and with that ambition resolved to leave Italy and seek fortune in America, where he was told all people were better off and did not have to work so hard for a living. Kissing his wife and her family good-bye, he boarded a liner that steamed away to the land of promise. He would send for Marie "verra soon," and the little wife took the separation bravely.

Landing in New York, Angelo immediately went to work as a laborer and divided a humble room with another laborer named Tony Bosso. Another laborer, Gasico, and an organ grinder with a monkey, and the four men became companions, occupying the same room. One night Angelo was awakened by a commotion and found Bosso and the other laborer trying to rob the organ grinder of his moneybag. Angelo immediately sailed in and a desperate fight took place in which he was knocked senseless. The organ grinder was killed and the robbers escaped. When the police arrived they arrested Ragone and he was accused of the murder. At the trial, Angelo, not speaking English, made a poor defense. Of course, the evidence was circumstantial, but the jury would not acquit him and he was thrown into jail, where he lingered to await developments.

The Betrothal of Angelo and Marie—Scene from "In Dis-a Countree" (Lubin).

Marie, over in Italy, gives birth to a little boy and not hearing for a long time from her husband, she, with her father and child, come to America to find him. After much inquiry, they hear the story and use every effort to get Angelo released, but fail. Bosse, sick with pneumonia, is occupying a room in the same tenement house as the family, and feeling that his end is near, sends for Marie's father and makes full confession of the crime. His accomplice has fled from the country and Bosso dies that night. After, however, having admitted the confession to the authorities, Angelo's case is re-opened and the worthy fellow is released. The family are reunited and commence a new and happy life in "dis-a countree."

"HUBBY DOES THE WASHING" (Solax).

Mr. Jay Poole	Billy Quirk
Mrs. Jay Poole	Blanche Cornwall
Elizabeth Lincoln Jefferson Lee	Fanny Simpson
A neighbor	Mrs. Foy

and others

Some men have peculiar ideas of economy. For exampl a man will perhaps walk two or three miles in order to sav five cents and then he will spend a dime for a pack of cig arettes. Or a fellow will stint himself at lunch for a whol week so as to be able to take his "goil" to a moving pictu show! (You never can tell—some fellers are desperat sports.)

Scene from "Hubby Does the Washing" (Solax).

Mr. Poole, who plays the husband in the Solax producti of "Hubby Does the Washing," the Billy Quirk comedy lease of February 21, is just such a sport. He has, as t scientist would say, a false idea of economy. He tells wife that expenses in the household are cutting too great dent in his bank account. "We must cut down expenses," his cry. He gets an idea that the best way to begin cutti expenses is by cutting down laundry bills. Wifey is indigna at such a preposterous suggestion and retorts that perh hubby would like to undertake the washing himself.

Hubby doesn't at all think ill of the plan. In fact hul prepares to do the work. Hubby starts all right, but mal such a mess of things that by the time he gets through laundry costs him about six times more than ordinarily.

Billy Quirk is the whole thing in this comedy. Irrepressi Billy brings a laugh with each foot of film.

THE GAUMONT WEEKLY.

A photographic record of the world's most import events for each week, and the people who have played p in these happenings, certainly should make a most interest film. Such an animated picture of the passing show on merry old earth as it rolls its rumbling way, is to be, Gaumont Company announces, the striking feature of Gaumont Weekly, which will make its bow on February and on each Thursday thereafter. The film will run fr 900 to 1,000 feet, and its projectors believe, will excel a thing of the kind ever before attempted. The best operat procurable have been stationed at various points on continent and with the aid of these, it is promised that ev big news item of pictorial value occurring in North Ame will be covered. In addition, the French Gaumont Comp will send over, for each issue, a condensed, but highly gra record of all important European happenings. Variety its widest sense will be, it is said, the keynote of Gaumont Weekly, the idea being to cover as many subj in each issue as is practicable on a film of this length, at the same time give a satisfying view of each topic trea Mr. Blaché, manager of the Gaumont Company, says no pense is being spared to bring the weekly record up to last minute in timeliness, and he is certain, from the m tude of letters already received, that it will instantly come immensely popular throughout the country. Gaumont Weekly will be released on the date of issue, week, that is, it will be available for exchange men day it leaves the Gaumont plant at Flushing, N. Y., o soon thereafter as it can reach its destination.

"SO SPEAKS THE HEART" (Rex).

Oftentimes what is supposed to be love will never stand e test. The love of some folks will stand very little testg, and the love of others will stand the greatest of tests. etween these two extremes there are many points at which ve fails to stand up under a change of conditions, dependg entirely upon the strength or the weakness of the lover. "So Speaks the Heart" we have an example of love put to e of its most severe tests. The picture takes up a much ooted question upon which, so far, the cynics seem to have uch the better of the argument. The question is whether ve will stand the loss of the more important physical facules by one or the other of the lovers. In this particular ase, love is not equal to the ordeal.

In the opening scene are a pair of happy lovers whom we e in the act of choosing each other as life partners, and l seems propitious for the sounds of early wedding bells. ut soon a change of conditions puts a new aspect upon the ase. In carrying a lighted lamp from one room to another, e young woman is suddenly blinded by the lamp exploding. er intended husband is notified and comes to view the sad reck of the girl's beauty. There is no doubt that he is very rry; still it is clear to be seen that he is debating with imself as to whether a marriage with the blinded girl would w be advisable. After an inward struggle, the young man ecides that he cannot assume the burden of taking to himlf a blind wife, and, therefore, to further his purpose, he akes arrangements to go to another part of the world. e adopts a dishonorable plan for breaking the engagement y telling her that he intends to go to the far-distant mining elds and win a fortune, to the end that he may return and pply it to the restoration of her sight. It is plain to be en by the action that he is not sincere and that his plan is a wardly subterfuge. His trusting sweetheart accepts his ord in good faith and the young man starts away. As we llow him to the gold fields we observe how soon he forgets is obligations and how soon he is taken up with the whirl f rough Western gaiety. There are other women there of a ss desirable character who attract his fancy and occupy his are time to such an extent that he does not find it convennt to write to his neglected sweetheart back home.

Scene from "So Speaks the Heart" (Rex).

The mother and sister of the blind girl soon become aware at she is being deceived and their sorrow is, of course, ery great. In order to satisfy the pleadings of the unfortuate young woman for news of her absent lover, they think wise to read to her some imaginary letters which are nothg more than blank paper, purporting to come from the oung man out West. This deception is kept up for some me, until a great surgeon interests himself in her case and ecides that her eyesight can be restored by an operation. eanwhile she has been keeping all the blank letters in her easure box. Her eyesight at last restored by the great rgeon, one of the first things she does is to discover that er much-prized love letters are merely blank paper. Thus the scales fall from her eyes in more senses than one. eing in a weakened state from suffering, this sudden agony f mind proves too great for her frail physique and she sinks eneath her weight of woe to rise no more.

The picture contains the moral that young men should not ter lightly into betrothal pledges, and that once having ne so they should be prepared to be loyal, whatever Fate ay decree. The scenes are tasty and bear the hallmarks of xcellence, while the acting is first-class. The part of the lind girl is played by Marion Leonard, which in itself is a uarantee of good work.

TWO CLEVER MAJESTICS.

"Does Your Wife Love You?" is the question asked by the title of a forthcoming Majestic picture, and then the players essay to answer the question in a novel manner. Two couples of newly-weds, living upon the same floor of a flat building are on calling terms. The respective husbands have been turned down by their wives when they sought to bestow a fond caress and have interpreted the coldness to a lack of love. The young husbands meet in the hallway and frame up something to put over on their wives. The wives have heard the plot and they plan a counterplot. What happens is good comedy and will get many a laugh.

"Bought" is the title of a splendid comedy-drama that has been most carefully portrayed by the Majestic players. The opening scene is a saloon in a mining camp. The saloonkeeper's daughter, a pretty girl, but apparently of little consequence to her father, becomes the stake at a game of cards and is won by a big, handsome miner. The big fellow falls in love with the girl and sends her back East to his sister in Chicago with the request that she be given a proper training. A few years later he succeeded in making his pile and returns home to see what the sister has accomplished. Upon reaching his sister's home he learns that the folks are celebrating New Year's Eve at one of the big hotels, so he goes to join them, and arrives in time to rescue his ward from her companions, who are trying to make her drink wine against her desire. He takes her home and then goes back for a session with the young man friend who was the girl's escort. The result is a call by the young man next day and his rejection by the girl, who afterward makes it plain to the big miner that he is the only fellow with whom she is in love. The dramatic situations in this picture are good and are well portrayed.

HALLBERG INCANDESCENT LIGHTING SYSTEM.

J. H. Hallberg, "The Economizer Man," showed us a letter from Frank A. Green, "Arcade Theater," Morgantown, W. Va., reading as follows: "Your incandescent light economizer sold us is working fine. Before using same the wheel on the meter ran around 67 times a minute; now it runs 38 times, and when we install the other Economizer and special lamps for the sign it will surely slow down some more. (The meter won't wear out so fast.)"

Feature Advertising of a Feature Film.

Free Paper to Buyers of "Homer's Odyssey."

It will not be the fault of the Monopol Film Company if the state-right buyers of "Homer's Odyssey" do not reap a rich harvest. Never in the history of the film business has such an elaborate advertising campaign been outlined. The Monopol Film Co. knew that they had a good film; all they needed was someone to enthuse the public to an equal extent. So Frank Winch, a well-known theatrical publicity man, then acting in that capacity to the Buffalo Bill show, was engaged, much to the disappointment of Mr. W. F. Cody. Winch immediately started in to apply his theatrical experience to film exploiting, after first studying his Homer and the Milano film. Advertising matter of every description was quickly prepared, from 24-sheet posters down to post cards. The list of advertising matter given in their advertisement last week is only a portion of what has been prepared.

Striking figure study reproduced from a scene in "Homer's Odyssey" and used to good advantage in the posters and advertising matter for the film.

We have no hesitancy in saying that no motion picture has ever been so thoroughly advertised and never was so much well-designed advertising matter placed at the disposal of the state right buyer. The Monopol Film Company have also devised a plan whereby state right buyers will get without cost much of this special advertising matter—another new feature in the business.

Some of the booklets and paper that Mr. Winch has designed is most elaborate. He has drawn liberally upon the film itself for striking illustrations, as, for example, the two figures shown herewith.

POLICEMEN AND FIREMEN INSTRUCTED BY MOTION PICTURES.

Policemen and firemen amounting to about 250 in number were recently called out to attend an animated picture instruction held at the Orpheum Theater in San Francisco, Cal. The film which was shown was that of the Equitable fire in New York City and was run twice with explanations to give the men an opportunity for a thorough study of fire-fighting. It proved an exceedingly interesting and instructive picture to the firemen in particular and was enthusiastically received. Among the interested spectators was Chief Ely, who is considered here as a daring fire hero. One man from each firehouse was assigned at a time to observe this film, this keeping up until every fireman in San Francisco reviewed it.

WEST VIRGINIA EXHIBITORS TO MEET.

The motion picture exhibitors of West Virginia will meet in Parkersburg, W. Va., Wednesday, Feb. 28th. Arrangements for hall, music and entertainment have already been made. The committee on arrangements is P. W. Barrett, Star Theater; F. L. Harris, Bijou Theater. Headquarters have been established at the Blennerhasset Hotel. The Board of Trade will co-operate with the committee of arrangements. West Virginia exhibitor is not only invited but urged to attend this, the first, State convention. A permanent organization will be effected; a president, first vice-president, second vice-president, secretary and treasurer will be elected. A State censor, legislative committee and insurance committee will also be elected. Every exhibitor is requested to communicate with either the committee at Parkersburg, or M. A. Neff, president Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America, 1003 Mercantile Library Building, Cincinnati, O.

PERSONAL.

Mr. W. S. Simeral, treasurer of the Simeral Amusement Co., of Clarksburg, W. Va., and owner of several large theaters in the South, stopped over in New York to visit his son, H. C. Simeral, sales manager of Champ films. Mr. Simeral left New York last night for Ohio with a goodly batch of Champ forthcoming releases under his right arm for the benefit of exchanges and exhibitors of the Buckeye State. Among these reels of film is the initial release of "Sherlocko and Watso" in a picture entitled "The Robbery at the Railroad Station."

THE SOLAX "MAGNET."

If there is anything in the drawing power of a house organ, the Solax Company has hit upon the right title for its new publication. It is called "The Magnet," and the first issue made its appearance under date of Feb. 10. On the front cover is the design of a magnet enclosing a fine half-tone engraving of Madame Blaché, president of the Solax Company. It is neatly printed and beautifully illustrated with engravings of scenes from Solax pictures. Ought to pull business.

NEWMAN CO'S. NEW CINCINNATI SHOWROOM.

The Newman Mfg. Co., 717-719-721 Sycamore Street, Cincinnati, O., who manufacture a large and complete line of brass theater fixtures such as brass easels, brass frames for photos or posters, brass railings, etc., have taken over the large storeroom adjoining their large factory, formerly occupied by the John R. Evans Leather Co., and are converting same into an excellent showroom, where all of the brass fixtures which they manufacture will be on display. They extend a cordial invitation to all exhibitors and theater managers to visit their factory and showroom, and Mr. Sam Newman or any one of his four sons will take great pleasure in showing them around.

COBB-EGAN.

Announcement of the marriage of Mr. C. Lang Cobb, Jr., and Miss Agnes Egan is made. The auspicious event happened February 5. Congratulations of the Moving Picture World are extended to Mr. and Mrs. Cobb with wishes for abundant happiness.

TIRED OF WESTERN PICTURES.

Cosy Theater, Tyndall, S. D., January 3, 19

Editor Moving Picture World:

Dear Sir.—I note with interest letters recently published in The Moving Picture World, protesting against the so-called Western subjects, and wish to call attention to one point. If some manufacturers must release these Cowboy-Indian-slaughter bar-room pictures, why not arrange with exchanges so such subjects go to eastern exhibitors only. Many exhibitors have no voice in the selection of programmes. We must run what is sent or be short a reel. We are on the firing line, and reap the result of the unfavorable impression made by the miscellantous assortment of deaths, robbery, murder, etc. We western people have been long-suffering and patient. We have witnessed the death struggles of Tom, Dick and Wild Cat-Bill from gun, knife or rope, and have agonized with various easterners disguised as Indians in their frantic efforts to mount a horse, and even the irrepressible small boy has had his fill of bar-room death scenes.

Do—we beg of you—take it up with the exchanges, send these tiresome western pictures to eastern exhibitors only—if some one must run them—send them east.

We prairie people have the average amount of intellect that is permitted each human being and can understand many things beside a [illegible] shooting and slaughter-them-all picture. We must look to The Moving Picture World to aid us, as you can talk to the exchanges for us. Our experience has been that the people want the best. We never fail to draw big crowds when we announce a leading subject—and then they know they will not be fooled with this "western stuff." I am not trying to break into print, or anything of that sort—my letter is merely to ask you to take up this matter with the manufacturers who turn out such rot.

Yours truly, E. M. LOW.

CHAMPION AVIATION PICTURES.

There have been a number of pictures placed on the mar-k featuring aviation and aviators, but the most novel of ts class has been produced at great expense on the part of t Champion Film Company and at a great risk of life by t aviator and cameraman. It is titled "Robert G. Fowler's Tns-Continental Flight."

he film opens up in Frisco, where the aviator, Robert G. Fwler, is about to start off. Here is a bit or heart interest aused, for we see him bid good-bye to his dear mother, wo is clasped in his arms, before the great throngs of wildly cering people. At last he is off on his trip of daring. Then th scene changes to his flight over Beaumont, Texas, and inthe picture herewith we see Robert G. Fowler, accompaied by the Champion cameraman, about to soar aloft over Bumont with their photographic apparatus in readiness tofilm the country over which they fly. And as one looks upn the picture, screened, we see the country as from the sae point of observation as the aviator—a bird's-eye view othe country traversed, decidedly the greatest novelty that ha been presented in a scenic subject since the making of pitures began. The Champion folks are to be congratulated fo their enterprise in securing this feature for pictures.

"THE LIE" (Imp).

In "The Lie" the Imp drama for Thursday, Feb. 22, a young Northern officer is confronted by a grave problem. Unknowingly he and his men have been on the track of a Southern fugitive, who is in reality none other than the brother of the Northern officer's fiancée.

The young man is discovered hidden in the bedroom of his own home, seriously wounded, and he is discovered by the Northern officer. Here is the dramatic moment of this singularly fine play of military life. Shall love triumph or shall duty? Love triumphs. The officer tells his men the lie, that the man whom they were in search of is not in the house. Casuists might exonerate him from the charge of falsehood. It is clear that he did not expect to find the brother of his fiancée there. Be that as it may, the incident forms the central point of a very powerful Imp dramatic offering, which is appropriate enough to be released on a day associated with a military hero—George Washington.

"YOU REMEMBER ELLEN" (Kalem).

We were treated this week to a treat by a well-known treater, namely, the Kalem Company, in being allowed a glimpse of an exquisite adaptation from Thomas Moore's pretty poem, "You Remember Ellen." The picture was done by the O'Kalems in the southwestern part of Ireland, which will make it doubly dear to picture patrons who are natives of Erin's Isle. The sub-titles are all quotations from the poem, and the principal charm of the picture is its humble simplicity. The poem of Ellen is something in the nature of a fairy tale, wherein the stranger who captivates her heart turns out to be the Lord of the Manor. The story is told amid genuine and charming bits of Irish scenery.

According to the poem, the handsome young lord is journeying on foot through his domains in the guise of a peasant. At the roadside he comes upon Ellen with a heavy basket of berries. He gallantly insists upon carrying the maiden's burden to the modest cottage of her aged parents. There he arrives and is made welcome in a humble way. There also he finds employment in the hay fields, where he manages to court the fair Ellen, who is a rustic beauty loved by all. In time the pair are married in the peasant way, and in the picture we are allowed a glimpse of this quaint Irish wedding. We later see the stranger and Ellen in a lowly cottage, living the life of peasants, working in the fields and happy in each other's presence. There comes a day when Ellen's young husband decides that other lands afford a better chance of livelihood than the poor district in which they live; therefore, they say good-bye to the old folks and the old home. Ellen bids a tearful adieu to the many things and places she has known since childhood, but never knew how dear they were to her until now. So together these two fond hearts wander forth and journey on foot along the roads, making their bed where night overtakes them, and living upon wild grapes as they go. At the close of one stormy day they come to "a proud castle among the trees."

Scene from "You Remember Ellen" (Kalem), showing the Gap of Dunloe in the distance.

> To-night, said the youth, we'll shelter there;
> The wind blows cold, the hour is late.
> So he blew the horn with a chieftain's air,
> And the porter bow'd as they pass'd the gate.
> Now, welcome Lady; exclaimed the youth;
> This castle is thine, and these dark woods all.
> She believed him craz'd, but his words were true,
> For Ellen is Lady of Rosna Hall!
> And dearly the Lord of Rosna Hall loves
> What William the stranger woo'd and wed;
> And the light of bliss, in the lordly groves,
> Shines pure as it did in the lowly shed.

The poetic charm of the picture is well sustained and as a whole it may well be termed a picture poem. It is bound to be welcome wherever seen and will find response in the heart of every beholder. The work of Miss Gauntier Ellen is tender and true and that of Mr. John Clark as t stranger is sincere and winning. There are only four pri cipals in the picture, which accounts for much of the si plicity and ready understanding of the picture, which is, was said in the beginning, a treat.

One of the scenes is particularly worth mentioning; th being a part in the journey of William and Ellen where th are seen walking in a driving rainstorm. It is real, real ra and not scratches. We see the rain splashing violently the puddles and dancing on the top of the wayside wall. is a feature picture in one reel, and no mistake about t feature.

THANHOUSER'S NIAGARA COMPANY AGAIN HEARD FROM.

While the "Southern Stock" is hard at work in bal Florida and the New Rochelle company busy with "Nichol Nickleby," the Thanhouser Niagara Falls company rele "A Message from Niagara" on Friday, Feb. 23rd, making the star Thanhouser effort of the week. This is the cont gent that was sent to the Falls with plots that called plenty of exterior scenes, to play them with the "Worl Greatest Cataract" as a "back drop."

Scene from "A Message From Niagara" (Thanhouser)

The message with which the present story deals was pla in a bottle and the bottle was whirled through the Ameri Falls, Prospect Point and Whirlpool Rapids until finally t reached the hands of him for whom it was intended. A he, through the message, rescued the sender of it, who, you will guess, was a girl. The story is an all-action one, good photography abounds.

GREAT NORTHERN FEATURES BOOMING.

Demand for the big special features of the Great North Special Feature Film Company is growing rapidly. Des the efforts of the Mormons to suppress that sensational s ject, "The Victim of the Mormons," the hold-up was i fectual and the rights for that picture have been rapidly posed of. The company is greatly pleased with the re of its first distribution and now announces the second rele another sensational feature entitled "A Nihilist Conspira" in two parts. This picture has been noticed in these colu in a previous issue. The big scene is a wild automo chase ending in a fatal plunge over a precipice. This ture is certain to draw.

Manager Charles Abrams announces that R. H. Ma formerly general manager of the Consolidated Film change, of Atlanta, Ga., has resigned his position with company and will organize his own company—the G Southern Feature Film Co.—to handle all the subjects tributed by the Great Northern Special Feature Film Mr. Mason begins with three reels of "A Victim of the M mons" for the states of North Carolina, South Caro Georgia, Tennessee and Florida. For all future subjects State of Alabama will be included in his territory. Mason's headquarters will be in Atlanta.

MONTGOMERY COMES TO TOWN.

Montgomery, the promoter of high-class pic theaters, was in New York for a few hours last week. looked over the film situation and visited the firm of & Co. to place his order for some of that firm's specia Mr. Montgomery is pleased with the volume of busines several houses are doing, and reports early additions to number.

THAT MILDRED HOLLAND PICTURE.

Moving picture patrons are to have the opportunity, hrough the enterprise of the Powers Motion Picture Comany, of seeing the well known emotional actress, Mildred Holland, in her big success of the legitimate stage, "The Power Behind the Throne." Owing to the length of this popular play the picture will be presented in two reels, a omplete entertainment in itself—a two dollar show at moving picture theater prices. Miss Holland is supported by members of her original company, assisted by the regular Powers photoplayers. The original costumes, scenery and other accessories have been used in this production and will help to make it one of the most notable feature films ver shown.

OHNS-MANVILLE COMPANY HAS NEW PITTSBURGH HOME.

The rapidly increasing demand in Pittsburgh and vicinity for the asbestos, magnesia and other products of the H. W. ohns-Manville Company, has necessitated a move from their present location in Liberty Avenue, above Ninth Street, to arger quarters. After January 24, 1912, the Pittsburgh branch will occupy the entire eight-story building at the northeast corner of Wood Street and First Avenue, which has been leased by them for a term of years. This building, 1 x 96 feet in size, totals in gross floor space approximately 3,808 square feet, and is one of the most substantial strucures in the downtown section of Pittsburgh.

NEW FIRM OF PICTURE MAKERS.

The Art Film Company is the name of a newly incorpoated motion picture concern which will have offices at 145 W. 45th Street, New York City. The active members are Messrs. Galley and Milne, both formerly engaged in a cenario brokerage business. Mr. Galley is the artistic member of the firm and has met with some success in the past s an author of photoplays. With his experience in this line, ombined with his ability as an artist, the Art Film Co. expects to turn out some pictures that will discount the average un of moving pictures and blaze a trail of their own. Mr. Wm. C. Thompson will be in charge of the photographic nd laboratory work, and Mr. Earl Tompkins will act in the apacity of chief electrician. Their product will be released hrough the General Film Publicity and Sales Co.

MACKIE HAS MOVED.

The motion picture supply business that has been conucted for a year at 853 Broadway has moved to a ground floor store at 21 East 14th Street, between Broadway and Fifth Avenue. "Everything for the moving picture theater but the film" is the watchword of this hustling concern and he growth of the business proves that such an emporium was needed in the metropolis. We understand that branch ffices will be opened in other large cities. Buying in large uantities they can, of course, obtain and quote the best prices. This, together with prompt and courteous service, peaks for the continued growth of the business in its new uarters.

Reasons

SARAH BERNHARDT IN CAMILLE IS THE GREATEST MONEY-MAKING PROPOSITION IN THE HISTORY OF MOTION PICTURES. Her great name is famous in every part of the world. Her art is unsurpassed. Superior to any actress on the dramatic stage. She has chosen one of her greatest successes, Dumas' "Camille," which shows every fibre of talent in this wonderful woman.

Why

WOULD YOU MISS AN OPPORTUNITY LIKE THIS, A CHANCE WHERE YOU HAVE EVERY ADVANTAGE TO GET IN ON A SURE BOX-OFFICE WINNER?

Instead of a train-load of people to carry and tons of scenery in presenting the world's greatest emotional actress before the public, you require only a machine and a picture screen, in giving a production of merit of the highest class. An entertainment for all classes. You come again and again.

BIG FEATURES

Great Northern Special Feature Film Company

1 UNION SQUARE, NEW YORK CITY

Correspondence

INDIANAPOLIS.

Contracts have been awarded by the Orpheum Amusement Company, of which Fred C. Dickson and Henry M. Talbott are the principals, for the erection of a new motion picture theater at 42-44 West Washington Street. It will be built on the site of the present Casino Theater and that of an adjoining building. The theater will be 30 x 120 feet and 36 feet high. The foyer will be 14 x 14 feet. Side walls and stairway cases in the lobby will be finished in American Pavanzzo and second statuary marble. Rockwood tiling will be used in the floor and heavy mirrors will form the ceiling. On each side of the main entrance will be ornamental copper lampposts, 17 feet high. The main floor will seat 592 persons and the balcony 90. There will be a glass curtain 11 x 12 feet, with boxes at either side for the singers. There will also be a large pipe organ. There will be three separate booths on the second floor, one to be used as a direct operating booth, the second as a rewind booth and the third for an echo organ. The building will be fireproof and will cost $25,000.

William M. Taylor, judge of the local juvenile court, has given orders that no child under the age of sixteen shall be permitted to participate in any performance in moving picture or other theaters. He said where children are permitted to do so, the parents will be tried in the court for neglect of children. Many motion picture houses give prize vaudeville performances for amateurs and children have been taking part in them.

The Motographic Publicity Service has been organized and incorporated at South Bend for the purpose of making motion picture films for advertising purposes. The company has an authorized capitalization of $15,000, the directors and principal stockholders being C. J. Allardt, S. D. Moran and Dala Rowe.

T. C. Young, G. E. Underhill, F. E. Johnston, G. E. McDonnell and H. L. Somers have organized the Wayne Amusement Company, at Fort Wayne, for the purpose of conducting motion picture theaters. The company has been incorporated and has an authorized capitalization of $7,500.

During the convention of the Indiana Retail Hardware Association in this city during the week of January 29, one of the special features was a motion picture entertainment by the Du Pont Powder Company, showing the uses to which dynamite may be put.

The warden of the Indiana Reformatory, at Jeffersonville, has secured a motion picture machine, which he is using for the entertainment of the inmates.

PHILADELPHIA.

The death of Theodore J. Harbach removed from the moving picture world one of its pioneers as well as one of its most ardent promoters. As the largest dealer in magic lanterns and all manner of stereoptical devices Mr. Harbach, very naturally, drifted into the moving picture trade, as all such novelties were first offered to him by the great great army of novelty inventors who always found him a keen adviser and liberal backer. He sold his wares all over the world and was one of the first merchants in the world to develop a mail order trade on the theory that it paid best to give the distant buyer all the better of the transaction. The Harbach novelty advertisements have appeared in novelty papers since the memory of man runneth not. Miss Anna Harbach, a niece, assumed charge of the large business at No. 809 Filbert Street as soon as Mr. Harbach fell ill and will continue it under the name that has been famous for more than forty years.

The Mirror Amusement Company, of Philadelphia, has been granted a charter by the Governor of Pennsylvania. The invested capital is stated in the application as $5,000.

The clock in one of the large film exchanges is always kept twenty-five minutes fast. The manager claims that it is the best bore-chaser yet devised. It accomplishes results without giving direct offense.

It will be recalled that it was the Market Street Business Men's Association that forced the suits which resulted in all the moving picture houses on that thoroughfare cutting out gramophone and outside posters. This association now proposes to dine Mayor Blankenburg on February 20 at the New Bingham House and the moving picture men rather think it might be a good stunt to attend in honor of the Mayor. No bitter feeling prevails over the abolition of the outside music.

Notice has been issued by the State Factory Inspector that any person who employs a woman at labor of any kind in Pennsylvania for longer than 10 hours in any one day or 60 hours in any one week will be sent to jail. The law has been tested and it will now be most rigidly enforced. Ticket sellers in some moving picture houses up the State work twelve hours. They come under the protection of this law.

The West Philadelphia Bank has been established in the Nixon Theater Building, occupying space once suggested for a moving picture house for the five-cent trade overflowing the main theater.

A New Jersey charter has been granted to the Harris Theater Company, of Washington, D. C., with legal offices at No. 419 Market Street, Camden, N. J. The capital is named as $25,000 in the application.

Messrs. Karrer & Short have taken over the new Lafayette Theater, No. 2416 Atlantic Avenue, Atlantic City, N. J. Mr. A. S. Siracousa was formerly manager of the house. The name will be changed to the Central Theater.

Messrs. Havenson & Gilensky have opened a new moving picture house at Trenton, N. J., called the Broad Street Theater.

The Union Amusement Company, No. 2711 Germantown Avenue, has bought the property at Lehigh and Germantown Avenues, on which stands the Lehigh Palace, for $55,000. Mr. William J. Smith, proprietor of the Palace, offered $50,000. It is rumored that the Union Amusement Company contemplates building a large vaudeville and moving picture house in line with the Nixon Theater. It is at the intersection of two principal streets and would be an excellent corner for a theater of that type.

The Grand Theater, No. 5206 Market Street, has changed hands. it has been taken over by the Grand Amusement Company, of Philadelphia, Mr. James S. Alcorn, treasurer.

The many friends of Mr. Lewis Bache will be glad to know that he is back with the General Film Company. Mr. Bache is well known in this city and enjoys a wide circle of friends and acquaintances.

Messrs. Brown & Savage of the Elite Amusement Company, have opened up a vaudeville and moving picture theater at Perth Amboy, N. J.

Manager Samuel F. Barke, of the Casino, No. 4435 Frankford Avenue, reports business as excellent and has bought several machines for his house.

The Novelty Amusement Company intend moving in the near future from their present address at No. 11 North Tenth Street, and will be located in the neighborhood of Thirteenth and Vine Streets.

CLEMENT H. CONGDON.

ST. LOUIS.

The film exchanges of this city were up in arms over a bill as the following excerpt from a general letter sent out early in the week attests:

"The purpose of the bill is to add to the present powers of the Public Recreation Commission which at present has the direction and care of all public playgrounds, public baths and public recreation buildings. The added powers which are contained in House Bill No. 24 include the right to investigate all matters connected with public recreation and amusements, whether provided by public organizations or private persons. The duty to report to the city attorneys, or police, violations of the laws and ordinances relating to public amusements."

The ordinance also gives to the Public Recreation Commission power to investigate. To make these investigations the commission nas power to appoint sub-committee of persons not members of the commission and such clerks and investigators as the commission may deem necessary. It is commonly understood that the bill is a step in the direction of classing picture shows and neighborhood theaters with undesirable and improper dance halls, wine rooms, and other places where the young fall into evil habits.

The bill does a great injustice to the picture shows. If there is to be any supervision of censorship or regulation of picture shows it should be provided for in a bill which applies solely to the picture shows. We have a special ordinance regulating the construction of our moving picture theater buildings. If we are to have regulation of the manner of conducting our theaters (which we do not deem necessary), we should have it by means of an ordinance applying to ourselves alone and not through an ordinance which classes us with "dance halls and other places."

With a censorship in New York by people of good moral standing and again censored by parents in the different neighborhoods, local picture men are a unit in declaring that pictures shown here are not only innocent means of enjoyment, but instructive as well. Some of the local showmen believe that behind House Bill No. 24, which has been put forward by well-intentioned people, lies a well defined opposition of other lines of business which have suffered from the popularity of the moving picture theaters.

A good deal of enjoyment was had at the hearing by those present when some of the leading women of the commission quizzed as to local conditions betrayed a woful lack of knowledge governing what was termed "depressing moral conditions" when they admitted on the stand that most of their knowledge was gained from "mere hearsay." It is conceded on all sides that the Public Recrea Commission is an influence for the good of community, but that, in as far as the moving tures are concerned, the commission exceeds scope of its power.

The Waldorf, 2251 Market Street; The Mack 5415 Arsenal Street; The People's Palace, 18 Market Street; The Shoppers' Rest, 610 Lo Street, and The Salisbury, 1107 Salisbury Str have closed their doors.

The Kings, the sixteenth theater in the O. Crawford circuit, was opened Thursday ni January 25th, with four reels of pictures and t vaudeville acts. The theater cost $100,000 build and has a seating capacity of 2,100. T are sixteen boxes and the seating capacity of balcony is 800. Fourteen kinds of marble used in finishing the lobby. White cement in front of the house, while gold pervades the terior decorations. On each side of the house rows of glass doors which can be utilized in summer months in cooling the house. These doors also afford escape from fire. According present plans the O. T. Crawford people are f ing on having enough houses built or under co to afford actors solid time of 18 weeks on t circuit.

THE MOTION PICTURE DISTRIBUTING AND SALES COMPANY WINS IMPORTANT LEGAL DECISION!

JUDGE HAND, of the United States District Court, of the Southern District of New York, has just decided an important patent suit, brought by the Motion Picture Patents Company, against the Independent Moving Pictures Company of America, for alleged infringement of Latham Patent No. 707934. The Latham Patent No. 707934 claimed the continuous feed by means of sprocket and perforated film, also the loop or slack portion of film which supplies the intermittent feed. Judge Hand decided in favor of the Independent Moving Pictures Company by dismissing the Bill of Complaint on the ground of non-infringement, with costs.

Reading, Pa.—Carr & Schad, proprietors of the Victor Moving Picture House, 748 Penn Street, purchased the property they occupy from the owners.

De Witt, Ia.—Messrs. Ritter & Helmal, of Davenport, will open a moving picture theater in the Wiess Building.

Racine, Wis.—John Wagner has announced that he will erect a new vaudeville house on 6th Street in the spring.

Olathe, Kan.—C. H. Hyer, F. R. Ogg and several other business men have formed a company capitalized at $15,000 and will build a new opera house.

Chicago, Ill.—J. Kohlmann will erect a new theater at, 5419 S. Ashland Avenue, at a cost of $6,000.

Rich Hill, Mo.—H. S. Spraker, president and manager of the Spraker Amusement Co., is contemplating the construction of an elaborate and commodious photoplay theater here. It is estimated that when this beautiful piece of architecture is thoroughly completed it will cost about $5,000. Mr. Spraker being an experienced showman, and having several years' experience in the exhibiting end of the motion picture game, will undoubtedly make this new venture a financial success.

Denver, Col.—Before the middle of next summer arrives two new fascinating photoplay houses will be established in Denver, Col., each of which will possess a seating capacity greater than any theater in the city, with the exception of the Auditorium. The first to be completed will be that erected by the Paris Amusement Company, on Center Street, between Seventeenth and Eighteenth Streets, directly opposite the Iris Theater. The other will be located in the same block on the opposite side of Curtis Street, occupying three lots. It will be constructed by S. L. Baxter, proprietor of the Iris Theater, and will have a seating capacity of 2,200. Work on the construction of it will begin in the latter part of February or early in March.

Barnesville, Minn.—E. S. Christianson will open a moving picture theater here.

Fargo, S. D.—The Savoy Theater will be reopened at an early date.

Crandon, Wis.—Glen Ferguson, Winfred Grisold and Guy Ferguson will erect a moving picture theater in the near future.

Independence, Ia.—M. L. Weber & Son will open a moving picture theater in Waverly.

Indianola, Ia.—The Majestic Amusement Co. has purchased the Crystal Theater in this city, formerly operated by Roscoe West.

Chicago, Ill.—C. H. Zuttermeister will erect a one-story theater at 1415 Fullerton Avenue, at a cost of $10,000.

Pomona, Cal.—Architect Myron Hunt has completed plans for the open air Greek Theater, to be erected by Pomona College.

Colorado Springs, Col.—Negotiations are being made for the construction of a $100,000 motion picture theater here, which will compare exactly after the plan of the beautiful Princess Theater. This showhouse will possess an attractive front, being gorgeously illuminated with different colored lights. The interior will also be handsomely decorated with frescoing and painting by distinguished artists and will have a seating capacity of 1,258. Its proprietor, Mr. C. S. Gambrill, has picked out an excellent location, being on the corner between Tyon and Nevada Avenues, directly opposite the newly constructed post-office.

Sioux City, Ia.—Plans have been drawn for the remodeling of the one-story building at 412-414 Nebraska Street, for the purpose of converting it into a moving picture theater. Mr. M. Fox will be manager. The new house will be known as the Iris. The front will be finished in Egyptian style and the remodeling will be done by the Lyric Construction Co. The theater approximately will measure 75 x 50 feet and will have five aisles and six exits. It is expected to open its doors during the month of February.

Bellows Falls, Vt.—Encouraged by the phenomenal success of his Dreamland Theater, the only fireproof cement photoplay theater here, Mr. T. F. Kinery, an enterprising billposter and showman, is again contemplating the remodeliig and enlarging of it. Twice during the spring season Mr. Kinery made extensive improvements, but his business increased so rapidly that more seating room was required. The latest addition to be added will be a new balcony, which will seat 325 people, making a total seating capacity of 725. The patrons receive a most excellent program, consisting of three high class vaudeville acts and five first run pictures.

Tarpon Springs, Fla.—Silica Mining & Manufacturing Co. will erect a new theater on Tarpo[illegible] Avenue.

Marshalltown, Ia.—Thompson Bros. & Case have sold the Gem Theater to Hulbert, Benson & Hulbert.

ECLIPSE.

THE KING'S COMMAND (Feb. 21).—Prince Frederick falls in love with a pretty village maid named Dorothy Schneider. In order to be near the object of his affections, he disguises himself as a townsman, and persuades old Schneider to take him in as a boarder.

Soon afterward, King William wishes his son to marry a princess, and when Frederick refuses, he is very angry.

Learning of the love affair, the king orders that Schneider and his daughter be brought before him. After reprimanding them severely, he orders that they leave the country, never to return.

Although Frederick tries to interfere in their behalf, his pleading is without avail. The king's command must be obeyed.

CINES.

LEAH'S TRICK (Feb. 20).—Aunt Martha desires to bring about the marriage of Leah and her cousin, Tom, who have never seen each other.

The kind old aunt writes to Tom commanding him to visit Leah, and at the same time prepares her niece for the visit.

Leah determines to test Tom, and dresses up a fat, elderly servant to represent herself when Tom arrives, while she poses as the servant.

Tom, to please his aunt, becomes engaged to the stout lady, and together they visit aunt Martha to receive her blessing.

There the trick is discovered, and the story ends with the reconciliation of the cousins and every prospect of a speedy marriage.

THE VALLEY OF THE UMBRIA—ITALY (Feb. 20).—We are shown the ruins of the August Bridge and the new bridge on the Nera River. The Muto River. A modern high road and that of one hundred years ago. The ancient city of Nursia. The Townhall and the port of Vignola. Art treasures, the reliquary of St. Benedict and fire-irons of the 12th century.

DAUGHTER OF THE REGIMENT (Feb. 24).—Mary, the daughter of the regiment, is a foundling picked up outside of the camp of a French regiment, and adopted by them.

Sixteen years later Mary has grown to womanhood and is the general favorite of the camp. She is as devoted to each one of the grizzled warriors as they are to her, but one in particular, Tonio, she loves.

Everything goes well until one day a great lady, the Countess of Hohenstein, appears, and claiming Mary as her long lost daughter, takes her to the castle.

Mary does not prove a success in her new surroundings, however. Although everything possible is done for her education and refinement, she shows that her heart is still yearning for the beloved regiment.

One day she hears that Tonio and the regiment are in the neighborhood, and she immediately seeks them out. The countess follows her, but concluding that Mary's happiness is centered in the regiment, she finally gives her consent to her marriage with Tonio, to the great joy of all the soldiers.

LUBIN.

'TIS AN ILL WIND THAT BLOWS NO GOOD (Feb. 12).—Roger Pierce decides to go away for a change of scene. Arriving in a small town he purchases workman's clothes, and takes lodgings in a modest boarding house. He secures a job in the Frederick Paper Mill, where Grace Howard's father is gate watchman. One day at noon the old watchman is attacked by an intoxicated man. Roger comes to his rescue and drives the man away. At this moment, Grace Howard comes up with her father's dinner. She is introduced to Roger. After a time Roger marries Grace. Roger decides to surprise his young wife, so takes her back to his own home in the city, where she is treated very coldly by Roger's mother. Later, she leaves his home. She leaves a note to Roger, explaining her act, and taking a photograph of Roger and a small bundle of clothes, she leaves and takes lodgings in a tenement house, which, unknown to her, is owned by Roger's father. By the death of his father, Roger inherits the tenement block. A few nights later, Grace, who now has a little girl between three and four years old, can be seen in a little room, putting her child to bed. Sorrow has made deep furrows in her once handsome face. Then she, too, retires. A fire starts downstairs, caused by a carelessly thrown match. Roger is notified at his club, and arrives in time to rescue Grace, whom he recognizes. He takes her home to his mother, where all are reconciled.

HIS MISTAKE (Feb. 14).—Mary is the daughter of a well-to-do boarding-house keeper. Jim is a young man in fairly good circumstances. Lillian DeVere is a star playing a one-night stand town in which Mary's mother keeps the boarding-house. The parents are old friends of Lillian's and Mabel and John are her former pals and acquaintances.

Jim and Mary are betrothed, he puts a ring on her finger. Lillian arrives at the boarding-house and asks for board, meets Jim, sees that there is no room at the table. Jim offers her his seat. Lillian being intensely interesting and fascinating, interests Jim, much to Mary's disgust. In the course of time Jim marries Lillian DeVere. Mary, alone in her bedroom, broken-hearted looks out of her window and watches the marriage ceremony between Jim and Lillian in the house next door, which he has rented as his future home. In the course of five years Lillian becomes tired of her domestic duties; a little child of four years annoys her so much she longs for the bright lights and the gaiety of her former companions. She dresses herself and meets her old sweetheart and friends for a dinner party, after which they go for an automobile ride to a country club. The chauffeur losing control of the auto, it overturns and Lillian is killed. In the meantime Mary, hearing Jim's child crying in the house next door, enters and finds that it is hungry, gets food and milk and feeds it. After Lillian's death Jim is trying to keep house for himself, but Mary steps in daily and attends to the housework and takes care of the child. Jim seeing this, realizes what he has missed in all these years and taking Mary in his arms all ends happily.

A NOTE IN THE ORANGE (Feb. 15).—Fay and Kitty Forrest live with a well-to-do aunt in Florida. Auntie has never been married. The girls write a note which reads: "If this note falls into the hands of a respectable gentleman it will be to his interest to call upon the writer—object matrimony. Miss Kate Jordan, Empire Point, Florida." The note is placed inside of a chicken quill. They then run to the orange grove, where the packers are filling the boxes to be shipped North. An orange is selected, the quill inserted and placed back in one of the boxes. Away up North, Bob Nugent, a young bank clerk, buys an orange from the Italian stall, presently his tooth strikes a hard substance. It is the quill. Bob examines it and finds the note, rushes to the bank, tells his assistant that he must go South for a week for his health. He hastily packs a grip and takes a train for Empire Point. There he meets the girls and explains his errand, and they immediately take him to auntie, but her sour face frightens him. Miss Jordan, however, is not going to capitulate without a struggle. She enlists the help of the nieces and dresses in her best; she then tries to captivate the bank clerk, who, being closely pressed, runs away. Auntie and the girls follow, they catch him and, when nicely dressed up, auntie does not look all to the bad. Moreover, she looks like ready money, so Bob accepts his fate.

OVER-SEA CELEBRATION (Feb. 15).—This is a very interesting educational picture of the opening ceremonies of the over-sea railroad extending from Knight's Key across the Everglades to Key West. The work took over four years of labor. The picture shows the work of construction, the first train passing over the 46-mile trestle, the arrival at Key West, Henry H. Flagler, the promoter of the great work, the government, state and municipal officials and other scenes of the opening ceremony.

GINGERBREAD CUPID (Feb. 17).—Ed. Yale and Arthur Bishop are partners in business and rivals for the hand of Mabel Taylor. Her real affection is for Arthur. Kate, her sister, is affectionate towards Ed., but he devotes all of his time to wooing Mabel. Ed. and Arthur are helping the two girls bake gingerbread. Arthur forsakes his culinary attempts long enough to tender Mabel his ring as a remembrance. It slips off her finger a moment later and becomes mixed with the gingerbread dough. It becomes embedded in a gingerbread man which Mabel bakes and gives to Arthur. He discovers it in the cake and keeps the cake and ring as a remembrance, telling Mabel nothing about it. Rivalry increases between Ed. and Arthur to such an extent that Mabel, on the eve of her birthday, tells them that the one who brings her the best present can be considered the successful suitor. Ed, buys an expensive chain and locket, places it in an envelope and guardedly puts it in his office desk. Arthur also buys a handsome present and hides it in his desk. Both at their respective desks eagerly await 12 o'clock on Miss Taylor's birthday. Just before noon, while Arthur is answering a telephone call, Ed. slips out of the office, locking the door and speeding away to Mabel's house with his own present, after carefully having hid Arthur's present. Arthur, frantic over the loss, decides to place his chances in the cherished gingerbread man. Securing this, he climbs over the transom of the office and speeds off to Mabel. Meanwhile, Kate has played a trick on Ed. by writing a note to Mabel ridiculing her and signing Ed.'s name, she places this on the table, and when Ed. rushes in a moment later he lays his envelope containing his present on the table close to Kate's letter. Kate unnoticed substitutes her envelope for Ed.'s. Mabel reads the note supposedly written by Ed. and pours bitter invective upon him, so that he is tenderly led out of the room by the secretly delighted Kate, hopelessly crushed. In the adjoining room, Kate opens Ed.'s envelope, pretends she thinks the locket and chain is intended for her and is so sincere about it that Ed. falls in love on the spot and in a crushing embrace forgets all about Mabel. Arthur rushes into the house in time to catch Mabel in the midst of her ill humor. Learning the outcome, he hands her the gingerbread man and watches the effect upon her. Miss Taylor gazes in scorn at the present, and unable to appreciate the humor in the presentation of such a gift, angrily crumbles it in her hand. The ring disengages itself from the gingerbread cake and slips over her engagement finger. Then Arthur explains circumstances to her. Ed. and Kate come in and she tells of her trick. Everything ends happily.

ESSANAY.

THE BITER BITTEN (Feb. 20).—A grouchy old Western landlord takes the Widow Jones' motorcycle belonging to her deceased husband, because she cannot pay rent. He puts a "For Sale" sign on the machine and waits to drive a good bargain. A brisk young man agrees to buy it, but wants to try it out first. He gets on with the old man on the back and they finally strand for lack of gasoline near the railroad. The young man disappears in search of gasoline, then the old fellow discovers a note left by the villain thanking him for the ride and that he is just in time to catch the train. Therefore, the old biter is badly bitten.

CURIOSITY (Feb. 20).—Just a snappy bunch of laughs starting with the appearance of a "suspicious looking man with a suspicious looking bag." He runs frantically through the streets pursued by a panting crowd who imagine him seven kinds of an anarchist. But when they reach the depot and find the "anarchist" raving over missing his train, and that the bag contains only wearing apparel, they all collapse in disgust.

THE LEMON (Feb. 22).—Percy Kelton, a young vaudeville artist and female impersonator, secures a note of introduction from his friend Allison, a theatrical booking agent, to Jackson, a noted manager who has a new show in preparation. Jackson is a grouch, tries Kelton out and sends him back to Allison with a note saying: "He's a lemon!" Later Jackson woos and wins his leading lady and writes Allison an invitation to attend a supper party at the Rex Café in honor of the event. This gives Allison a great idea, and he and young Kelton plan a novel revenge for the manager's past slight. Jackson and his fiancée and the other guests are making merry at the café that night when a beautiful young woman enters, confronts Jackson and dramatically declares, "He's my husband!" A marriage license further complicates matters and Jackson is on the verge of prostration when the "woman" pulls off the wig and reveals "herself" as Kelton in one of his female impersonations. Whereupon the baffled Jackson acknowledges the "lemon" to be a "peach" and signs him up for his new show.

THE PERFECTION CONCAVE SCREEN.

IN answer to inquiries regarding Materials and Construction of

"Perfection Concave Screens"

We give the following general information:

MATERIALS

The framework of all are made of the exact shape and size and of the correct concavity to receive the surface. The surface will be of a material suitable to the stage requirements.

If a stationary screen, a three-ply wood fibre, fireproof composition or a specially prepared plastic composition may be used.

If the screen is to be drawn into the flies, the wood fibre composition is advisable on account of its lightness of weight.

CONSTRUCTION

All screens are made in quarter-sections for convenience in shipping and handling, and are made in such manner that the four quarters join and match perfectly, giving the completed concave screen, as though moulded in one piece, with turn-buckles, or thumb-screws in all adjustable parts.

Full description showing where each numbered part belongs accompanies each shipment, so that the installation arrangement is absolutely "Fool Proof."

For complete information, prices, etc., send length of throw, size of picture and height of lens above stage floor.

National Jewelry Company. Later this necklace is stolen, only the thief's hands being shown. Detectives are called in and suspicion fastens on Young Sumner, the stenographer, who is arrested despite his pleas of innocence. The chief of police now makes an investigation of the rooms of two clerks employed in the office and puts detectives to watching them. Both clerks are tested by the detectives producing black jewel-boxes, identical to that the necklace came in, at psychological moments. Only Boardman betrays signs of possible guilt. He is taken to the chief, who cleverly works a subtle "third degree" by keeping Boardman seated for hours under his watchful eye without a word being spoken. Tortured to the verge of hysteria, Boardman finally gasps out a confession to the theft, the jewels are found beneath his office-chair and young Sumner is released.

A WESTERN KIMONO (Feb. 24).—Pretty Bessie King has all the cowboys' hearts thumping ragtime jigs against their ribs whenever she comes to town, and Alkali is the hardest hit of all. After a series of flirtations she finally takes Alkali for better or worse and they are married. A year later a small son and heir keeps Alkali doing Marathons across the midnight floors. A newspaper article now alarms the community concerning a new disease called "Kimonitis," that attacks women and babies. Consequently, when Alkali goes home one day and finds a note left by his wife saying she has gone to Pocatello "to have her kimono cut out," he rides wildly into town on a hand-car, meets wifie coming from a store and is horrified when she tells him she has her "kimono" in the box under her arm. On reaching home Alkali is both amazed and delighted to find the kimono is nothing but a calico affair the town seamstress has cut out for wifie and his wild ride has been in vain.

BIOGRAPH.

THE FATAL CHOCOLATE (Feb. 19).—Upon the arrival of a young girl from the city, Zeke and Jake, brothers, each determine to win her. For a time these rival brothers are amusing to her, but when her real sweetheart appears, she is at a loss to know how to get rid of them. Her city beau, however, wants to have some fun with them, so is introduced to the rubes as her brother. He pretends to be interested in the condition of affairs, and decides they must prove their love by chancing fate for her sake. He places three chocolates on the table, stating that one of the candies contains deadly poison. To the amazement of all they take a chance—but for naught.

GOT A MATCH? (Feb. 19).—Carrie's papa strenuously objects to Ben as a son-in-law, and so the young people decide to elope, Ben to give her the signal of two whistles when he arrives that night at the house. Just before his arrival, two bungling burglars attempt to burglarize the house, one remaining outside to watch. While on the watch, the would-be burglar whistles to his companion inside for a match to light his pipe. This indiscretion was their undoing, but it worked fortunately for the young lover, who got an opportunity to play hero.

UNDER BURNING SKIES (Feb. 22).—Joe would have been happily married to Emily if he could have kept his promise to give up drink. But seemingly it was impossible, and when drunk he became so reckless and dangerous that he had received the name of "The Bad Man of San Fernand." A young man from across the desert meets Emily, and before long she consents to marry him. Joe hears of this, and, his mind inflamed by liquor, he sends a message to the new sweetheart that he will shoot him on sight. Emily fearful that Joe might carry out his threat, marries the young man at once and they start across the desert for home and safety. Joe hearing of this, vengefully follows. On the desert the ripping of their water sack has left the young couple without a supply of water, and when Joe overtakes them they are on the verge of dying from thirst. Gloating over his chance for revenge, he refuses their appeals for water and leaves them to die. He cannot, however, forget little Emily's heartrending appeals, and, his better self awakening to a realization of what he has done, he returns.

VITAGRAPH.

THE STRUGGLE (Feb. 19).—Howard Peyton served two years for forgery. Jerry Grafton, a genteel crook, is on the look-out for him when Howard comes out of prison. He is met at the jail door by his young wife. Jerry also meets him and offers him help, but urged on by his wife, Howard refuses it. When they reach home, his wife, who has a little money, induces him to go to New York and start life anew, and send for her when he has a position.

In New York, he manages to obtain a position in the office of Arthur Jamieson, an importer. Howard sends for his wife to join him. While he is waiting, Grafton finds him and insists that he forge his employer's name, or he will expose his past offense. Naturally weak, Howard yields. His wife returns just as he is doing Grafton's bidding, tears up the forgery and defies Grafton, who leaves them with threats. Olive takes Howard with her, goes to Jamieson's house, and confesses all. Struck by the nobleness of the woman, Mr. Jamieson believes her and promises to help Howard. When Grafton comes with his story, Jamieson threatens to hand him over to the police. Freed from Grafton's tyranny, Olive and Howard are left happy.

THE LOVE OF JOHN RUSKIN (Feb. 20).—John Ruskin became acquainted with his wife through a loan which he made to her father, and his noted generosity no doubt appealed to her and it seems that she married him more out of gratitude than actual love. Be that as it may, the fact remains that when Millais met her, he and she fell desperately in love with each other.

Ruskin observed this. Ruskin loved his wife intensely, but he was not demonstrative. His heart was bowed down with a great sorrow, but he would not deny his wife that love which he could not enjoy himself. He willingly gave her freedom and released her from her marriage vows. He not only consented to the marriage with Millais, but acted as best man at their wedding. Congratulating them and bidding them a fond farewell, he remained a friend to them always, retiring to his home lonely and sad.

HER LAST SHOT (Feb. 21).—John Lewis, a young settler, with his wife and child, go to Minnesota and open up a farm. John goes out to fell trees. The Pillager band of Chippewas, in open hostility to the whites, discover John's absence, and attack his cabin. Mrs. Lewis holds them at bay with her rifle. John hears the shooting and tries to reach his cabin.

Mrs. Lewis finds she has but one shot left and decides she would rather use it in the sacrifice of her babe than have the child taken by the ferocious Indians. She tremblingly takes aim, fires, and then falls in a dead faint.

Her husband and the lumbermen soon make short work of the redskins. They burst into the cabin, revive Mrs. Lewis, who, in a dazed and vacant state of mind, tells them what she has done. Her husband is overcome when he realizes the sacrifice she has made. One of the lumbermen goes over to where the child is lying, and tenderly lifting it in his arms, finds it is uninjured.

CURE FOR POKERITIS (Feb. 23).—Mrs. Sharpe keeps her eye on Bunny. His friend Bigelow invites him to join him in a session with the cards and chips, and tells him that he will fix it up with Mrs. Sharpe. He sends Bunny a notice telling him he has been elected a member of the Sons of the Morning, who meet every Wednesday evening. Sharpe tells his wife that this is a distinction he did not expect and so impresses her with the honor that has been conferred upon him, that she consents to his going to the meetings.

Unfortunately, Bunny talks in his sleep, and his better-half overhears him "passing and drawing," and going "some better" in his dreams. She becomes suspicious, appeals to her cousin, Freddie Dewdrop, who promises to find out where her husband spends his evenings. Disguising himself by changing his trousers and turning up the front of his hat, he follows Bunny, and learns the truth. Freddy and Mrs. Sharpe work up a plot to scare Bunny. They divulge the scheme to all the wives. Freddy consults the members of the Mental Improvement Society, of which he is one, and they agree to disguise themselves as policemen and make a raid on the poker fiends. Before doing so, however, he invites the wives to meet at the point of attack at a certain hour, without telling them just what is going to happen. Freddie, as the Captain, leads his officers and sweeps down upon the poker players, catching them red-handed and placing them under arrest. At this moment the wives enter the room and there is no escape for their husbands, and in fear of disgrace, they agree to give up poker and spend their evenings at home. With uplifted hands they swear it and they are forgiven by their wives and freed from arrest, at the command of the gallant Captain, Freddie Dewdrop.

This final blow awakens Mary to a correct realization and estimate of her talent, and she decides to return home, where she is welcomed by her mother and Ralph.

MELIES.

OIL (Feb. 29).—On his way to town, Morton meets capitalists who are looking for surface indications of oil on the property thereabout. At the village store he hears that the strangers are buying up all oil-bearing land. A great idea comes to Morton. He will "salt" his land. He purchases a molasses jug, and, carefully evading the boys, has it filled with kerosene, and steals home. Morton sprinkles each rock and bush on his property with the liquid.

Next day the prospectors discover what they believe are signs of oil on Morton's property and come to bargain with him. He rejects their offer of $5,000, demanding $10,000, which he gets. Then he is "some sport."

Scene from "OIL"—(Melies).

Meanwhile the strangers have set up a plant, and John, manager of the new company, falls in love with Morton's daughter, Molly. She reciprocates the affection and gives her promise.

Morton visits the local café and "sets 'em up" for the boys, displaying a roll of yellow backs that arouses the envy of all, especially, when after a bit too much to drink, he gleefully boasts how he fooled the Easterners. But the words are barely out of his mouth, when a note arrives from John, reading: "Dear Father-in-law-to-be—We have struck oil—200 barrels per day. The land you sold for $10,000 is worth half a million!"

EDISON.

AT THE POINT OF THE SWORD (Feb. 16).—Editha is in love with a young count who is greatly despised by her father. In order that they may continue their courtship, the lovers secretly meet each fortnight in an old inn, where one night a company of soldiers come who have just captured a famous outlaw, Francois de Villary. He is bound and thrown on the floor. Editha's sympathies are aroused by the cruel treatment of the outlaw, and she succeeds in permitting him to escape without being suspected herself, and consequently wins de Villary's undying gratitude.

Editha discovers that she will be forced to wed her father's choice, a nobleman sixty years of age. Her lover is sent for in order that he may aid her to escape this terrible marriage, but ere plans can be arranged for their future, they are discovered. A fight ensues and Editha at the risk of her life succeeds in getting her lover away, and in consequence the irate father vows she shall wed at once the first who passes his castle door, the nobleman having stated that she is no fit match for him.

The first who passes by proves to be none other than the escaped outlaw, and a series of romantic incidents follow until at the close of the picture, we have the pleasure of seeing Editha wedded to the man of her choice.

THE LITTLE DELICATESSEN STORE (Feb. 17).—The owner of a little delicatessen store, Carl Swissburger, has a daughter Lena who is in love with Jakie Schmidt, her father's errand boy. When Mr. Swissburger makes this discoverey he determines to get rid of Jakie as quickly as possible. This oportunity comes when Jakie spills a glass of milk on one of his best customers. He is dismissed. Lena and Jakie meet secretly and the courtship continues. The next afternoon Mr. Swissburger, in looking over the evening paper, reads an account of one Jake Schmidt, who, having saved the life of millionaire Brown, is to become the beneficiary of a large legacy for his bravery. Mr. Swissburger writes Jakie a letter, asking him to come back.

Mr. Swissburger receives the following letter: "Mr. Swissburger—I think you are mistaken. I am the Jake Schmidt who saved Mr. Brown's life, but I don't know you nor your Lena. Thanks, however, for the cash present. It comes in very handy.—Schmidt." It now dawns upon Swissburger that he has blundered. Just then poor little Jakie enters the store wreathed in smiles, but he is thrown out into the street in less time than it takes to tell.

CURING THE OFFICE BOY (Feb. 17).—The boss rings for Willie. The stenographer with some trouble awakens him. With the usual boy's contempt for girls, Willie makes faces at them as he exits.

Another ring a little later. The same trouble to arouse Willie; this time the girl from the switchboard does a little electrical engineering. Willie is astounded at this method, but it does the work.

Noon hour. The boss goes to lunch. Four of the girls flirt with the man across the street from the office window.

Willie asleep again! The girls dress him up in some of their clothes. The boss returns; rings for Willie and the girls take him bodily, asleep, clothes and all, and precipitate him in on his employer. The girls overhear Willie get an awful calldown. They go in and confess that they did it. They are all admonished and when out of the boss's office he gives vent to a hearty laugh that shows he has enjoyed Willie's dose of medicine.

THE NURSE (Feb. 20).—Janet Brent, a nurse, having finished a case, arrives home unexpectedly and takes her little brother for an outing. Willie is struck by the speeding automobile of Tom Hardy. Hardy rides out of sight and Janet is assisted into a passing auto and driven home.

Hardy's conscience refuses to give him any peace and he turns back, only to find that the victim has disappeared. Following the directions of a bystander he arrives at Janet's home. He makes himself known to Janet and tries to excuse his conduct, but she, furious at his carelessness, drives him from her house. Dr. Peters now arrives and after examining Willie, announces that his spine has been injured.

Some time later Hardy is stricken with a violent fever, and Dr. Peters, who hapens to be his physician, finding the nurse worn out, phones for Janet. Janet, not knowing who the patient is, leaves little Willie, and going to the patient's bedside, she finds herself face to face with Hardy. Dr. Peters' parting words were, "One mistake would be fatal." Hardy, who is delirious because of his high fever and has not recognized her, now calls feebly for water. The nurse obeys the call. But Hardy becomes worse every moment and she realizes that the crisis is at hand. Hardy passes the crisis safely, recognizes Janet and falls into a peaceful slumber. The reaction now sets in as Janet sees that Hardy is safe, and she falls fainting beside her patient, where Dr. Peters finds her.

During his convalesence, Hardy falls desperately in love with his nurse, but Janet, remembering her little lame brother at home, will not listen to him. Janet's joy at seeing him walk without his crutch is too great and she tells Hardy of Willie's cure. Hardy again proposes and now that the obstacle is removed, Janet realizes that she also loves him.

ONE THOUSAND MILES THROUGH THE ROCKIES (Feb. 21).—The Royal Gorge winds like a silver thread between huge, towering cliffs. The swinging bridge that supports the railroad track is shown. What beauty, what grandeur we see in Tennessee Pass, Eagle River Canyon and that wonderful canyon of the Grand River. Here we pause a moment at Colorado Hotel, at Glenwood Springs, and catch a glimpse of the Hot Springs and the swimming pool and then to Uray, from there by stage coach to Red tain, and at sunset we are on our way to De

"How Motion Pictures Are Made and Shown"

TUESDAY, FEBRUARY 27th

A film that will be in wide demand and of universal interest. Millions are today wondering how motion pictures are made, and this shows the complete operation from building the scenery to projecting the completed pictures.

HOMAS A. EDISON, Inc., 239 Lakeside Ave., Orange, N. J.

[illegible] island in Long Island Sound, known as Rikers Island. Here when it has reached the proper size the city proposes building a new prison.

The garbage is taken down the bay to Barren Island, where it is thrown into huge vats, boiled, pressed, dried and then ground into fertilizer, from which a considerable revenue is derived.

THE LOST KITTEN (Feb. 24).—Dick Eaton is in love with Lillian Girton.

One cold evening while on his way to the Girton house he comes across a half-starved kitten, which he picks up and places in his overcoat pocket. Upon arriving at the Girton house he declines the services of the butler and hangs his coat in a secluded corner of the hall. In the library he joins the assemblage. When wine is served he politely declines to drink and calls for a glass of milk instead. At the first opportunity he slips out into the hall with his glass of milk and feeds the famished kitten. The kitten, left alone, emerges from the coat pocket and after a sprawling leap finds its way to the glass of milk on the floor. After satisfying her ravenous appetite, she proceeds to attract the attention of some departing guests. Dick Eaton is now obliged to tell how he rescued the kitten. The story is met with more or less ridicule, but Miss Girton sees much to admire in a young man possessed of such a kind heart and when alone with her he is agreeably surprised to learn that his deep love for her is reciprocated.

SELIG.

THE DANITES (Feb. 19).—The Williams family are en route West, when they are overtaken by the Danites and all are killed but Nancy Williams and her little brother, Georgie. They eventually are picked up by another emigrant train and allowed to go on with them.

The "Danites" return to their chief, where they report all but two are killed and receive orders to pick up their trail and never leave it until they, too, are killed. They proceed on their quest and incidentally join the emigrant train of which Nancy and Georgie are members.

Stopping for the night, the "Danites," Hickman and Carter, recognize little Georgie, and seeing their chance, kill him and ride away. Nancy gets her gun and starts after them.

Nancy, being unable to find the murderers, returns to the camp and finds it deserted, except for the grave of little Georgie. From the top of a hill she sees a hunter's cabin, and an idea comes to her and she makes her way to it. Entering, she cuts her hair and takes a suit of the hunter's son's clothes and, changing, is always known as Billy Piper.

THE DANITES Second Reel (Feb. 20).—Billy Piper, a new arrival, inquires of Parson, the town drunkard, where he can lodge, and has just received his answer when Limber Tim arrives with news of the arrival of a new teacher. All the men prepare a welcome for "him" when they are taken off their feet by the entrance of a young woman, who is subsequently dubbed the "widow." Billy Piper is overjoyed at seeing one of her own kind, and these two become good friends. The men, too, have fallen victims and despite their sudden revolution as to looks and presents, maintains a laughing mien, and still favors Billy.

Hickman and Carter, men of the Danite clan, suspect Billy Piper of being the woman they are seeking and follow her as she leaves to visit the "widow."

The Danites arrive at the cottage and look in the window where the "widow" and Billy are talking. Billy sees them and faints. He is resusticated by the "widow" who discovers his sex, but promises to keep his secret.

A year elapses. Sandy and the "wodow," married, are receiving congratulations from their friends upon the arrival of an heir. The Danites, however, still sure that Billy is Nancy Williams, resolve to be convinced, and as Billy spends nearly all his time at the widow's, write a note to her husband, Sandy, warning him to "keep an eye on Billy."

On one of his visits the widow pleads with Billy to reveal his identity, but he refuses, and Sandy, coming in at that moment, accuses the widow of duplicity and orders Billy to leave the house.

In the meantime, the Danites start off for Billy's home, only to find it empty. They go on to the widow's, where Billy is and Sandy enters. Billy pleads with him to save him, vowing his innocence, and Sandy agrees to.

The men, bent on vengeance, crowd in and are met by Sandy's revolver. He orders them to stand aside for Billy to pass. Billy starts away, but sees the Danites, who have pushed forward. A heart attack seizes her and she falls dead in Sandy's arms. Then it is that her identity is revealed, that Nancy Williams drops the name forever of Billy Piper. The Danites, with a triumphant look at each other, quietly leave, their mission entirely fulfilled.

WHEN MEMORY CALLS (Feb. 22).—Uncle Billy Tod, an old accountant, is given charge of his dead brother's little daughter. For years the old man has been in the employ of misanthropic Andrew Grimes, and realizing that his meagre salary will not be sufficient for the support of himself and his ward, he goes to his employer to request a small increase in salary which is refused and during the heated argument which follows, the old man is discharged.

The little girl, wearing her name and address tagged around her neck, is placed aboard the train at Chicago and finally arrives at Aurora, Uncle Billy's home town, where she is taken in charge by a big-hearted cabman and driven to her destination.

Through a series of circumstances the little orphan finds herself in the big house of Andrew Grimes, who, alone with the memories of his wife and child, is passing his wedding anniversary in solitary seclusion. Awakened from his reverie by the sound of happy childish laughter, he finds the little stranger feasting at his banquet board. Memory calls him back to the little child of other days and the love which has long been slumbering with the departed, is awakened for the living, making Andrew Grimes, misanthrope, one of the strongest dramatic characters in one of the sweetest stories released by Selig in many days.

A PERSISTENT SUITOR (Feb. 23).—Smith falls in love with his employer's daughter. Clandestine meetings are planned and for a time all goes well—until Mildred sends the following paragraph:

"Dear Boy:—Come up to the house on the evening of the 26th. Be on the porch at 7.30 P. M. Father is going to lodge meeting.

"With all my love, MILDRED."

The message by accident finds a resting place on the floor of the office and is found by the father. Suffice to say he cancels the lodge arrangements and goes on duty as a guard for Mildred.

As the time draws near on the 26th, Mildred repairs to the porch, likewise Papa a close second. They return to the parlor. Smith, in the meantime, was foremost in the minds of each, and shortly after appears at the appointed place. The father, hearing the noise, opens the door and leads his "right in by the ear," and leads him "right out again." Disconsolate, he returns home and determines to see Mildred. He secures a disguise and delivers a note saying he will be on hand that night in disguise. Father not again suspecting his discharged employe, goes to bed, and peering through her window Mildred sees whom she believes to be Smith and opens her window and admits him. Her violent demonstrations of love overwhelm the burglar whom she takes for her persistent suitor. Discovering the mistake, she screams; he jumps through the window just as Smith appears, and a fight ensues. Police are called and the two taken into the house, the real culprit arrested and Smith fired.

Again home, he plans another scheme. His lodge is giving a Bazaar and he offers to raffle himself off (but is to be in disguise), to be drawn by the lady holding the lucky number.

The night arrives and Mildred and her father attend the Bazaar and the lucky number is held by the daughter and all ends happily.

SEEING DETROIT (Feb. 23).—Another city in Selig's famous series of sight seeing trips to principal cities of the world. A subject of rare worth, showing the thrilling sport of iceboating on Lake St. Clair.

PATHE.

MARRIAGE OR DEATH (Feb. 21).—This is a story of early life in Utah. A young girl is seen by one of the Mormons and demanded in marriage. Her family, however, refuses and is driven from home by the combined force of the Mormons and Indians. The girl is captured and once in the hands of the Mormons is about to be forced into marriage with the man she loathes when she is rescued by a band of cowboys from a ranch nearby.

POOR JIMMY (Feb. 22).—This is the story of a poor boy whose parents having died, is adop by an Irishman by the name of O'Houlihan. It is not all beer and skittles for Jimmy and he has many hardships to contend with. Finally he is found by a wealthy, kind-hearted man who takes him into his home as his son.

PHANTOM LOVERS (Feb. 24).—This is a story of a young artist who falls in love with a beautiful girl; his bosom friend is in love with his (the artist's) sweetheart. He goes to sleep and dreams that he meets them everywhere, and finally seeing them on the edge of a cliff he attempts to push them over, but they disappear into space and he falls over the edge of the precipice down, down, down into his own studio.

C. G. P. C.

THE GAMEKEEPER (Feb. 20).—A gamekeeper, long in the service of his master, is driven into debt by his wife's extravagance. His employer finding it out, sends the gamekeeper sufficient money by his son to meet the gamekeeper's obligations. The employer's son makes love to the gamekeeper's wife, or rather attempts to, but the wife proves faithful to her husband. The husband, however, seeing them together and not knowing his wife's fidelity, shoots his benefactor's son.

MOTION PICTURE MEN IN THE DARK CONTINENT (Feb. 20).—A series of remarkably interesting views of Africa, which will prove entertaining as well as highly instructive.

THE PRESENTIMENT (Feb. 23).—A man is called away from home in the evening on business. While he is away he has a freboding that e has come upon his home. He sees his wife attacked by two thugs while she clasps her little children in her arms, and jumping into a motor he begins a wild ride home, arriving just in time to save his wife from the actual occurrence.

KEEPING AN EYE ON FATHER (Feb. 15).—The children of Joshua Hamilton, a man of sixty, are afraid of his marrying again. They keep a close watch on him, but he escapes on several occasions, and gets in the company of ladies. Always sure to arrive on the scene, however, he is tormented by their surveillance. He gets a letter from a sister in the West, a woman the children have never seen. She tells him she is coming on for a visit. To get the best of his children, he proposes to meet her, and bring her home as his new wife. The plan works out all right and the children are filled with consternation. None of them, of course, will make up to the supposed new wife, and Mary, the daughter who lives with Joshua, leaves home. Joshua and his sister make love on the front porch, in daylight, and further shock his children. But the worst comes when Joshua's sister receives a wire from her grown-up son, saying he will visit her. Joshua meets the man at the station, and proposes that he act the part of lover. The young man agrees, proceeds to the porch, makes love to his mother, is seen by Joshua's children, who are tickled to report the facts to their father. He appears to be very angry; rushes home, and accosts the couple on the porch. The sister and her son appear greatly frightened, and the children of Joshua enjoy the situation. Then the three conspirators explain the affair; the children are ashamed; and family equilibrium is at length restored.

THE FATEFUL DIAMOND (Feb. 20).—John Belmore when leaving home, one morning, is entrusted by his wife with a diamond brooch to get it repaired. He puts it in his overcoat pocket and departs. He visits a restaurant, hangs up his overcoat, and a waiter by mistake puts the coat on another customer who goes away wearing it. When he arrives home, Simpson discovers that the coat is not his; then he learns from an advertisement in a newspaper that it is Belmore's coat, and sends it to him by a messenger. Belmore receives the coat, but finds that the brooch is missing from the pocket; goes to police station and obtains a warrant for Simpson's arrest. Simpson is arrested, tried and sentenced to prison. The overcoat is given by Belmore to an ill-clad man who takes it home, and whose wife, when repairing the coat, discovers the lost brooch in the lining, whence it had fallen through a hole in the pocket. The man restores the brooch to Belmore who hastens to report the news to Simpson's wife. She appeals to the Governor to pardon her husband; the pardon is granted—Simpson is released, and Belmore gives him a position in his office.

ECLAIR.

GONTRAN IS FOND OF ANIMALS (Feb. 18).—Gontran is fond of animals. He loves a cabman who is good to his horse. He can't see chickens, ducks or rabbits being shut up in a cage and always releases them. He sees a calf being led to the butcher, he buys it to save its life and brings it home. The janitor won't let him take it in and his wife and mother-in-law take after him.

Exasperated, Gontran is about to do something desperate when his eyes rest upon a notice, "Be good to animals." He continues to be good to animals and receives as a reward a certificate of honor from the humane society.

A CONGENIAL SON-IN-LAW (Feb. 18).—A certain young man takes a fancy to the daughter of a great actor. He wants to marry her, but the girl's mother makes this answer: "My daughter will only marry a man who has at least half as much talent as her father." An idea strikes his mind. He will play all the parts of a terrifying drama to the old man. Stealing into the latter's house, he wakes him up, ties him up as if he were a brigand and then a policeman rescues the old man, who at last discovers that the brigand and the policeman were but one person. The prospective son-in-law after proving his ability to the satisfaction of all, obtains his reward and marries the girl he loves.

JEALOUS JULIA (Feb. 22).—"Jealous Julia" is the personification of cleanliness in its theme and plot. A delightful flow of humor which ripples effervescently from first scene to last. Every scene is distinctive for its novelty of construction, which offers opportunity for many unique and pleasing light effects.

AMBROSIO.

CALLED BACK (Feb. 7).—Brown, a married man, is flirtatiously inclined. His actions cause much grief to his young wife. Posing as a single man, he pays attention to a pretty girl who has caught his fancy. During a call she notices a doll projecting from his pocket, and, her suspicions being aroused, she questions Brown so persistently that he breaks down and confesses that the doll belongs to his little daughter and that she had placed it in his pocket to have it mended. The indignant girl so thoroughly crushes the man and shows him the error of his ways that Brown goes back to his wife and thereafter is content with his own home.

TWEEDLEDUM AS A RIDING MASTER (Feb. 7).—Tweedledum is broke and answers an advertisement for a riding master. He makes a good bluff, but comes to grief when his deficiency in horsemanship is exposed.

BISON.

THE PROTECTION OF THE CROSS (Feb. 6).—The monk saves a woman from the wrath of a mob and she is later found innocent of the charge of having slain her brutal husband.

A TENDERFOOT'S REVENGE (Feb. 6).—The tenderfoot is hazed by the cowboys, but is revenged by means of a strong electric battery. While they are held prisoners by the current, he elopes with the girl they all love.

RELIANCE.

WANTED, A WIFE (Feb. 14).—Charles Hubbard, a young bachelor, is left a large legacy by his uncle's death, with a provision that he must marry within thirty days. Twenty-nine days elapse, and not having made a choice he places an advertisement in the papers for a wife who will allow herself to be divorced after the ceremony, offering the sum of $10,000 as an inducement. A swarm of women besiege him, none of whom he would wish to lead to the altar, even for a momentary ceremony. A lady reporter calls upon him to get the story, and after a brief conversation he suggests that she take up the proposition. Thoughts of her invalid mother prompt her to accept, and the wedding takes place. She receives the $10,000 and goes home, while Hubbard makes his way to his bachelor apartments. To his surprise he finds that he has fallen in love with the girl and that he really wants her for his wife. He rushes to the girl's home and finds that she has also fallen in love with him, and after a little persuason she falls into his arms and receives the blessings of her mother.

THE GAMBLER'S DAUGHTER (Feb. 17).—Garfield, a young gambler, and Weston, son of a minister, are in love with Rose Leigh. Weston is favored, but Garfield is so infatuated that during Weston's absence from town he forces Rose to marry him by threatening her life. When Weston returns he goes to call upon Rose, to demand an explanation. Garfield sees him coming and compels Rose to tell him she does not love him. Weston is crushed with grief and leaves the house. A girl baby is born to Rose and shortly thereafter Garfield is arrested and sent to prison. Rose becomes fatally ill and on her dying bed sends for Weston and gives him the child, requesting that her husband be notified that both she and the child had died. The girl, Elsie, grows to womanhood, tenderly guarded and cared for by Weston and his parents. Garfield serves his time and returns back to the old life. One of his proteges, Dalton, meets Elsie and falls in love with her. He gets her to call on Garfield with him, thinking the latter will help persuade her to marry him. Some gamblers drop in and their unkind remarks break the girl down just as Garfield comes in. He throws the men out of the room and furiously upbraids Dalton. lsie's startling resemblance to her mother arous Garfield's suspicions and he makes an invest tion, discovering the truth. He calls upon Wes and asks Elsie to choose with whom she sha live. The tie of blood proves stronger and Elsie rows her arm about her father's neck and dec s to remain with him, persuading him to cho an honorable vocation.

HIS STEP-MOTHER (Feb. 16).—Jack Morton, studying art in Paris, is shocked by a cable from [illegible] to the effect that he has married a second [illegible] and that Jack is to come home at once and [illegible] his step-mother. Before sailing, Jack receives a letter from his fiancée, Lucy Wordon, explaining [illegible].

Upon Jack's return to home and his fiancée, his fancied dislike toward his youthful step-mother soon disappeared. His kindly regard and liking for her had grown into a love that threatened to wreck his entire life and break the heart of Lucy.

Madge realized that all were standing on the brink of a tragedy and summoning every particle of womanly strength to the rescue used her potent influence over her step-son to bring about a marriage at once with Lucy, feeling certain that a little separation and time would cure him of his infatuation and restore his love for the sweet girl he once loved so devotedly.

The marriage was quickly consummated and the young couple off on their honeymoon. A year passed and Jack returned with his bride to his father's home. At the first look into his step-mother's eyes he realized that she had passed through the fire safely, but at the same moment realized that while his feeling for her had dulled to the point where control of its expansion was possible, the old love still lived.

However, a solution of the problem is impending for direct from the source of all goodness comes the factor that, once introduced into this tangle of twisted, aching, but right-doing hearts, brings first peace, then content and finally happiness.

PETTICOAT PERFIDY (Feb. 18).—General Wilmer Wilberford had maintained a consistent attitude since the close of the Civil War. He was willing to acknowledge the "cause" was lost and that the conquerors and their descendants be treated with consideration, but his very nature rebelled at the thought of any real intimacy with those of the North.

He had been much perturbed during his daughter's last year at a "finishing school for young gentlewomen" by her letters relating to a growing friendship between herself and Priscilla Waltham, a young girl whose people were prominent socially in Boston, and at the close of the school term, laid up by an attack of rheumatism, he had given a grudging consent to his little Virginia spending a few weeks with Priscilla's family before returning home.

At the end of the visit Virginia found herself listening with beating heart to Jack Waltham's proposal of marriage and a wire to her father threw that gentleman into a fit of rage not equalled since '65.

He wired a sharp command to return home at once and as for husbands—he had one picked out for her in the person of his old childhood companion whose father owned the neighboring plantation. He also refused absolutely to allow Mr. Jack Waltham to enter his home or even to accompany his daughter on the journey to her home. Jack's sister, Priscilla, while hurt by the attitude of Virginia's father toward her brother, decided to accompany the little Southerner to her Virginia home and Jack, driven to desperation at the thought of losing sight of Virginia, decided and won the girls over to a daring expedient by which he would at least be able to be near his sweetheart while she endeavored to win her father over to a union with the North.

Priscilla's clothes and a blonde wig and much torture of Jack's masculine, if slim figure, resulted in a young lady of rather alarming height and breadth, but none the less at least "Passing fair."

Jack's stay at the Wilberford mansion was lengthened far beyond the original time planned and he and Virginia found themselves involved in one complication after another until at last fate intervened in a most striking manner and Virginia's father was won over.

SOCIETY AND CHAPS (Feb. 19).—Rich as the result of a lucky mining strike, Jack Farleigh married Bessie Evans. He did not remain contented with idleness very long, and when Bessie invited some dear friends to visit her Jack fled in disgust to the ranch, where Mexican Joe and the cowboys soon made him at home once more. Bessie and her friends went touring. An automobile mishap brought Jack to the rescue—also it led to some mighty funny adventures for the auto party, when Jack as a highwayman held up his own friends in his own automobile.

THANHOUSER.

WASHINGTON IN DANGER (Feb. 20).—The American army was encamped near West Point, the British forces being some distance away. Many nearby landowners were patriots, and they delighted in a chance to entertain the gallant leader of the army of the people.

There was one man who was particularly profuse in his expressions of patriotism. With this individual, whom Washington frankly trusted, he frequently dined, and to all appearances was the most welcome of visitors.

It was therefore with grief that the ge al received word that his genial host was a tr or.

The general's informant was a little d ey boy, a slave in the employ of the traitor, w by a happy chance had been able to overhear is master dickering with a British officer.

According to the darkey, Washington was be invited to dine with the traitor at 2 P. M., nd while he was at table, a British force w to suddenly appear and capture him. Circumst ial proof came in the shape of the invitation, but ill Washington hesitated, and at last decided to ke a thorough test before he acted.

The general was on hand for his dinner en gement, but he was half an hour ahead of e, much to the surprise of his host. The latt te tained Washington in conversation, waiting nd watching for the soldiers of the king to a ar. Finally, to his joy, they marched in. He dr ed his deferential manner, and turning to Washin n, said:

"General, you are my prisoner."

"I believe not," was Washington's stern ly "but sir, I know that you are mine. Arrest his traitor, officer!"

At the general's command, the "British" s rs removed their military cloaks and the traitor w, to his horror, that they were Continentals o he commander's bodyguard.

The general's ruse secured his safety, an he humble darkey, no longer a slave, lived many s, happy and well to do, and always commande the high regard of the Father of his Country.

A MESSAGE FROM NIAGARA (Feb. 23 A widower and his only child, a daughter just d ding into womanhood, lived at Niagara The man had retired from business with enou live in comfort, but his lonely life led him evil habits and he became a drug fiend. He the secret from his daughter, and for a long e she did not suspect him. Then a chance m ng with the man who supplied him with the revealed everything to her, and she labored r- nestly, but unsuccessfully, to reform her f er. About this time she met a young artist from ew York, and he immediately fell in love with r.

When the smuggler again appeared at her the girl refused to permit her father to ve dealings with him. The old man stormed nd raged, and in his weakened condition, his e ion was fatal to him. Frantically endeavoring to ach the drug he craved, he staggered and fell de

Over the body of her father, the girl vengeance on the man she blamed for his h, and swore she would bring him to justice, for the crime, at least for some other mi ed. Her sweetheart found her still obdurate, st declaring that no love could enter her life til justice had been done.

A chance encounter and an overheard con a- tion put the girl on her enemy's track, an she trailed him to a lonely hut on the river nk above the falls, where the smugglers had eir rendezvous. Listening at a window she so is- covered their secret, and realized that sh ad the evidence to put her enemy and his pals jail for long terms.

Unfortunately for her, one of the gang, a ing late, surprised and captured her. The smu ers locked her in an upper room of the hut, int ing to detain her until all danger to them was st.

The window was too small for her to escape The room downstairs, the only other exit, was fille with her enemies. There was one chance to get ord to the outside world and the girl took it.

She wrote a note telling where she was a re, and put it in a bottle, corking it. She knew s bottle might be overlooked, so tied her lig hat to it. Then she hurled this unique messag nto the swiftly rushing river, knowing that it uld be speedily carried away.

The message went down the upper river ver the falls and through the rapids, and ged against a rock in the placid water beyond ere it was found by the artist, who was out r ing, and aid came on without delay.

The smugglers, preparing to depart, were ver- powered and led away to prison, while th girl at last listened to the pleadings of her love who had come to her aid in response to a plea f help sent over Niagara Falls and through the wh pool rapids.

Success Is Never Startling

It sums up many hours of toil and struggle.

We walk into it usually, almost exhausted; but once achieved, the past with all its trouble, is soon forgotten.

You have heard much of our struggles, now past history, until we are come to be accepted as having always been—a condition that marks our success.

ADDITION

Have you seen a SHAMROCK film? Do you want to see it? If you are uncertain as to your wants, we can advise you to list SHAMROCK films in your column of wants, walk into a NATIONAL EXCHANGE and demand to see a SHAMROCK FILM.

Of the PASQUALI BRAND we haven't words at our command to properly describe PASQUALI quality. You have heard of great achievements in dramatic art; you have heard of great achievements in stage craft; you have heard of literary inspirations; you have heard of matchless technique. THESE ARE THE THINGS that you will find in the PASQUALI BRAND; a product without a peer.

HAVE YOU A NATIONAL EXCHANGE IN YOUR TERRITORY?

[illegible] some fragments of paper taken from a waste basket.

Steele put out his machine and was acclaimed by the press as a great inventor, but his clerk was suspicious of him and at a visit to Noah's home discovered that some paper which came out of the little girl's doll supplied sufficient evidence proving Mr. Steele to have been a purloiner of Noah's ideas.

Confronted with this evidence, therefore, the manufacturer was compelled to disgorge some of his profits to the tune of $10,000. So poor Noah and his young charges were made happy by the money.

THE LIE (Feb. 22).—It is war time and before the brave Northern Captain, Robert Evans goes away he bids adieu to his sweetheart, Edith Hobson. As victory after victory attends the Northerners, despair grows in the South. Lieutenant Hobson, Edith's brother, who is, of course, fighting on the Confederate side, is a fugitive from Grant's men. After many desperate wanderings and adventures, he takes refuge in his own home. Thither come Captain Evans and his men in search of the fugitive. He is admitted to the room where the wounded man lies. Instantly he realizes the gravity of the problem. Shall he arrest the wounded brother of his fiancée, or shall he not?

He decides on the latter course and returning to his men, he tells them that the man whom they were pursuing was not in the house. So the poor, hunted wretch escapes, presumably to recover and to interpose no barrier to the marriage of the victorious Northerner and his sister, Edith.

ICE BOATING ON THE SHREWSBURY RIVER, N. J. (Feb. 24).—During the freeze of last January some races were arranged upon a frozen lake in Shrewsbury, and we see these beautiful iceboats gliding across the smooth ice surface at great speed. There are also races between ice boats and automobiles. Also the lads brought out their miniature ice boats and had races amongst themselves.

THE BROKEN LEASE (Feb. 24).—Mr. and Mrs. William Gleason, a young married couple, are residing in an apartment in which no dogs nor children are allowed, and for which they signed a lease covering a period of three years. Before the time expires Gleason is ordered by the firm with which he has been connected for many years, to proceed to Australia to manage a branch office there.

Of course, the next move is a visit to the agent to ask to be allowed to break the lease. This the agent emphatically refuses to let Gleason do, and threatens, if he moves, to make him pay the full amount of rent for the three years.

Gleason returns home very much discouraged and sits down to think the matter over. What can he do to get himself peremptorily ordered to leave the apartment? A brilliant idea occurs to him and he hurriedly proceeds to carry it out. Walking through the streets he sees a number of children at play, and immediately invites them to his apartment for a real good time. This they have with a vengeance, dancing, singing and racing about to their hearts' content. To this din is added the barking of dogs, which are also brought along, a few being tied to the stair railing, to the terror of the other tenants, who in a body proceed to call at the Gleason apartment to ascertain the trouble.

In the meantime, Mrs. Gleason has gone home to her mother to relate their predicament, and she returns at the height of the frolic. For a moment she believes her husband has become demented, but being told the scheme, she is overcome with laughter.

The tenants, who are incensed, bring the agent on the scene, and he, to the Gleasons' great delight, orders them to vacate the apartment.

NESTOR.

INBAD THE COUNT (Feb. 12).—Count Percy is courting Ethel Wells. Father is not pleased with this, but mother is boss. The old gentleman is delighted when the girl makes the acquaintance of Jack Greenleaf. Father invites Jack to call upon the family at their city home.

During the call Jack has a short brush with the count, who is highly offended and leaves, much to the anger of the mother, who forbids Jack the house thereafter.

Jack and Ethel manage to exchange letters, and, in order to keep their correspondence secret, they use an old cannon, mounted in a nearby park, as a letter box. The spying count learns this, and determines to intercept some of these letters. With this intention, he goes to the old cannon, reaches into it in search of a letter, and finds a lady's purse, which has just been hidden there by an escaping sneakthief. The officer from whom the thief has made his getaway returns as the count finds the purse and explanations are useless. He carries him off to the station house.

Here the count telephones to Mr. Wells for assistance, but the old gentleman is slow to help him, and only does so on the condition that all thoughts of an engagement between the count and Ethel be dismissed at once. Father holds the balance of power in this case, and has his way, leaving the road clear for the more welcome suitor, Jack.

HIS SIDE PARD (Feb. 14).—Hal Jackson and Jim Wilson are partners of a mine. Hal takes some samples of ore to the assayer, James Padley, who writes the boys that the mine will only assay about eight dollars to the ton and will hardly pay them to work it.

The evening before Hal called at the Wilson shack, where Jim's mother and sister welcomed him. Hal is in love with Jim's sister, and each time that he comes, remains until the mother falls asleep, and Jim frantically motions his sister to send Hal home.

After receiving the assayer's letter, Hal again calls at the shack, only to find Jim thoroughly downcast. He has received a letter from J. R. Braddock, which reads as follows: "Will be over to see you in the morning, and if your mine is all that you claim, will negotiate with you for purchase of same." Hal leaves early, and the women go to the kitchen to finish some work. Jim decides to salt the mine with gold which he has in a jar. He takes his shot-gun into his room and charges it with gold, then starts with some quartz containing free gold, which he carries in a tin box, and which the young people were looking at in a previous scene, he slips out, mounts his horse and rides away to the mine. There he shoots the gold into the rocks, and throws the quartz around, dropping the tin box and forgetting it.

The next morning the would-be purchasers come to look at the mine. Jim sends the unsuspecting Hal to settle with them, and Hal is surprised to have the men at once give him a check for it. After they are gone, he looks at some pieces of quartz which he saw them examining, and sees the tin box. At once he realizes that the mine was salted and mounts his horse and rides to Jim's shack to demand an explanation. Jim declares that Hal must have salted the mine, if it is salted —but Hal, with the aid of his gun, forces the truth from Jim and makes him write a confession.

In the meantime, Jim's sister enters, and Jim realizes that he may yet escape the consequences of his deed. He begs Hal to let him go for his sister's sake—Hal agrees and tears up the note of confession, but Jim's mother has overheard, and commands her son to tell the men at the mine. They, in the meanwhile, have discovered the mine was salted, and have ridden after Hal, leaving a couple of miners at the mine. These men dig a few inches deeper and strike a rich vein. They in turn ride after the purchasers and arrive just as they are about to take both Hal and Jim. The men tell of the rich strike, and all are glad to let the deal stand. Jim asks forgiveness.

BRANNIGAN'S PROMOTION (Feb. 17).—Brannigan is a policeman. His brother officers are inclined to make fun of the "greenhorn," and Roundsman McCarthy is more mischievous than the rest.

Banker Kelson and family are away on a pleasure trip. The "tip" makes the rounds of the underworld, and various sets of crooks independently plan to "clean out" the banker's home. Roundsman McCarthy sees the night prowlers at work, but, believing them to be planning a joke on him, he decides to shift the joke on Brannigan, who is about to relieve him.

In Kelson's home, the marauders eat, drink, smoke and make merry. Their merriment reaches Brannigan's ears, who quickly makes a tour of investigation. He 'phones headquarters for assistance, and then, single-handed, he enters the banker's home. Just as he holds up the merrymakers, other policemen arrive and the entire outfit is taken to the station. For this "coup" the "greenhorn" receives a sergeant's stripes, to the utter dismay of the wiser and sadder and older cops, particularly McCarthy.

TIGHTWAD GETS A BARGAIN (Feb. 17).—Mr. and Mrs. Tightwad have quite a spat over the ancient silk hat that the man refuses to shelve. He shall no longer disgrace her; so the Mrs. sallies forth and, without taking hubby into her confidence, buys him a new silk tile for which she pays ten dollars. At home, she embellishes the hat with handworked initials and puts it back into the box. Alas! a tramp has been watching her. He likes the hat and manages to separate it from the box. The hat eventually finds its way to second-hand store. Here, the proprietor marks down to two dollars and expectantly rubs b Jewish hands.

Mr. Tightwad happens along, sees the hat, t price and the chance to satisfy the Mrs. He bu the hat and rushes home. The initials puzzle Mi Tightwad, who makes a dash for the box. I empty but for the bill, which Tightwad reads, "T dollars." The shock crumples him into a hea it also crumples the hat. To make matters wors the Mrs. recites with emphasis the riot act.

THE SMUGGLER (Feb. 24).—Two sisters a their father have taken up summer residence in rural mountain cottage. They receive a visit fr their brother and a friend, both custom office During the visit the sisters go off for a brisk moun tain trot. While gathering wild flowers the young sister falls into a deep abyss.

The event of her rescue is being celebrated the lonely hut, when two mountain officers bri a long sought smuggler as captive. The t custom officials arraign their prize until the t girls recognize him as the daring rescuer. Th reveal the identity of their benefactor to t brother who, when alone, offers his charge chances of escape only to be informed that t smuggler-hero steadfastly refuses to implicate t custom officer by escaping from his keeping. H awaits his punishment. What happens to him?

JIMMIE'S ARTFUL DODGE (Feb. 27).—Jimm did not like arithmetic, but he did like his nurs Julie. But mamma and papa insisted that Jimm must get his lessons right or else go to bed witho supper. On this occasion, Jimmie could not add column of figures correctly, so, much against t protestation of Julie, Jimmie was put supp less to bed. The nurse, however, conspired steal some food to Jimmie, but being caught in t act was forthwith discharged. That was enou for Jimmie. He shammed a deathly sicknes Nothing would revive him. In the throes of see ing death, the cunning schoolboy asked for a pap and with all the ceremony attendant upon the wr ing of a will, penned the fact that he wanted see Julie again. At first the latter steadfastly r fused to return, but relented in haste when s read the message of her dear little charge. Ne less to state, Jimmie acted perfectly healthy a happy when his Julie was reinstated.

PANORAMA OF BRUGES (Feb. 27).—A dain delicate-tinted series of Flemish views, showing t principal sights of the ancient town of Bruge Views of the picturesque canals, the lace worke milk maids and men with their dog-driven m carts make this picture educationally valuable.

A few days later the father leaves the home a a note for Louise, in which he says that he can longer tolerate the tongue lashings of the virule virago. The pastor of the vicarage tries to initia peace into the turbulent household, but his effo are nil. It is to the pastor that the father write after several months, imparting to him his simu taneous longing to see his daughter and his fear return home. The parson writes him to come his home and volunteers shelter and protectic The invitation is accepted.

Upon Mr. Stubbs' arrival at the rectory, the p son sends a note to Louise, an innocent little n with a guilty innuendo: "If you want to see o you love, meet him in my garden at eight." H dispatches the message with a village youth, w upon his way to deliver it meets a group of villa gossips, to whom he announces the grave import his mission. The gossips feel it their duty to re the note, and horrow-stricken, set about to g the shocking incident some publicity.

At eight that night the entire population of t village lies concealed behind whatever furnis protection from vision. They see a man dress in the parson's clothes come into the garden a embrace Louise. They see him hold her in his ar —and they can restrain themselves no longer. F to denounce the erring two is Mrs. Stubbs, but th —they see the real parson come down the ste into the garden, and they recognize the other Hiram.

My dear Mr Woodward:-

The improvement in our pictures since the installation of your Motiographs has proved so marked that I feel it due to you to express in some measure my gratification at the results

From our regular patrons who watch our work closely from week to week, we have had many expressions of pleasure in the clear, brilliant and steady pictures without noise or flicker which the Motiographs have made possible in our houses.

From the operator's point of view they are perfect in adjustment, simple in ~~adjustment~~ construction and easily cared for, and it is a pleasure to grind out reel after reel in such perfect projection as your Motiographs give us

Wishing you every success

I remain Yours very truly,

[illegible] exploded and the girl was blind! She [illegible] and sent for Bob.

[illegible] Sadly she told him what had happened, and horror-stricken, he recoiled from her. And that [illegible] he decided decided to go away. When [illegible] her he was going West, that he would soon return to her, she clung to him. He comforted her with deceit, and went out of the house, putting her out of his life.

Out West, in bar-room, cafe and gay temple of revelry, he amused himself with the travesty and parody of love, nor did hear the longing, lonesome sob, nor feel the throb of the girl's eager, yearning dreams. She was forgotten. She asked for letters from him, and the mother, reluctant to impart the miserable truth, gave her sheets of paper as white as the lie they expressed. She pressed them to her lips and to her heart.

Then, they heard of a surgeon who was having wonderful success in restoring sight to the blind. The operation was successful. She opened her eyes, and saw—saw the things of earth and their deception, saw the lie of her love and the mockery of its message—and again they sought the unknowing darkness and shut out the sights and sins of the world a broken human heart gone to its refuge!

SOLAX.

THE WISE WITCH OF FAIRYLAND (Feb. 18).—Deepwater, an Indian maiden, is in love with Boldheart, an Indian hunter. Boldheart comes back from a long hunt and presents his sweetheart with a fox skin. Blackcloud is also in love with Deepwater, and when he comes to present her with a trophy of the hunt, he finds her hugging Boldheart's trophy. Blackcloud is overpowering and physically forces the girl to accept his gift and discard Boldheart's

When Boldheart learns of this, he shuns Deepwater. In order to win back his love, she consults a witch. This witch gives her a love potion. In the meanwhile, Blackcloud, who has been following Deepwater, overhears what she is up to. When she leaves the witch, he consults the hag and asks for a poison. The witch gives it to him—but having an inkling of what the villain is about to do, she follows.

When Deepwater places the potion so that it may attract Boldheart, Blackcloud slouches along and exchanges his poison for the love potion. He sits down and begins to gloat over his victory, when the witch casts a spell over him and he falls asleep. She then changes the potions. Blackcloud finally dies when he drinks the poison, which he believes to be the love potion. The lovers are reunited.

HUBBY DOES THE WASHING (Feb. 21).—Mr. Poole has a false idea of economy. He tells his wife that expenses in the household are cutting too great a dent in his bank account. He gets an idea that the best way to begin cutting expenses is by cutting down laundry bills. Wifey is indignant at such a preposterous suggestion and retorts that perhaps hubby would like to undertake the washing himself.

Hubby doesn't at all think ill of the plan. In fact, hubby prepares to do the work. Hubby starts allright, but makes such a mess of things that by the time he gets through the laundry costs him about six times more than ordinarily.

GOD DISPOSES (Feb. 23).—A young man of high social position sacrifices his home and family for a girl of the stage. Cast off by his family, the young man finds that he is not qualified to earn his living. In the meanwhile his wife grows ill, a child is born, and several years after, the man finds himself in narrow straits. He prepares to go out and burglarize a place. His child enters when he leaves his revolver on the table. The child plays with it as with a toy and then innocently removes the bullets. The father comes back and takes the revolver and goes out.

Accidently, the son breaks into his own father's office. The father happens to be working late that night. The son breaks in, tries to shoot his own father. By the intervention of God, the son is saved from a patricide.

CHAMPION.

THE MERCHANT MAYOR OF INDIANAPOLIS (Feb. 19).—We see the home of a workingman, into which enter the wife and daughter of the mayor for the purpose of studying conditions. The big produce and poultry interests are upholding the high cost of their stock, thus placing them beyond the reach of the workingman, who, at the approach of Thanksgiving finds but a meagre fare on the table.

The mayor summons before him this body of grafters and asks them as a favor to lower the prices for the benefit of the people. They laugh him so scorn. Then his honor buys up produce and poultry on all sides. Then he goes into the market place and sells these commodities at a small percentage above cost. The result is disastrous to the "combine"—prices tumble and the people are happy.

Sherlocko and Watso (Champion).

A WIFE'S DISCOVERY (Feb. 21).—Dr. Fred Marlin is a member of the New Club formed by the medical fraternity for social purposes, and incidentally, to give amateur theatricals. A meeting is held, and the young doctor, while not present, is selected to play Jasper Millionpile, the lover hero, in a farce-comedy. A note to this effect is sent to him by his friend, Jesse Heming, a fellow member, who is to play the part of Inez, the adventuress, the sweetheart of Millionpile. Dr. Marlin writes a letter of acceptance, but before he has time to enclose it in the envelope he is summoned away.

His housekeeper, being previously reprimanded for apparent negligence, now discovers the letter and places it in the hands of the doctor's wife. The letter says: "Dear Jess: Your note received. Will meet you to-morrow night at the rooms. Sincerely, Fred." The wife armed with a horsewhip follows him, and with the assistance of a club member, contrives to gain access to the club room where the dress rehearsal is taking place.

She arrives just at the time her husband is making soulful protestations of love to Inez, the adventuress, and she conceals herself behind the portieres to await further developments. At length, unable to restrain her feelings, she bursts forth and plies the whip upon her husband. In the mix-up she seizes Inez by the hair, and to her utter astonishment finds the wig in her hands and looks up into the sweet countenance of a mere man. Ashamed of her foolish suspicions, she begs pardon of her husband and promises never again to fall a victim to the green-eyed monster—Jealousy.

POWERS.

HIS BROTHER WILLIE (Feb. 20).—Willie's sole ambition in life seems to be that of turning up at the most inopportune moments and shocking the refined sensibilities of his well-behaved brother and other members of his highly respectable family.

All unconsciously, he successively impersonates the returned prodigal—but for whom no fatted calf is served up—the village drunkard, a street ruffian and a desperate burglar, causing his brother's fiancée to almost die of heart failure. Poor, harmless Willie.

AS FATE WOULD HAVE IT (Feb. 24).—Calvin Deane is a struggling young physician in a small town. Without realizing it, he has fallen in love with Mary Roberts, whose mother is one of his patients. The arrival of Deane's college friend, Richard Sharpe, a wealthy business man, opens the eyes of the former to his love for Mary and a friendly rivalry springs up between the two men, which is terminated by Deane's learning of Mary's preference for Sharpe.

After a lapse of years, Dr. Deane, living onl the past and devoid of ambition, decides to di his own hand and is on the point of drinkin deadly poison, that leaves no trace of its pres after death. Then it is that Sharpe, who has come a confirmed invalid, arrives at the doc office accompanied by his wife, Mary, and in rupts the would-be suicide. After greeting other, Sharpe, pretending that he has sought doctor in search of a cure for his malady, Mary to leave the room. He then asks Dr. De for just such a poison as the doctor had prep for himself and offers him a large sum of mone payment. Upon Deane's refusal, he shows that his death would leave Mary free to m again. Deane pretending consent, accepts money and gives Sharpe a quick-acting but harn narcotic and dismisses him. Later on, after Shar recovery from the effects of the drug, Deane pr the purity of his love for Mary and the stre of his friendship for Sharpe by returning the m and beginning treatment for the permanent cur the invalid.

THE MAJESTIC

TUESDAY AND SUNDAY

Owing to the majority of exchanges thinking our last Friday release would be Feb. 16th and their discontinuing Friday after that date and substituting Tuesday release commencing Feb. 27th, we have cancelled completely our Friday release of Feb. 23d, the last Friday release appearing Feb. 16th. Sales Company approved action.

Our change of release day from Friday to Tuesday has been sanctioned by the Exchanges and Exhibitors all over the country, and we are pleased that it met with such universal approval.

Our First Tuesday Release, February 27th "STRIP POKER"

a comedy—a decided novelty—a young couple in financial distress awaits the coming of the rich uncle from Europe—on his arrival he meets his old college chums and they play the old college game—"Strip Poker." It's the funniest film ever produced.

Two High Class Pictures

FRIDAY, FEBRUARY 16th "HIS STEP-MOTHER"

a powerful sex problem story wherein arises a situation that only the most finished and delicate handling can bring to a satisfactory result. This story has vitality of plot that will grip the attention and hold in suspense until its last moment, when the sun breaks through the clouds.

SUNDAY, FEBRUARY 18th "PETTICOAT PERFIDY"

a comedy which we advise you to advertise as a prescription for the blues—an admittedly farcical comedy that without offending sense of probability and reason is one continuous laugh, as is followed the uneven but upward career of a lover who fights his way through a maze of petticoats, to his sweetheart's side.

FILM STORIES.

THE LITTLE FLOWER GIRL (Helios).—Georges Gaborio and his wife Hegla have a little girl named Helene. Helene is forced to sell flowers on the streets and in the cafés that Georges and his wife may have much of red wine. One day while selling her flowers on the streets she meets a little boy. He is the first person who had ever treated her with kindness. The little boy and his mother called upon Helene and gave her money and a doll, which her parents took away from her and sold for more drink. One night after a beating, the little boy Helene had been dreaming of had a vision of her. He told his mother and together they went to the hut and the boy rescued the little girl and brought her home. Then his mother cared for Helene and the cruel parents were led off to prison.

THE TRAINER'S REVENGE (Latium).—In this photodrama an animal trainer has a wife of whom he is suspicious and when he finds her in the company of another man connected with the tent-show, he threatens vengeance. That night he drags his wife to the lion tent and forces her into one of the cages and locks her in. He then lets in the most ferocious of all the beasts who at once springs upon the helpless woman and badly wounds her. But she does not die and in the hospital is able to identify her husband and to prove his guilt.

ELECTRIC LAMPS (Comerio).—This subject shows us how the electric light is made, beginning with the making of the fine filament wires and the glass bulbs, until it is a completed article, fully tested and proven up to the high standard. The factory shown is one in Italy and the film takes the spectator through every department.

VIEWS OF INTERLAKEN (Mondia).—This film opens with a panoramic view of Interlaken from the heights above, looking down on the railroad tracks where a train rushes from the city and over the river where boats ply up and down the stream. Then we take a stroll up Hoheweg Promenade, the principal thoroughfare of the city, passing its ancient dwellings and prettily thatched and gabled houses. On the trip to Brienz we take a boat journey up the river at remarkable speed, passing close to the banks all the way. Pressbach Falls and the Gorge of the Aar, the Funicular Railroad and Reichenbach Falls are some of the other sights included.

THE HEART OF A CHILD (Deutsches Biograph).—Hedwig Lindemeyer is a step-child or half-daughter to the haughty mother who had married her father because he was rich. Ludwig is her half-brother and the pet of his mamma. Everything Ludwig wants Ludwig gets, and nothing which Hedwig yearns for does she have. One day the parents leave home for a call and while away Ludwig cuts up like the naughty boy he is and smashes some valuable bric-à-brac, including a statuette. When the father and mother return home little Hedwig takes the blame on herself to protect Ludwig. She so dreads the severe punishment she knows will be dealt her that she runs away from home and gets lost. At night she lies down beside a tree out in a field and there is found and brought back home. She had caught a heavy cold and pneumonia develops and soon death comes to her and an angel appears and carries her to the heaven all good little girls and boys are sure to reach. And thus, when it is too late, does her step-mother realize the jewel she has lost.

DR. BRIAN PELLIE (Clarendon).—Dr. Brian Pellie is the head of a gang of kidnappers. He reads in the newspapers that the rich merchant and titled baronet of a certain English estate is to return home with his bride on a day soon to arrive; so he and his gang lay for them, kidnap the bride and take her aboard a yacht where they hold her for ransom. But her husband goes after her and after a long and brave fight succeeds in saving her, but not until she had upset a lamp on board the yacht and set the vessel afire. He fought a long tussel on the deck of the burning ship and later in the water after being thrown out of a rowboat. Then the police arrive in their motor boat and make a prisoner of Dr. Pellie and save the bride.

OLD TOWNS OF PIEDMONT (Aquilla).—First a panoramic view of Monrovia, then a view of a cable road and following this views of public buildings and old and new mansions and palaces. Next we journey to Ceva and then to Chevasco in the high mountains. An old stone bridge comes to view and some ancient ruins, perhaps thousands of years old, and the gateway of one of the most famous caves in all Europe. In the end we see some beautiful water-falls and a mountain brook.

THE SCOUT MASTER'S MOTTO (Hepwix).—A "busybody" individual is chosen as the Scout Master and he advises the boys that they must do one kind act a day at least, if not more, and he starts out to set a worthy example. Finding a manhole to a sewer open he closes it and thus locks in a workman who soundly beats him later when liberated. He tries to rescue a supposedly lost child and is accused of kidnapping. He then attempts to help a blind man and gets into more difficulty, and thus it goes on through episode after episode until he is, strictly speaking, "in Dutch" with everybody.

THE COUNTERFEIT BANKNOTE (Deutsches Biograph).—Three practical jokers paste a counterfeit banknote on a table and then wait to see poor unknowing ones try to get it. One after another they appear and try to pry the supposedly good money loose. At last a Jew peddler comes along and finding he cannot lift the bill he takes table and all and runs off, pursued by the restaurant waiters, for it is in an open café, he then smashes the table top and after getting the bill tries to buy some bread with it and is thrown out into the street. He is at last caught and thrashed by the enraged restaurant proprietor and his employees.

CIGARS OR NUTS (Hepwix).—Mr. and Mrs. Mugwump go to the county fair and there enjoy the usual pastimes, and winning therefor some cigars and a cocoanut. Mr. Mugwump proceeds to enjoy the "Havana," but it makes him sick and he is mistaken for a drunken man, and then when a tramp finds the butt he has thrown away, he, too, gets "wheels" and cavorts down the roadway in zig-zag fashion. Others get into equal trouble, even the policeman who arrests the tramp and the one who takes in Mugwump falling under the influence of the vile weed. Mrs. Mugwump gets her hubby away and they have the pleasure of seeing the policemen in a bad shape as they stroll off to freedom.

TILLIE AND THE FIRE ENGINE (Hepwix).—Tillie and her girl chum see their old gardner burning brush in the garden and they jump on their bicycles and ride to the fire-engine house and give the alarm. When the hose-cart is left before the house the girls climb to the driver's seat and make off with the apparatus. Their experience is a wild one and they have a high old time, running into several things and nearly over many folk. At last when closely pursued they uncouple the hose, hitch it to a hydrant and play the water on the unfortunates.

THE POWER OF GOLD (Washington).—Jim Bradley lived in the far West with his young bride who had been lured thither by the hope of Jim's finding gold and becoming rich. One day Bill Williams, a slick gambler, came to their cabin and was given shelter. On the absence of Jim he made love to the wife. She resented this until Bill had found the mine Jim had located and had found Jim in a half-starved, half-frozen condition, lost in the woods. He left him for dead and carried back a farewell note to the wife. When he showed her the gold, she gave him what little love she was possessed of and was ready to share her fate with his. When Bill had left Jim for dead, Whanita, an Indian girl whom Jim had often helped and who thus had come to love him, brought him home. Jim left his wife for good and went to the Indian girl who proved her love for him, and proved it doubly when Bill attempted to shoot Jim, for she was quicker of aim than Bill and laid him low instead of his killing Jim.

JIM OF THE MOUNTED POLICE (Hepwix).—A poor gypsy girl is befriended by Jim, a mounted policeman. Her gypsy band plot to steal the horses belonging to the squire. The girl gives warn and the police get on the trail. At last the gang rounded up. The girl has meantime been found her clan and soundly beaten for her troubles left on the roadway. But Jim finds her and sa her. Thus the story ends in a pretty romance.

THE DICE OF DEATH (Wrytograph).—The ch of the Mexicans proves to the Mexican girl t the cowboy loves another and then they plot kill him. The two men shake dice to see wh one shall do the deed and the lot falls to the chi The Mexican girl lures him to the cabin and th he is about to be put to death, when the other g after learning the trouble makes a night side of and runs her horse right into the cabin and g "the drop" on the trio.

IN CONVICT STRIPES (California).—This mous melodrama is so well known that it se waste of time to tell the tale. In this photop form it is as thrilling an offering as it ever v in the stage variety and from its beginning to ending there is not a let-up in the fast action. is staged in appropriate surroundings and with propriate settings.

HER GUARDIAN (Clarendon).—Sir Egbert is guardian of Mabel Bentworthy and had cared her indirectly ever since the death of her pare years before. On her reaching seventeen years age he wrote to her boarding school asking that come home. She arrived and then he told her tl she was no longer a girl, but was reaching wom hood and must don her first long clothes. She so. Slowly but surely Cupid played his game Sir Egbert foind himself in love with Mabel, Mabel had meantime met and been won by younger man and Sir Egbert had to admit to h self that he was too old for her. Some days af this came about and he had given his consent the attachment between her and her lover, a lit girl got her foot caught in a switch at a railr crossing and a train thundered down upon h Bravely and nervily Sir Egbert rescued her Mabel looked on while her lover never moved. deed awoke in her heart a new spark and she kn that she lover her guardian and that the other been but a passing fancy.

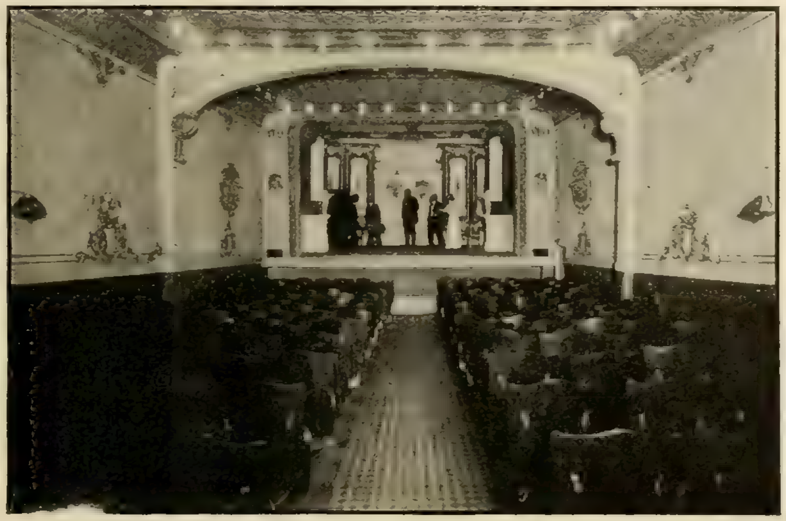
Wurlitzer Automatic Musical Instruments



Casino Theatre, Zanesville, O.—Their Wurlitzer PianOrchestra is stationed in the wings on the stage

The Rudolph Wurlitzer Co.
Cincinnati, Ohio.

Zanesville, Ohio, September 11th, 1911.

Gentlemen:—

The Model No. 31 A PianOrchestra installed by you three weeks ago in my Casino Theatre, I am pleased to say has been a revelation to me and beyond my fondest hopes of what I expected when I bought it. Business has increased about 10% even in the face of the fact that I have dispensed with my orchestra. The music is the best that I have ever had in my seven years in the picture business, notwithstanding that I have used a five and six-piece orchestra seven days a week for the past three years.

For spot songs the instrument is a perfect accompanist, the singer buying the songs that correspond with those that are on the music rolls. As the song rolls contain five or six different songs one roll will run two weeks.

The pipe organ tone gives the place a different atmosphere than it has ever had before and I consider this one of the best improvements and investments I have ever made.

I can by pushing the starting and stopping buttons follow the pictures nicely and have not had one minute's trouble to date. The audiences have at different times given such overtures as "Poet and Peasant" and "William Tell" good rounds of applause at the finish.

The new music arrived today and I thank you for your promptness and courtesy in shipping same so promptly. With kindest regards, I am Very truly yours,

W. C. Quimby

Zenith Mfg. Co., Cincinnati, O.
Gentlemen:—

Your sign received and well pleased wit it. Think it is the best thing in the wa of a program sign I have ever seen. I is only a matter of time when all th first-class vaudeville and moving pictur theatres will be using a sign of this class as I have figured I can more than sav the cost of your sign in six months. Th letters show up very plain and is surpris ing how quick one can change the wordin in the entire program. In fact the en tire sign can be changed while the were taking the list of acts and pict ures to the printer.

IS YOUR BUSINESS GOOD?

IF NOT, WHY DON'T YOU DO SOMETHING TO MAKE IT BETTER? DO YOU KNOW, MR. EXHIBITOR, THAT THE RESPONSIBILITY IS UP TO YOU, AND IT IS, THEREFORE, NECESSARY FOR YOU TO REDOUBLE YOUR EFFORTS? WHEN YOU SEE THAT BUSINESS IS FALLING OFF, YOU SHOULD FIND OUT THE CAUSE, IF POSSIBLE, AND THEN SET ABOUT TO OVERCOME THE DIFFICULTY. POSSIBLY YOU ARE NOT PLACING BEFORE THE PEOPLE PROPER INDUCEMENTS TO GET THEM INTO YOUR THEATER. POSSIBLY BY CHANGING THE STYLE OF YOUR ADVERTISING, BY USING A MORE MODERN AND UP-TO-DATE SYSTEM WOULD MAKE A DIFFERENCE WITH YOUR BUSINESS, THE SAME AS IT HAS WITH HUNDREDS OF OTHER EXHIBITORS.

Why Don't You Give Us a Trial and See?

The Hallberg Direct Current Economizer

You Did Not Believe I Could Produce the Results, but I Have Been Doing it for Four Years, and Now You are All Waking Up to That Fact.

Read what Mr. Wagner has to say:

Reading, Pa., Jan. 30, 1912.

J. H. Hallberg, Esq.,
New York City.

Dear Sir:—The 110-Volt Direct Current Hallberg Economizer that we are using here is still giving perfect satisfaction, and the only expense we have had in two years was the cost of renewing brushes.

Very truly yours,
"Pictureland"—WM. H. WAGNER.

This speaks for itself, and what I am saving him on electric bills I can do for you, and also improve your light.

THEY HEAR THE POSSE APPROACHING

MELITA'S RUSE

In a saloon brawl Jose is shot, and Pedro, fearing he will be implicated, flees. The sheriff is soon on his trail. Pedro, meeting his sweetheart Melita, tells her of his predicament. Even then the approach of the posse can be heard. She hides Pedro in a barn, hastily dons his coat and hat, and rides furiously to mislead the pursuers. Meanwhile, Pedro's attack on a woman who discovers him in the barn causes his arrest. Melita feigns jealousy, which again fools the sheriff, and by a clever and novel ruse contrives his thrilling escape out of prison to safety across the border line, where she joins him to be made one by the Padre.

THE Foos

Direct connected special Electric Engines operating on Gas, Gasoline, Oil and other low priced liquid fuels

Will make current for your machines, fans and lights—at a cost so low that you can save your entire original investment in a short time—and do it so well right in your own building that your patrons won't know there is an engine around.

Behind a money-saving, money-making engine, we have the facts to prove higher quality of service at a cost 50 to 75 per cent. lower than your present expense for electric current. An actual example of such a plant is a theater operated by an 11 H. P. for several years and to which has been added recently another of 15 H. P.—saving $80 a month on the installation. The Central Station service cost at this theater was $100 a month. The two Foos Engines have been operating at an expense of only $20 a month—saving every year $960. Furthermore, since the Foos Engines were installed, the patrons of this theater are better satisfied. The pictures are better and the current never fails when it is wanted. It gives a better quality of light and does it all without the slightest odor, noise or vibration.

Foos Special Electric Plants are used in many moving picture theaters. The cost of installation is reasonable. They are absolutely fireproof and can be operated without extra assistance. These plants are in no sense experimental. Satisfactory and profitable operation are absolutely assured by the reputation of Foos Engines. Send for Special Electric Bulletin S.E.-98, and ask for all the data you want on plants of this character

THE NATIONAL PROGRAMME

FROM

The Atlantic to the Pacific

The question has gone out, how have we been able to muster such a programme. Capital, modern enterprise and brains actively operating in the art centers of the world is the answer.

Art and Culture is of the Ages

We have gone direct to the root of possibility in our search for the strongest and the best. Every account in our programme has an asset in art culture, brains and money which challenge the criticism of the world. It is upon these things that we have built.

You cannot better the proposition, nor can you equal it; never in the history of any business enterprise were such elements combined to produce results, Upwards of 100,000 negative feet of pictures are reviewed each and every week in the task of selecting

COMING

Billy Quirk is the highest salaried comedian in the film business. He is backed up by an all-star aggregation, which includes Darwin Karr and Lee Beggs. This "big" comedy triumvirate appear in nearly all of the Solax comedies. They are a laugh monopoly. See them.

Our dramatic combination is just as good. Mace Greenleaf and Blanche Cornwall are "real" stars.

Below is the last three-a-week program. The Sunday release will be discontinued so that all of our money and our efforts in the future can be concentrated in perfecting our two-a-week. This is done at a sacrifice in the interest of exchangemen and exhibitors and the public generally.

Scene from "Blighted Lives"

RELEASED SUNDAY, FEBRUARY 25th

His Lordship's White Feather

A nobleman develops a yellow streak when up against the real dangers of the West. His cowardice loses him a sweetheart. One of nature's noblemen shows his true mettle and wins a bride.

RELEASED WEDNESDAY, FEBRUARY 28th

ALGIE, THE MINER

A Billy Quirk comedy. Algie is a "sissy boy" who has as much back-bone as a jelly fish. When Algie falls in love and finds that his sweetheart objects to his "personality" he goes West and after several ludicrous experiences and hard struggles, he becomes a "man." A comedy with strong character portrayals.

RELEASED FRIDAY, MARCH 1st

BLIGHTED LIVES

Charles, a young man in difficulties, appeals to his friend for assistance. His friend, who is his rival, trumps up a plan which sends Charles to the penitentiary. Conscience works havoc with his friend's mind. Although he tries to expiate his offence, his life as well as Charles' is blighted.

IN DIS'A COUNTREE

Angelo Ragone comes from Italy to America to seek fortune, leaving his beautiful young wife and baby behind. Here he works as a laborer and forms the acquaintance of two other laborers and an organ grinder. One night the two companion laborers try to rob the organ grinder, there is a fight, the latter is killed and Angelo knocked senseless. The murderers escape and Angelo is arrested. The wife, her father and child come to America. Bosso, one of the murderers, confesses the crime and the worthy family are united and made happy.

RELEASED THURSDAY, FEBRUARY 22nd, 1912

Length about 1000 feet

HER HEART'S REFUGE

A very pathetic story. A young artist and mutual friend pay attention to a young society girl. She is deeply in love with the artist, but he is luke warm in matters of the heart and eventually becomes infatuated with a beautiful model. He is about to marry the model and the society girl is so sadly stricken that her reason is despaired of. The mutual friend brings the artist back to the afflicted girl and falls in love himself with the model. She, however, refuses him and losing her artist lover seeks consolation in a convent.

RELEASED SATURDAY, FEBRUARY 24th, 1912

Split Reel

POTTERY MAKING IN AMERICA

A very interesting reel. The process of making pottery is fully pictured from kneeding the clay to the finishing, decorating and shipping. One of the wonderful features is the rapidity with which the mechanics and artists work.

WILLIE, THE HUNTER

Willie Tait, a somewhat ladylike member of the Oakland Club, appears one day dressed for a hunting trip. The boys of the club draw the shot from his shells and, securing a bear skin, follow him to have fun. Willie gets frightened and climbs a tree. When he reports a terrible battle with the beast, he gets the merry Ha! Ha!

RELEASED MONDAY, FEBRUARY 26th, 1912

Length about 1000 feet

A MATTER OF BUSINESS

Charles Erskine, a broker, much to his wife's annoyance, has taken out a life policy. Shortly afterwards a financial panic ruins him and he is taken down with sickness. The doctor advises that he be sent South to save his life, but the family have no money. Erskine's little boy hits on a plan and approaches the president of the insurance company, who, seeing the force of the argument, furnishes the money for the trip, thereby saving Erskine's life and the company $10,000 insurance.

"THE STRUGGLE"

MONDAY, FEBRUARY 19th

Lack of moral courage to break away from the evil influences of a stronger mind. A young and courageous wife breaks the spell, frees her husband, making him a better man.

"THE LOVE OF JOHN RUSKIN"

TUESDAY, FEBRUARY 20th

John Ruskin was a great writer and a great man. He preached purity of soul in all things. His ideas of love were strangely expressed in the freedom he gave his wife, when she told him she loved another man.

"HER LAST SHOT"

WEDNESDAY, FEBRUARY 21st

When the home is attacked by Indians, a woman uses all her ammunition but one shot. She fires it at her own child to save it from being taken captive. Her husband arrives with help, and finds her and their child safe.

"CURE FOR POKERITIS"

FRIDAY, FEBRUARY 23rd

A funny game. "Bunny" Sharpe's wife, with the aid of Freddie Dewdrop, surprises the poker fiends, and frightens them so that they promise never to play the game again.

"COWBOY DAMON AND PYTHIAS"

SATURDAY, FEBRUARY 24th

Western honor and friendship. Tried by the crucial test of willingness to die that the other might live. They both live to enjoy the friendship so firmly made in the Grand Canyon of Colorado, where the incidents occurred.

THE HOUSE OF

SELIC

HAS RIGHTLY EARNED ITS TITLE OF

THE FOREMOST MOTION PICTURE PRODUCER OF THE WORLD

TO DISCRIMINATING EXHIBITORS!

¶ The name of Selig is known wherever motion pictures are shown.

¶ The fame of this name has reached the utmost corners of the earth.

¶ Selig success is at once admired and envied by motion picture makers the world over.

¶ Selig Nature Reproductions are acknowledged by exhibitors everywhere to be the high water mark of quality.

¶ The Selig Standard of Excellence is the measuring mark for exhibitors and public alike.

¶ There's a reason—

¶ Selig success is due largely to perfect production facilities.

¶ No maker in the world has more extensive or better equipped properties and organization than that owned and controlled by Selig—the maker extraordinary.

¶ Original themes and unique stories from the pens of the world's best literary talent—Producers, Directors and competent actors, all carefully selected for the purpose—Camera men and technical experts, the best that can be obtained—Specially selected properties, settings and backgrounds—Rigid censorship and strict regard for detail—These are the things that have made Selig quality. This is the combination that lends to Selig Nature Reproductions an atmosphere—an intangible, indescribable something, that differentiates between the truly artistic and the commonplace in motion picture production.

¶ To the exhibitor who is constantly striving to improve the artistic side of his program—to the exhibitor who desires to give to his program a distinctiveness—an individuality that will attract attention, cause comment, and increase business. To such exhibitors The House of Selig is catering—Are you one of these? If so be sure to get each and every one of the four big, full reel, Selig Nature reproductions released each week. Success will follow.

Facts and Comments

AN exhibitor in a small manufacturing town—a type of hundreds of others—runs a theater, which in case of great necessity will hold about seven hundred people. He abhors cheap vaudeville and prides himself on his projection and the order maintained in his place at all times. It is always interesting to hear what men like him, who stand on the firing line and do the yeoman work of the industry, think of the taste and demands of an audience. Such men are close and careful students; if they were not, they could get no return on their investment. We asked him the other day, what his public liked. "Why," said he, "they like good, deep drama, they do not want anything silly." Now "his people" are very far from being an intellectual aristocracy. Most of them are men and women working in factories. When this exhibitor arranges for the showing of a feature film, he has to go into consultation with his operator as to the pay-days in the various big industrial establishments of his town. Himself a plain man without any pretense to culture, he shares the tastes and feelings of his audience and wants "good, deep drama, nothing silly." We have never found a straight picture house where the audience did want something silly or vulgar. We wonder, therefore, where some of the makers of what is called "snappy comedy," snappy being an euphemism for silly, expect to find their audiences. Only those whose perceptions have been addled by cheap vaudeville care for the silly species of "comedy."

THE MOVING PICTURE WORLD cannot let the memorial year of 1912 pass without a word of fitting tribute to the immortal Charles Dickens, whose genius within the past few years has inspired some of the foremost of the American film makers The fact that his inexhaustible imagination, always in the service of right against wrong, has furnished the best of the manufacturers with themes and characters most admirably suited for cinematographic reproduction, is perhaps the most remarkable and accceptable homage that could be paid to the name of the greatest novelist of his age. It shows that the men and women he drew forth from his fancy still live in the affection as well as the memory of millions. The stories and characters of Dickens have by no means been exhausted as materials for the film producer and we cherish the ardent hope that, some time during this memorial year, one of the manufacturers who have shown such astonishing aptitude for filming Dickens, will give us the substance of that rollicking humor which lurks in almost every line of the "Pickwick Papers." The trial of Bardell vs. Pickwick with Sergeant Buzfuz in full blast would be worth looking at. It has often been remarked as exceeding strange that, with the exception of the eccentric Cruikshank, the novelist has had hardly any illustrator of great merit. The moving picture, let us hope, will make up this odd deficiency in good time.

HOW far distant is the day when the name of the scenario writer on a film or on a poster will mean as much for the success of a production as the name of the playwright on the speaking stage? With the keen, continued competition among manufacturers the day may be nearer than we think. There is no reason whatever why a clever playwright of the silent stage may not achieve fame and, having achieved it, why should not his fame attract patronage? We hope to read in some future number of the MOVING PICTURE WORLD that a famous film producer has secured the exclusive services of a famous playwright. We hope to read advertisements, both in these columns and on all kinds of bills and posters, inviting people to see a photoplay written by "the well-known playwrights Jones or Smith, whose short dramas or clever comedies are such prime favorites with the patrons of the moving picture." The manufacturer, no less than the playwright, will profit under such a new order of things.

* * *

BY the sheer weight of its own superior quality the motion picture is ousting its undesirable companion, the cheap act of vaudeville. Audiences are more and more made to realize the howling absurdity of freak vaudeville following in the wake of superb feature films. Take, for instance, a picture like "Brutus," a fair type of hundreds like it. The action on the screen tells a story of great dramatic power; we see masterly acting, a display of consummate art in the setting of the scenes and in the elaboration of every detail that goes to make a play perfect, then while our hearts are still in the grip of the finely developed climax, some "silly kid" act or ancient "musical melange," or raucous "sister team" rushes upon the stage and begins to do its usual worst. The best vaudeville in small doses is all the intelligent public will stand in connection with motion pictures of superior quality. Wherever the present kind of anthropoid vaudeville is inflicted, the horrors of the thing might be mitigated by running the pictures separately. Where this is not thought feasible, some judgment in arranging the order of pictures and acts might be shown. Managers are always safe in assuming that the audience has not a whit less taste and intelligence than they themselves, and any little tribute on the part of the management to the sense of the fitting is always keenly appreciated by the audience.

AN entire page with profuse illustrations is devoted by the Sunday edition of a great metropolitan daily to the possibilities of the moving picture as an educational factor. It is explained in the text of the article that "the dull lecture, which puts the children to sleep," will soon be superseded by the motion picture. The particular film which has moved the admiration of the paper in question is the story of the tenement owner who has been lax in providing sanitary conditions for his tenants and is, in most dramatic fashion, converted to the gospel of cleanliness and sanitation. In the development of the plot of the story the films show the dangers of improper ventilation and defective sanitary arrangements. Thus from all sides and in quarters where it was least expected, come belated but well-deserved words of recognition for the motion picture. Instead of replying to abuse under the spur of momentary indignation, the manufacturers have answered the slanders by improving the quality and enlarging the scope of the picture.

Studio Saunterings

By Louis Reeves Harrison.

AN air of mystery affects one upon entering the portals of the Biograph Studio, like that of an exclusive club or an old manse of Knickerbocker ys. Once greeted by Mr. Daugherty, the atmosphere warmed, but is still fragrant with the spirit of other nes. Mr. Daugherty is a gentleman of the old school, ave and dignified, yet the essence of genial courtesy. e is the friend-maker of the company, attracting all who me to know him well so that they feel an interest in the ganization he has so long and faithfully represented at e point where it touches the outer world. It may readily seen that I have a soft spot in my heart for this gentle-an, although we have disagreed on many occasions.

One night after sitting through an unsatisfactory pic-re show, I made up my mind that I could write better ays than those I saw on the screen. I returned home hd tried to do so. The result was not wholly satisfac-ry. I then went down to Fourteenth Street and intro-uced myself to Mr. Daugherty for the purpose of get-ng a few pointers. He gave me no amateurish sugges-ons, but explained scenario construction so well that I ent home and re-wrote my story according to his ideas d mailed the result. My scenario arrived and was ex-mined that week with hundreds of others. On the fol-wing Monday evening I chanced to meet Mr. Daugherty the Union Square Bijou. "Did you hear from us?" asked. "Bing!" I said to myself, "My scenario has en shot back by pneumatic." Outwardly I preserved e calm of one to whom the worst that could happen as an ordinary occurrence. "We sent you twenty-five ollars," he remarked politely, "and would like to exam-e some more of your work." The floor was solid; I d not go through; I stood there and gasped, "That is couraging!" then I beat it for the Subway entrance. was "encouraging!" and I can imagine that Mr. D. s done much by careful investigation and prompt de-sion to transform story-writers into photo-playwrights fore and since then.

I did not meet the mighty Griffith until after I had opportunity to study many examples of his marvelous ork—he is the greatest of them all when he tries—but found him to be keenly alive to the future possibilities the new art to which he has so materially contributed. e is a wonderful judge of types and free from personal ejudice in making his selections. His productions show fty inspiration mixed with a desire to help the world ong, a trend of thought that is poetic—idealistic, with a rifying and reviving influence upon the audience that n best be excited through tragedy. He may regard an, like Pope, as living in > "Chaos of thought and passion all confused,

> Still by himself abused and disabused;
> Created half to rise and half to fall,
> Great Lord of all things, yet a prey to all."

In other words, he puts human character before us in enes and situations of joy, sorrow, calm or stress, with the interweaving influences of heredity, environment, ve and chance, at work, suffering or struggling, swayed light incident or shaken by the storms of passion, their perfections laid bare, to evolve their own destiny or, it, be evolved. This is a Balzacian method of telling e human story, and goes beyond the limits of the ordi-ry stage drama into the realms of fiction, as could be ne in no other pictural art than the one to which Mr. riffith lends his efforts in making the photoplay a true ortrayal of human existence.

Managerial thrift naturally turns to commercial profit as the aim and end of all effort, but I cannot believe that either Mr. Griffith or Mr. Daugherty are responsible for some of the anemic comedies I have seen during recent months bearing the honored name of the Biograph Company. Those I have in mind may seem of value to exhibitors who estimate a photo-comedy by a few guffaws in a mixed audience, but there is always an easily pleased few in front who laugh and clap loudly—the noisy ten per cent. who inquire at the box-office if there are any cowboy plays on, and represent themselves rather than the intelligent majority. I blame exhibitors not at all for estimating patrons of their shows below rather than above the average—they have no gauge on the quiet class—but they are injuring their own business by urging an inferiority of quality upon producers who made motion-picture shows possible by enlisting the interest of all classes. Biograph comedies were at one time delightful and, if those of to-day fail to provide diversion I can only ascribe the lowering of their characteristics to extraneous influences.

When I remarked to Mr. Griffith that I believed in a theater especially for children, his brief approval, "That is the idea," indicated to me that he had been looking into the future. Subsequent conversation on the same subject confirmed the impression, and he readily acknowledged that the coming generation, quite as tender and pliable as we were when in the formative stage, is responsive to plays of healthy sentiment and is keenly critical of whatever is false or maudlin. But I have no doubt that the Biograph Company is affected as are nearly all others, by comment from showmen and renting agencies.

Photodramas are written and produced for audiences numbering a tremendous percentage of our entire population, and the best interests of those who present plays on the screen are served when stories are not only entertainingly told, but fertilize modern fields of thought. The way to pack the little theaters, to draw intelligent people as well as lowbrows and shockheads, to interest children of enlightened parents and their mature relatives and friends, to reach advance sales with a line at the box-office, is to insist on a quality easily visible among the best periodicals circulating into the millions throughout our country.

There are a lot of old showmen in this land of ours who played to the gallery so long that they emptied the theaters and would have starved themselves if the "movies" had not appeared. These managerial relics hurried back into the exhibition business and they are now urging high-class producers to play to the galleries for the sake of a limited few on par with themselves, though the entire country has taken giant strides since their day. I wish they would let men of specialized talent like Mr. Griffith alone, let men who know how to foreshadow practical results while catering to the desire for recreation in the best sense of that word, provide us with pictures according to their highest ideals.

Criticism has always preceded the perfected performance of any work, hence anything I may say to secure moving pictures that will be a national force in developing the life of the people and developing with the people, proceeds from a desire to see these plays supply all the people with what they crave, a form of entertainment they can follow with delight to better conditions than those we now enjoy.

The Campaign for a Modern Sunday

By W. Stephen Bush.

WHEN the Moving Picture World some weeks ago suggested the starting of an active and intelligent campaign for the freedom of the moving picture entertainment on Sundays and offered to supply exhibitors with suitable materials for arguments before legislative committees or local authorities, the response was so emphatic and general, that it was thought best to place the materials in the columns of this paper, where they will be handy to exhibitors at all times.

The first thing to consider, then, it seems, is the present state of the Sunday law. According to the letter of the law no Sunday entertainments can be held legally and without restriction in any state, except the state of Louisiana. Practically the statutes everywhere embody the Puritanical idea, that the man was made for the Sabbath. In agitating for a proper moving picture exhibition on Sunday we must emphasize the contrary opinion, voiced by the founder of the Christian religion. He declared in the plainest language that the Sabbath was made for man. The opposition to the legalizing of a suitable and restricted Sunday exhibition will generally come from the clergy and church members. We shall make a fatal mistake at the very outset, if we do not credit these opposing elements with good faith. As a rule they honestly fight for what they believe to be a sacred principle and a tradition of the fathers and to flout their opinions and ridicule them will bring us nowhere. We must seek to convince them by sound and solid arguments.

In the first place we must, in order to get a hearing for our arguments, put forward the act that we do not want to legalize the moving picture entertainment on Sunday, except with certain restrictions and upon certain conditions. The general run of the moving picture program is one thing and the programs to be shown on Sundays are quite another thing. This distinction with a difference cannot be emphasized too much. It must be made plain that we are agitating for programs and conditions, which thoroughly differentiate the Sunday entertainment from the average moving picture show, though the standard of the latter is higher to-day than it ever was before.

Wherein, then, does this great difference consist? First of all, in the character of the reels which it is proposed to run on Sundays. The catalog of educational films issued by the General Film Company contains an excellent and very large list, something like 400 pictures, which will pass any special Sunday censorship without any trouble. It is to be hoped that the Independent manufacturers will prepare a similar catalogue. There is no lack of materials, as even a cursory view of the Independent releases for the last three months will clearly show. It may be pointed out that churches and schools show special picture programs on Sunday and that, on such occasions, there is either a stated price of admission or a collection. It is probable that the promise of the exhibitors to devote part of the proceeds taken in on Sunday to some charitable purpose will greatly aid in getting the desired Sunday concession. In Massachusetts and other New England States Sunday entertainments, consisting of moving pictures, are allowed whenever the police sanction the proposed program and the entertainment is held under the auspices of some reputable charitable institute or organization. It might help some if, in addition to moving pictures, suitable slides were shown at the Sunday entainment, because stereopticon slides may now be shown everywhere on Sunday, where they form part of a lecture, and the slides will introduce the moving pictures, the former being familiar as part of Sunday entertainments.

It would seem that the law to-day allows the giving of a lecture on Sunday anywhere, if no direct charge of admission is made. These lectures are frequently illustrated by slides, and the question may well be asked, why would it be improper or illegal to illustrate them by moving pictures. Let us take the following case: An exhibitor announces that he will show to his patrons a series of educational pictures on Sunday. He announces further that these pictures will be the subject of a lecture. No admission will be charged, but the entertainments to be confined to his regular patrons. He has a perfect right, it would seem, to issue a card to his patrons, inviting them to attend this entertainment. He may make his own conditions as to the issuing of these cards. He may issue a coupon for, say, every ten admissions on week days, and in return for a certain number of coupons he may send this card of invitation. It is difficult to see on what grounds the authorities could interfere with such an entertainment, even if they had the desire to interfere. If there were any interferences, a clean test case could be prepared on the undisputed facts and a ruling could be obtained from the highest court, if necessary. Here the benefits of organization become apparent. A society of exhibitors could prepare such a test case, and by sharing the expenses of possible litigation make the burden light for each individual member.

Litigation should, however, not be resorted to until all means of persuasion have been utterly exhausted. The press to-day is in most communities in favor of a rational observance of Sunday, the power of the picture for good is coming to be more widely recognized, and I have no doubt whatever that most papers would be glad to give exhibitors all the space they want for their arguments. The catalogue, mentioned above, would be very useful in this connection also, and would, we think, be gladly printed as an item of general interest. If necessary, exhibitors should be willing to give Sunday exhibitions at first without any admission whatever. Such a course would break the ice of prejudice and get the people used to the idea of a proper Sunday entertainment. In due course, and with public sentiment in their favor, the exhibitors would be in a position to charge admission in some form or other. It would be well to invite teachers or other competent persons to lecture on the Sunday program of pictures. That would be calculated to make a breach in the wall of ignorance and prejudice.

Not the least important argument in favor of a rational observance of Sunday and a proper Sunday entertainment, consisting of moving pictures, is the fact that such Sunday entertainments exist to-day in many cities and States. In most of the large cities of the Middle West there are moving picture entertainments on Sunday. The most notable instances of Sunday exhibitions in the East are to be found in New York City and in Atlantic City. It ought not to be difficult to get the opinion of Mayor Gaynor, who is a sincere friend of the moving picture, as to the propriety of such entertainments. Common sense tells us that the dangers of an abuse of this form of entertainment on Sunday are greater in the City of New York than anywhere else. There is always a large floating population in the city, strangers from all parts of the country, most of them on pleasure bent, and not too particular about the intellectual nature of it. Rowdyism and disorder, the greatest poi-e arguments against a Sunday exhibition, always exist a cosmopolitan city. Notwithstanding all these dangers hd drawbacks the Sunday entertainments here are at- nded by order and decency, and there is no rowdyism nd no vulgarity. This is all the more valuable as an gument in favor of a Sunday entertainment, because iere is no effort whatever to suit the programs to the haracter of the day. There are no special Sunday pro- rams, there is no lecture, no restriction or regulation of ny kind in respect to the nature of the first day of the eek. Where the Sunday entertainment prospers under ich conditions and gives no offence whatever, it is sure- fair to assume that it will be altogether acceptable to e best classes of the community, where it is surrounded proper safeguards, such as a special control and cen- rship of pictures to be exhibited on Sunday.

From our own experience we know how easily people e converted to a proper Sunday exhibition if they are roperly approached. The best kind of a missionary in is connection is The Moving Picture World. To any of the best people in a community the moving pic- re was almost an unknown quantity until they saw a py of this paper. Then their interest and enthusiasm as aroused, and seeing the possibilities for good they estirred themselves in lending all the aid in their power. ending copies of The Moving Picture World, to- ether with the catalogue heretofore mentioned, to prom- ent people in the community and to the press is not the ast effective form of campaigning for a liberal and mod- rn Sunday.

In the next issue we propose to print a draft of a bill galizing the Sunday exhibition of moving pictures. he draft has been prepared by an attorney of legislative xperience, and we believe its main fatures can be incor- oratd into any bill which is to be submitted to the legis- ature of any State in the Union.

QUALITY IMPROVES.

Facts and figures furnish us with ample proof that film ianufacturers frequently lose money on their productions r one of two reasons: Either the sales have fallen below a rofit-making point on the special production or else the ianufacturer has spent too much time and money on the lm to come out even on the average sale. Hitherto this tter condition has not handicapped the independent manu- icturer to any appreciable extent, whatever may be said of e former, but in the march of progress both conditions ow confront some of the manufacturers unless the trade esponds with more liberal orders. We have elsewhere re- rred to certain independent reels the sales of which in this ountry will not cover the cost of the negative. The lavish- ess of money and effort, however, is not without result and ertain forthcoming independent releases will prove that the ewer American manufacturers are competing for positions the front rank of the film producers of the world.

We have previously referred to the Bison-101 two-reel eries, the first of which goes out this week. Of the four iat we have seen we can truthfully say that each was better han the one before—better in story, better in photography nd better in construction. A "Bison-101" day ought to be a ig drawing day for the exhibitor. But this reference to im- roved independent quality is chiefly inspired by a private iew of the forthcoming two-reel subject, "The Power Be- ind the Throne," with the well-known actress, Mildred Holland, in the leading role. In this film the Powers Com- any has set a standard for themselves that will be hard to ollow. Sumptuously staged, richly costumed, beautifully hotographed, cleverly acted and with dignity, this film shows hat can be done by a determined effort to produce the best. ut the best costs money and the exhibitor and the exchange ian cannot hope for the best unless they encourage the ianufacturers by extra orders for such subjects.

Asking Manager Evans if the Powers Company intended ow to put out one such film a week, he replied: "One such lm a week would bankrupt any concern in a short time with he present restricted market." So we have to hand it to . A. P. for his enterprise in engaging a leading actress and er entire stock company who acquitted themselves as well efore the camera as they have so often done in the same lay behind the footlights.

Playing the Pictures

By George Webber Vail.

ONLY a few years ago, the moving picture pianist whose repertoire consisted of three or four waltzes for "heavy" films and as many two-steps for the "comics," was regarded as fully equipped for his business. It can be truthfully said that picture playing has made some progress since those first crude beginnings; nevertheless it is still much more of a trade than a profession. Exhibitors have learned, by bitter experience, that the public demands good pictures, properly projected by skilled operators, but these same exhibitors (or a great majority of them) persist in ignoring another public demand for adequate incidental music. Is it not ridiculous to expect from a ten-dollar-a-week pianist the intelligence and musical culture indispensable to one who is called upon to interpret a great feature reel? It most certainly is, and the exhibitor who, while priding himself on the high quality of his films and the skill of his operators, is content to have the ears of his patrons assailed by a dreary waltz, thumped out by a bored young lady who meanwhile reads a novel—such an exhibitor will some day wake up to find his business in the hands of an up-to-date rival.

Ninety per cent. of the moving picture theaters are still content to furnish music that is an insult to the intelligence of their patrons. Here and there we find an exhibitor who demands good music and is willing to pay well for it. To the comparatively few real musicians who have responded to this call and who now find themselves almost alone in a new but fascinating vocation, this brief article is addressed.

How often we musicians who take our work seriously would welcome the opportunity of talking over with some fellow-student the perplexing problems which so many pictures offer to their interpreters. Would it not be of enormous advantage, not only to ourselves as individuals, but to the whole art of picture playing if every one of us who has made a special study of certain branches of the work or who has discovered musical compositions which he finds especially useful, were to make this information public through the columns of the World?

In the hope that mothers will follow, the writer has contributed a partial list, roughtly classified, of the compositions which are of the greatest and most permanent value to him in his daily playing of the pictures.

"The Danites"—A Revival

Famous Drama Made Popular by McKee Rankin, Now Staged by Him for Selig—A Two-Part Feature.

Reviewed by Jas. S. McQuade.

"THE DANITES," a feature subject in two reels, by Selig, will be released on February 19 and 20—the first reel on Monday and the second on Tuesday.

The older generation of theater-goers will remember the early dramatic presentations of "The Danites," in the 70's, with McKee Rankin as Sandy and Mrs. McKee Rankin as Nancy Williams. Even to that generation the reproduction of the scenes and character types around the days of '49 had a fascination that immediately carried the play into popular favor, and for many years its success was phenomenal. Its fame extended to London, where McKee Rankin and his company repeated the success made in America.

To the younger generation the reproduction of the drama in moving pictures will doubtless revive its old popularity. The long train of prairie schooners winding over the plains and through mountain defiles, the rugged types of men intent on fortune in the far West, and the dangers on all sides from Indians and other foes will recreate the atmosphere of pioneer days. Never on any stage has been shown such magnificent vistas of rugged scenery, with ridge behind ridge fading into dim perspective.

McKee Rankin was retained by Mr. Selig to write the scenario, and the production, while under the supervision of the late Francis Boggs, had the further advantage of being guided by the suggestions of the veteran actor-manager, who steered the drama to success many years ago. It is not, therefore, too much to expect perfect costuming and excellent types of the characters in the story. Those prairie schooners, with their canvas-walled sides, drawn by oxen with heavy wooden yokes, are examples of the painstaking bestowed on details. They are accurate duplications of the old-time wagons, and were specially made for the occasion.

The characters have been excellently cast. Sandy, the big-framed, honest miner, is impersonated to the life by Hobart Bosworth. The scene showing his nervousness, while attempting to pop the question to the schoolma'm, is a f illustration of restrained acting. Miss Eugene Besserer, the widow, makes the scene well nigh perfect. Miss Be Harte, who appears in the role of Nancy Williams, reta our interest and sympathy throughout. Such memora parts as the Parson, Limber Tim, the Judge, and Chink all in capable hands, as are also Hickman and Carter, two Danites who seek the extermination of the Willia family.

The first reel shows the waylaying of the Williams fam on their way West, by the Danites, disguised as India Nancy and her small brother, Georgie, escape massacre, a when this is discovered, two of the Danites are pledged follow them to the death. Nancy and her brother succe in joining another emigrant train, of which Sandy is t leader. The two Danites disguise themselves and also j in the train.

At a certain spot in the journey Georgie is shot by one the Danites. Nancy endeavors to find the murderer, h fails. Then, to save her own life, she cuts her hair a dressing in a youth's clothes, becomes Billy Piper.

The second reel opens with a scene in a Western can which shows the preparations that have been made to rece the new teacher. It is the impression that the teacher is man, and all are astonished when a charming widow ste from the incoming wagon. Our old friend, Sandy, is sm ten at first sight and, after long heart-burning, marries h

Billy Piper joins the camp and her sex is discovered the wife of Sandy. The two Danites appear on the sce and suspect that Billy Piper is Nancy. In the end, throu their cunning and persecutions, Nancy dies of heart failu

Motion Picture Exhibitors' League

OF AMERICA.

CHICAGO LEAGUE ANNUAL DUTCH LUNCH.

Members of Illinois Branch No. 2 Hold Second Annual Gathering at Hotel Sherman, Feb. 6th—Large Attendance and Harmonious Meeting Recorded.

THE second annual social entertainment of the Chicago Moving Picture League of America, Illinois branch No. 2, was held in the banquet hall of the Hotel Sherman, Tuesday night, Feb. 6. The handsomely engraved invitations sent out styled the affair as the "Annual Dutch Lunch," the hour being fixed at 11:00 p.m. It was half an hour later, however, before the members and their guests assembled in force, and the midnight hour had pealed some time before the well-ordered menu had received due attention.

The main object of the banquet was to secure the attendance of exhibitors who had not joined the league, and acquaint them with the aims and benefits of membership. The secondary object was to get in still closer touch with exchange men and manufacturers and to establish more clearly in the minds of all the interdependence of each of the three great departments of the moving picture industry on the others.

The unwritten law for the occasion was harmony. There was not a discordant note during the meeting. There were several speeches that possessed much practical value for exhibitors and exchanges, and I was impressed by the hearty good feeling existing between exhibitors and exchange men. The latter acknowledged, in all sincerity, that Illinois branch No. 2 had brought about a more cordial relationship between them and their customers than had ever before existed.

The wide-awake members of the entertainment committee sprung a pleasant surprise on members and guests. In order to vary the monotony of speechmaking, between every speech or two, entertaining singing numbers by talent from various theaters, or by courtesy of music-publishing firms in the city, were introduced. These divertisements were hugely enjoyed by all present, as the numerous encores showed. Indeed at this point, warmest congratulations are due C. L. Hull, L. Gelder, L. H. Frank, C. C. Whelan and F. O. Nielsen, entertainment committee, for the admirable manner in which the entire program for the evening was arranged.

One could not help feeling proud of Illinois branch No. 2, as he looked out on the men and ladies present, and one could not help feeling also that the league movement, so far at least, as this branch is concerned, is in wise, conservative hands, and that it will work for the uplift and lasting good of the moving picture industry. Having put their hands to the plough, the members of Illinois branch No. 2 must continue to run their furrows deep and straight, so that the harvests of future years may be rich and golden.

It was about 12:30 a.m. when President George Henry called the meeting to order. Suffering from a severe cold, he asked to be excused from making a speech, and appointed C. C. Whelan toastmaster. The latter then called on F. O. Nielsen, a member of the executive committee, to make an address of welcome.

"The object in forming this association was to promote the business which we all represent," said Mr. Nielsen. "Furthermore, it was for the promotion of greater harmony between the exhibitor, the exchange man, the manufacturer and the patron. I think that since this organization has been formed, which is less than nine months ago, the object originally aimed at has been fairly attained. The picture business, as a whole, is on a better basis. The feeling between the exhibitor and the exchanges is much better than it was nine months ago, and the business, as a whole, is on a more satisfactory basis than it was nine months ago. The object of this association is to place the moving picture business on a sound business basis and to run it on business principles."

R. R. Nehls, manager of the American Film Mfg. Co., was the next speaker. "It gives me great pleasure to be here as representative of the American Film Mfg. Co.," began Mr. Nehls. "I regret that Mr. Hutchinson is not present, owing to temporary illness contracted during an extended trip to the Coast. Our company fully recognizes its dependence on the exhibitors. There is an interdependence, if you please. The manufacturer listens to the voice of the exhibitors; the exhibitor, in turn, tries to catch the voice of the public. The manufacturer, therefore, directs his efforts in channels that will lead to productions that are desirable. Our efforts, in the manufacturing line, as you know, have covered but a limited period. We are scarcely over a year old, just a trifle older than this association. You have made great strides; you have formed a splendid and a representative body. We also have made tremendous strides in our efforts and much of our success is due to the hearty co-operation of exhibitors. Our field is not a limited one. It is a large field. We depend upon the exhibitors to keep us in close touch with public requirements. When we put out a film we watch and listen and wait for an expression of opinion. The expressions we have received thus far have been so favorable that we have continued in our lines of Western productions. We are confident that we have the approval of those showing Independent films. If an exhibitor will not keep in close touch with public requirements, his business will fall away, and if he does not meet public requirements—the requirements of his own particular clientele—his business will build up. I am sure that our company appreciates fully the hearty co-operation it has received from you, and I am glad to see that we are united for one common good, the good of the moving picture industry."

At this juncture, telegrams were read from the National president, M. A. Neff, and from C. C. Christianson, National secretary, regretting inability to be present. Mr. Neff was engaged that night with the Indiana Exhibitors' League, at Indianapolis. Letters were also read from William N. Selig and F. C. Aiken, who were prevented from attending. Mr. Selig was in the hospital at the time and Mr. Aiken was absent in Omaha on business.

W. R. Daniels, president of the National Water-Proof Film Co., followed with a witty speech that created frequent outbursts of laughter. He said in part: "I presume you have all seen the picture of my progenitor, Daniel, standing in a den of lions. As I face the lions in the film business this evening, I gain confidence by the knowledge that none of you are hungry; but, for all that, I am sure I do not wear a complacent look. As shop talk is barred, I will talk about eggs. When you buy eggs, you always talk about their condition. You never asked when they were released. In selling eggs, no matter how fresh they may be, you do not advertise them as first-run, neither do you ask for their return in seven months: for the checking of such returns would be bad. Eggs are like people: sometimes a very thin shell covers a very bad interior. There may be some bad eggs in the film business, but I am glad to say that I do not see any of them here this evening.

"The producer of eggs, like the producer of moving picture films, always has in mind the setting. Eggs are all made waterproof, showing the good sense of those who make them. There are certain trade-marks of film manufacturers which remind us of eggs. There is one which looks like a dropped egg, and I am sure that if Bilkalem Wright were here, he would admit it. The bee is a very prolific little insect and one queen bee will lay several thousand eggs in its life. Perhaps that is why the American Biograph chose 'AB' for its trade mark. The Diamond trade mark contains a letter which occurs in 'eggs,' and some connection is thereby established. The Edison signature has even a more direct connection, for was it not originally written with a quill? Likewise, the Indian head, which is decorated with feathers, which, after all, are the products of eggs. And then there are Liberty Bell films, whose trade-mark signifies the hatching of liberty. The Vitagraph, too, is decidedly a product of eggs—a cross between the Plymouth Rock and the American eagle. Then there is the Western Company, whose name is pronounced 'Melay.' Is it not also connected with the egg? Lastly, there is the 'Red Rooster,' which is a direct product of the egg, if are sure it is not a capon. All Italian marks are made from t guinea hen, and there are other foreign marks, some of whi are imported. To use the language of our German friends, th are too 'kleine' to be talked about. Nor must I omit t 'Duck' mark, which always stands for clean running."

I. Van Ronkel, manager of the General Film Company's bran at 429 South Wabash, spoke a few words on the relations th should exist between the exhibitor and the exchange man. said in part: "I know all of you are thinking about the large l ters A. B. S. as you see me before you. As you know, tho letters stand for America's Best Service. I can candidly say th the greatest interest and the greatest pleasure I have experienc in the film business have been confined to the last eight mont during the time this association has been in existence. I b lieve that the greatest troubles exhibitors have had have be with exchange managers, who have been interested in pictu theaters. I believe that cordial co-operation should exist b tween the exchange manager and the exhibitor. As for myse I am always ready to listen to suggestions that customers m make. I assure you I will appreciate such suggestions."

Smiling Tom Norman, in charge of the booking departme of the Laemmle Exchange, was called upon for a speech in t absence of Carl Laemmle and Maurice Fleckles. The former taking a rest in the country and the latter was suffering fro indisposition. Mr. Norman showed that the Imp subjects we up to the requirements, and that the strictest care was bei taken to preserve uniform quality and commendable subjec Speaking of the Laemmle Exchange, Mr. Norman said that t entire force was, individually and collectively, in hearty acco and co-operation with Chicago's Moving Picture Exhibito League. He desired the association to know that Mr. Fleckl though absent, was with them in heart and spirit and alwa ready to furnish them the best service possible.

John Rock, of the Vitagraph Company, was called to t rostrum and began by saying that he had just about three wor to say. He thanked the organization for the kind invitation e tended, and expressed himself as immensely pleased with the pr ceedings. He also expressed the hope that the future of t organization would be a big success, and he promised to c operate always with the exhibitors, no matter with what li of the film business he was connected.

C. C. Whelan, the genial toastmaster, delighted those prese by announcing that he did not want to force anything on the which they did not want to hear; but, as he believed it to the consensus of opinion that he should sing a song, he wou do so. Then he brought forth much applause by singing "Silv Threads Among the Gold."

J. A. Alcock, a member of the executive committee of the o ganization, followed. "I am an egg; but not the kind of egg th Mr. Daniels spoke about. I am a good egg. This organizati started with eight members about eight months ago and now h over three hundred on its roll. Those of you present who are n members of our organization should immediately join. It numbers we need; not your money, but your support."

Mr. Eisner, in charge of the General Film Co.'s branch at South Wabash, and Mr. Baum, in charge of the G. F. Co's bran on North Clark St., followed with short speeches.

Stanley Twist, of the publicity department of the Selig Pol scope Co., reminded the members of the League of the importan of booming the convention to be held in Chicago next Augu "You had better begin right now," said Mr. Twist. "Every e hibitor, exchange man and manufacturer should put forth the best efforts to make that meeting one of the most enthusiastic a successful ever held by those connected with the film business."

It was reserved for Sam Schiller, of the Schiller Theater, to s a few words on "magic." "Magic is the same as moving picture began Sam. "No one can learn, either, unless he starts from t ground up. Besides, films are magic and they have a magical fluence on the public. I was one of the first moving picture e hibitors in Chicago. I consider that the programs now offered a too long. I remember, in the early days, when two 300-foot su jects packed the house. I remember also when I put together thr subjects, totaling 1,148 feet, and advertised a great big triple sho Now, some of us are running as many as four and five films a two and three illustrated songs, for five cents. That means gi ing almost a two hours' show for that money. What is the r sult? People who came out to spend perhaps 20, 30 or 40 cents going from theater to theater only spend 5 cents as they have h enough for that money." He strongly advised the organizati to get together and agree upon the maximum number of films be shown for five cents, and enforce observance of the agreeme

William J. Sweeney, treasurer of the Association, was the l speaker. "Let us have a few words about the finances of t League," said Mr. Sweeney. "We started about nine months a with the sum of eight dollars. Now our treasury is in a m flourishing condition. I wish to say that within the last two wee one hundred and forty-one theaters, nearly all of them owned members of this League, contributed to the charity fund of

y. The total amount turned over to Mayor Harrison, yesterday, is $3,200. This, I think, is a pretty good showing, especially ring the hard times resulting from the prolonged severe eather. Though all the speakers were witty this evening, I am rry to see that no one has commented upon the well-dressed dies present. It speaks well for the Association that we have e ladies here and also for the business. I think it makes our eetings better in every way. In closing, I desire to express the sh that all exhibitors present, who are not members, would join e Association. If there are any here who would like to join w, if they come up and tell it to Sweeney, he is here to see e fun."

Joseph Hopp of the Standard Film Exchange and Mr. Tischart the Chicago Censor Board also spoke.

The singers who kindly offered their services during the eveng's entertainment were: Joe MacAuley, Miss Flo Jacobson, iss Dinah Julian, Mrs. Burman, Sam Herman and C. C. Whelan.

Among the exhibitors and guests present were: Mr. and Mrs. urman, Mrs. C. E. Cooke, Mrs. E. Fitch, Mrs. S. Henry, Mrs. Hack, Mrs. I. Mertsky, Mrs. I. Stevens, Mrs. O. L. Alzinger, rs. Emma T. INDIANA EXHIBITORS' LEAGUE MEETING.

A MEETING of the Indiana Exhibitors' League was held at the Denison Hotel in Indianapolis on February 6. About one hundred proprietors and managers of motion picture theaters in the State were present, as was M. A. Neff, of Cincinnati, Ohio, president of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America. The meeting was the first of the Indiana organization since it was organized last December.

There are already about one hundred and fifty members of the Indiana association and it is believed that within a short time practically every legitimate motion picture theater in the State will be represented in the organization. One of the important steps taken at the meeting was a decision to hold meetings every six weeks until the League is more thoroughly organized.

These meetings are to be held at a different city until every part of the State is covered, and the next meeting will he held in Fort Wayne. The next annual meeting will be held in Indianapolis, by which time, it is believed, the Indiana organization will be one of the strongest of its kind in the country.

The meeting was devoted largely to a discussion of trade topics and how the business might be improved. Intense interest was shown and action was outlined that it is believed will be of immense value to the motion picture business of the State. President Dickson, of Winchester, presided at the meeting.

One of the matters that is to be undertaken by the League is an effort to induce all motion picture theaters to put on uniform performances. It seemed to be the sentiment of the meeting that two reels of pictures and an illustrated song is sufficient for a five cent admission.

Another step decided on was that film exchanges should be discouraged from supplying films to theaters that give motion picture performances only on Saturday or Sunday. It was shown that at Warsaw one theater is putting on a Saturday afternoon performance, consisting of six reels and several illustrated songs for five cents, which practically draws all patronage on Saturday from the legitimate moving picture houses. The theater in question has a seating capacity of one thousand, which was said to be one of the reasons why the theater could put on such an extensive performance for five cents.

During the meeting a grievence committee was appointed to call on several down town Indianapolis motion picture houses, which are believed to be giving too extensive a performance for five cents. Some of these places are giving four or five reels of pictures at a performance. One of the houses has a pipe organ and another has an orchestra. It is impossible for many of the smaller downtown houses to meet such competition and as a result several of them are losing money.

A resolution was adopted unanimously to the effect that it was the sense of the League that members of the League should withdraw their patronage from any film exchange that furnishes films to other than legitimate motion picture houses, and that if Indianapolis film exchanges persisted in so doing, another Independent exchange should be invited to Indianapolis.

The safety of motion picture theaters was discussed at length at the afternoon session. John J. Walsh, chief inspector of the Indiana department of inspection, said that unless vigorous steps were taken by the motion picture house proprietors themselves to supply every safeguard for their places, the next session of the Indiana Legislature would doubtless enact a law so stringent that many of the present houses would be put out of business. He suggested that the Indiana League take the matter up and enact a bill providing safeguards and attempt to have it passed.

"I must admit there is no law at this time governing motion picture theaters," said Mr. Walsh. "The only way we can reach places that are unsafe is to have them declared a public nuisance and closed. Of course, if anything besides a strictly moving picture performance is given, we can reach them under the State theater law. If you do not take the initial step to provide safeguards for your patrons, you are going to find that a law will be enacted compelling you to locate your places on a corner lot and with practically the same requirements that are demanded of theaters. You should have plenty of exits and should not permit the crowding of your aisles."

William Hamm, of Linton, said it appeared to him that every one had a tendency to "knock" and jump on the moving picture theaters. He said there had been much "knocking" against his place, although he had two five-foot exits in front and a large exit in the rear. He said there was a theater in Linton which was not provided with water curtains and in other respects did not comply with the theater law, yet nothing had been said in regard to it.

Mr. Walsh said that his department had been in existence only since July and that of course it had been impossible, thus far, to cover every part of the State. He said, however, that this department had not and would not discriminate against anyone, and that all, whether motion picture houses or theaters, would have to comply with the law.

Robert Lieber, of the General Film Exchange, Indianapolis, said that he believed the League had much important work before it. He said the motion picture business was yet in its infancy and that the motion picture people, for some time to come, would find it necessary to carry on a vigorous campaign of education. He said it would be surprising to learn how large a proportion of the Indiana population had never been inside of a motion picture theater.

He suggested that only the best class of films should be shown and said it was the height of folly for a place to try to show a Western film every day, because the patrons would get too much of such films and after a while would not be interested in them.

"It was only a few years ago that all of the cheap theaters in the country were giving nothing but melodrama," he said, "but the people got tired of it and now melodramas are much in the minority. The people must be educated. It was only a short time ago that I spoke to a gathering of Indianapolis school teachers and showed a number of films I thought would interest them.

"Some of the teachers said they were surprised at the high quality of the films I had shown and said they were the equal of the Lyman Howe exhibitions. They were further surprised when I told them the Lyman Howe exhibitions were nothing more than a collection of films that had been shown in most of the five cent houses in the country."

Mr. Neff spoke of the necessity of motion picture houses placing their performances on the highest moral plane and of safeguarding their patrons. He said that in Ohio the motion picture men are examining the houses themselves and are putting up cards side by side with those issued by the State, showing that the house is safe and that the safety of the patrons is guaranteed.

A lunch was served for the members during the evening and an interesting night session was held. It is probable that the League meetings in the future will occupy two days' time as it has been found impossible to transact all of the business in one day.

WEST VIRGINIA EXHIBITORS' MEETING.

Arrangements have been made by the National officers of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America to meet the exhibitors of West Virginia at Parkersburg, February 28, to organize a state league. Every exhibitor in the state of West Virginia is cordially invited to attend this meeting.

The meeting will be called to order at 10 o'clock, by the National president, M. A. Neff. The National secretary, C. M. Christenson, and several other exhibitors are expected to be present. Nearly half of the states are now organized and belong to the league. This getting together of the exhibitors is for the purpose of mutual co-operation and protecting their interests, as an injury to one is the concern of all.

The purpose of the organization is for the uplift and advancement of the motion picture business. We want every exhibitor in West Virginia that possibly can to come and bring his wife with him; a plate will be reserved for her. At night a high-class vaudeville and feature pictures will be given and a big banquet—all free. Let every West Virginia exhibitor remember the date, February 28, Parkersburg, W. Va.

M. A. Neff.
President M. P. E. L. of America.

HUDSON COUNTY EXHIBITORS ORGANIZE.

The exhibitors of Hudson County, N. J., have once m arisen to resent the usurpations of legislative power, and are g- ting together for self-protection and a betterment of trade c- ditions. The ultimate object of the newly formed Hud County Exhibitors Association is to perfect a state organiza that will be a forcible living example of the well known tr that in union there is strength. At tthe present time there only a few towns in the State that have local organizations w are represented in the embryo state association.

The Hudson County exhibitors realize that Rome was built in a day. It is their intention to profit by the mistakes previous organizations by proceeding carefully and with c logic to build a structure from the ground up instead of fr the pinnacles downward. They are fully aware that from mod beginnings strong organizations have grown, and all the stron for their natural growth. To this end the Hudson County I- hibitors invite all picture theater managers within their scope join with them in this movement. They want to hear also fr all local organizations within the state, no matter how large small, and whether they have axes to grind immediately or r The method this time is to be determined, and guided by c reason and definite purpose; patient of delay, with full co- dence in the ultimate success of well laid plans.

At a recent meeting the following officers were elected: Helflich, President; S. Liptak, Vice-President; John C. Gerri Treasurer; G. A. Robinson, Secretary, 734 Demott St., West H boken, N. "SEALED LIPS" (Solax).

Another attempt has been made to introduce the Rom Catholic confessional in a picture story. The subject is delicate one; how well the Solax players have handled will depend upon the point of view. This is what they s of the picture:

"The story picturesquely deals with the sacredne solemnity and inviolability of the confessional. It contr verts pointedly but humanely, many of the aspersions ca upon this ritual. Father Hartley Steele, who is a Cathol preacher, almost sacrifices his life defending the altar of t confessional."

CHICAGO LETTER.

By Jas. S. McQuade.

THE City Council of Chicago amended certain sections of the Code of 1911, in January last, providing for the confiscation of immoral moving picture films, a fee for the inspection of films by the Bureau of Censorship, and the punishment of any person putting objectionable films into circulation.

If a picture, for which a permit is sought, is immoral or obscene, the general superintendent of police shall refuse to grant such permit, but an appeal may be made to the Mayor whose action in the matter will be final. In case a permit is refused for a film it will be unlawful for any person, firm or corporation to lease or transfer it to any exhibitor of moving pictures within the city. In every case where an objectionable film has been refused a permit, if put into circulation within the city it shall be confiscated, and the person, firm or corporation putting it into circulation shall be fined not less than $50 nor more than $200 for each offense.

The fee for permits granted by the Censor Bureau has been fixed at fifty cents for each permit, payable to the city collector, before the issue of the permit. The amended ordinance is to take effect on or about February 15.

Sergeant O'Connor, who has charge of the Censor Bureau, states that the chief reason for charging a permit fee is to prevent the misuse of permits. As many as fifteen permits are sometimes issued for a film, and, owing to carelessness, they get lost or misplaced. This means extra work and expense for the bureau. Henceforth an exhibitor, who is given a permit with each reel furnished him by his exchange, will be required to return the permit when he brings back the reel, or pay 50 cents, in default, to the exchange.

Sergeant O'Connor intends to review all films over six months old, used in Chicago. This means that a new permit must be granted and paid for. The object is to prevent the inclusion of cut-outs originally made by the Censor Bureau. All old films will thus be brought under censorship, so far as Chicago is concerned.

It was suggested to Sergeant O'Connor that he should confiscate all cut-outs made, so as to prevent their being used in outside cities; but he showed that it was very difficult, if not impossible, to obtain them.

Chicago Film Brevities.

C. Spencer and wife, of Australia, have been in the city for the last week.

S. L. Rothapfel, manager of the Lyric, Minneapolis, spent most of the week of Monday, January 29, in Chicago. He was busied with the installment of Licensed service in the Sullivan & Considine houses here. Mr. Rothapfel stated that he did splendid business with the Cines feature subject, "Joseph in Egypt." This film he pronounced a wonderful masterpiece. He has secured a new grand opera quartet for his singing forces and the acquisition has been warmly welcomed by patrons of the Lyric.

The numerous friends of William N. Selig, near and far, will be glad to learn that the operation performed on his arm last week at the Michael Reese Hospital, this city, has been most successful. As a result of the wound received in Los Angeles, Mr. Selig was unable to move his arm from the wrist upward. Eminent nerve specialists agreed, after examination, that a certain nerve had been severed by the bullet in its course. This nerve was discovered in the condition stated and, during the operation, the ends were brought together and joined. Mr. Selig is in excellent health and is remaining in the hospital on the advice of his physician, so that he may have the closest care. It is expected that he will be out by Thursday, February 15th.

M. Grashin, of Austin, will break ground for a new moving picture theater in that suburb of Chicago, next week. The structure will cost $40,000, and will be thoroughly modern and fireproof.

Harry R. Raver, manager of the Eclair Company, New York, was in the city a few days last week. While here, he did excellent work in bringing the attention of exchange men to the high artistic merit and quality of the Eclair product. The demand for Eclair films is increasing every week in this section.

STANLEY NESTOR HORSLEY.

Stanley Nestor is the only son, in fact the only child, of David Horsley, president and manager of the Nestor Film Company. The boy is scarcely five years old, and notwithstanding his age, he knows how to ride unmanageable bronchos. Scorning the meek burro his father specially bought for him, little Stanley Nestor looked with favor upon a young, snow-white stallion named "Nestorius," whose bucking and rearing antics have made a decided hit in Nestor pictures. Stanley was told to keep away from the rather savage "Nestorius," which admonition increased his desire to ride the beautiful and forbidden horse. He bided his time and at the propitious moment "Nestorius" had a Nestor on its back. For some ten minutes broncho and boy struggled for mastery, which, thanks to a sliding saddle, went to the animal. Little Stanley was saved from a swirling mass of stampeded horses, and before they led him away, he looked menacingly at "Nestorius" and exclaimed, "I'll ride him yet!" Reports from the Nestor studio, at Hollywood, Cal., state that the determined little fellow has kept his word. He rides "Nestorius" without any trouble, he can also ride other wild bronchos, which fact has won for him the title of "Youngest and most fearless buckeroo on the Pacific Coast." What's a buckeroo? A tamer of bucking bronchos. And Stanley Nestor Horsley has the taming question pretty well in hand.

"REMEMBER THE MAINE" GOING STRONG.

At the first exhibition of the "Remember the Maine" picture, given at the New Columbia Theater, Marion, Ohio, packed houses were the order of the day. Manager Clark said that it brought many people into the house who had never before been there. This record was repeated at Columbus, Ohio, where the picture was shown at the Lyric Theater. Cleveland indefinitely—is the latest report from "Remember the Maine."

BALSDON CALLS AT WORLD OFFICE.

Mr. George Balsdon, of the Photoplay Advertising and Specialty Company, of Pittsburg, Pa., Detroit, Mich., and Cleveland and Columbus, Ohio, paid a long deferred visit upon the Moving Picture World on February 8th. Mr. Balsdon has been instrumental in building up a fine business through the Middle West and reported that all the offices of his company were flooded with orders for his specialties for picture theaters. As a hustler Mr. Balsdon has few equals, and he has the knack of hitting upon designs for advertising that make a hit with exhibitors.

THE SPECIAL RELEASE.

The Introduction to a Series of Articles on Handling the Two, Three and Five-Reel Subjects.

(Copyright, 1912, by Epes Winthrop Sargent All rights reserved.)

NOTHING indicates the popularity of the multiple reel feature subject more convincingly than the prompt adoption of the idea by both the manufacturer and the exhibitor. Almost overnight the two, three and five-reel subject has come into its own and the list of films released by the listed manufacturers is increased by importation or local production of the special subject sold on the "State rights" plan, in which the right to exhibit a specified subject in a given territory is vested in a single firm or corporation.

These "State rights" films are, if anything, more valuable to the exhibitor than those two and three-reel subjects regularly released, since their distribution and exploitation may be better regulated by a single head than where perhaps two or more exchanges in one territory get the same reel on a given release day. Just in passing it may be said that the State rights feature is going to do more to abolish the foolish and costly first-run fad in the minds of the audience than any other scheme yet devised.

The multiple reel presents many valuable features not the least of which is the many forms of special advertising to be had. In place of the usual half sheet in two or three colors there are halves, ones, threes and eights, special booklets, folders, postcards and what not to invite and hold attention, and all of these forms can be made to yield a large return in patronage and new trade if the advertising appropriation is judiciously proportioned to the house and the distribution is intelligently made.

Direct Your Appeal Properly.

To take two immediate releases, for example, one should not follow the same methods of distribution in advertising the "Odyssey of Homer" (Monopol) and "A Victim of the Mormons" (Great Northern). The persons to whom the former will make a first appeal will not be drawn to the house by the sensational melodrama, and the visualization of the Latin classic will not strongly appeal to those to whom the Mormon title will suggest something "worth while." In the theater the professor who has been made a "regular" through his desire to see the classic will find the vivid drama to his liking, once he has found that the motion picture is not the despised thing he thought it, and the lover of melodrama will delight in the spirited story of the wanderings of Ulysses, but the highbrow will not be drawn into the theater for the first time by the Mormon title and the lover of melodrama will regard with suspicion the announcement of the supposedly educational feature. Each of these specials will draw new patrons and each will please all patrons, but the great function of the special release still is to make special business from among those to whom the motion picture still is a novelty and the advertising for each must be done so as to make its argument to those most likely to be convinced. The Odyssey advertising should be directed to the schools and colleges, the churches and lyceums, while the Great Northern advertising should primarily be directed to the shops and stores, to what a Frenchman would call the bourgeoise—the respectable middle class.

This is not to be accepted as a statement that the college professor will not delight in the Mormon play nor that the Odyssey is above the heads of the average patron. It simply points out the fact that each release, not alone these, but all special releases, possesses some particular angle of appeal and that to get the best results the advertising should be directed to those most likely to be interested, while at the same time general advertising should be made for all.

The photoplay theater has to deal in dimes where the dramatic houses deal in dollars, because the admission prices bear the same ratio. Advertising must be carefully planned to be effective for the money that it is possible to spend, but, on the other hand, the photoplay theater does not have to cover so large a territory as the combination house and the manager can know his territory better.

Best Advertising Free.

The best advertising costs nothing at all, if you know how to get it, but few photoplay managers realize the value of the advertising they get from having something really good on their screen. Instead of combating the daily change idea he trails with his audience and as a result, whenever there is any talk about a regular release that is out of the ordinary, the film is out of town before the talk can do much good. It is still more important that the special feature should be held for more than one day, even in the small towns. There is an extra charge for the special and sometimes the cost of the regular service must be defrayed as well where the feature is obtained through other sources than the regular exchange, but the exhibitor who will pay twenty-five dollars for extra paper and other matter will hold the film for one day only because it costs $20 a day and loses the advertising that printed paper of any description cannot bring. The paper says that you say it's good. The pleased patron who says it's good is far more convincing to his friend. The combination of the two is what counts.

Very often New Yorkers are treated to the spectacle of a play condemned by every critic in town running three to six months or more to capacity business. In the box office they watch the receipts climb up, by tens, then twenties and then hundreds. It's all the result of the personal advertising of those who have seen the play. You can get the same.

Play Back If Necessary.

If possible plan to keep the feature from three days to a week, accordin to your possible clientele, or if you cannot afford to do this, let your opp sition have the film for the day and play it back yourself a couple of weel later, getting the benefit of all the other's advertising as well as your ow

The feature release is a business tonic that you cannot well afford to without. Do not regard it as a necessary expense to keep in the swir nor as an investment for a day or a week. Look upon it as a busine getter and a business holder and when you figure that you can break abo even, add in the fact that you've made business for some time to come an that you still show a profit. If you can figure a profit on the stay of th film in the house so much the better. You're that much to the good.

The first article in this series—to be printed next week—will deal wit the preliminary work.

A Bi-Weekly Bulletin.

H. L. Gormont, advertising manager for A. J. Bayer's Family Theate St. Marys, Pa., sends in a copy of their bi-weekly bulletin, which consis of a single sheet carrying the announcement of Monday's or Thursday feature and alluding briefly to the two following days, the reels for th other days being advertised in the local press. Half the 9 x 14 sheet given over to the story of the first reel, calling attention to the attractio current the day the bulletin gets into the hands of the prospective patro and the papers are trusted to do the rest. It is not pretentious advertisin but it is effective for small town work, and the right idea is carried in th insistence in the statement that each night there is a feature and five othe reels. A six-reel show is generous allowance. It would seem that th generosity should win over the gold watch and two silver prizes that ar offered nightly. With gold watches as low as $18 a dozen, the prize ma be cheaper than a newer service, than a feature and five commercials, bu Mr. Gormont states that it gets the business and the appeal that is mad twice a week certainly revives interest every three days, though we believ that a weekly bulletin that gives the daily feature for six days will be a effective, provided the list can be given. The Gormont idea is capita where the feature is not known until the film gets to town.

Chaney and Vanity Fair.

Mr. N. E. Chaney sends in one of his usual good programs to show how he runs an annex when he has a special attraction. He had Vanity Fai the other night and the regular program carried but a line referring th reader to an insert. The insert was printed on heavier paper than th program, gave the full program and synopsis, a somewhat florid introduc tion and announcement of an advance sale that is something of a novelt in photoplay theaters. Others may want to use this idea; we do not believ that they can do much better than to follow this model:

> IMPORTANT.—There positively will be but Five Performances of this Great Feature Picture. Three on Tuesday and Two on Wednesday night. The tickets for any performance can be secured any time after 8 a. m. Monday, either at the Box Office or by 'Phone. Orders will be held only until time for performance for which purchased. DON'T DELAY IN SECURING SEATS.

Set the Example.

The manager who wishes his patrons to be properly appreciative of t special subjects best gains his end by showing proper respect himself. I the subject is dismissed in a line the patron gets the idea that the slighte reel cannot be very important else the manager would have made more of a fuss, but when the story is "played up" and given proper prominence, the theatergoer instinctively acquires a respect for the offering. The sugges tion that five performances will scarcely be sufficient for so remarkable a subject will send the reader to the box office to be certain of seats and when a fair advance sale is assured the sale of the other seats is prac tically certain, for those who have obtained their tickets in advance will be disposed to brag a little and others will wish to share the brag. Though Mr. Chaney does not say so, it is to be presumed that the Tuesday matinee makes the third performance on the opening day and was intended to send out the afternoon audience to act as so many press agents for the big production. Mr. Chaney appears to have settled upon a blue ink on a good quality of white paper with a weekly change of photoplays on the front page and his program now gains an individuality that counts for much. People know it is the Orpheum program without being able to see the lettering and each time they see it, it is an advertisement.

Talks Business.

Our compliments to the manager of the Princess Theater, Hopkinsvill Ky., who knows how to write advertising. A single issue of the local paper carried three special advertisements of as many releases and an excerpt (with proper credit) from this paper. A couple of paragraphs from Cin derella advertising are passed on as an example of the right way to talk to your patrons. The advertisement falls 5½ inches across three columns, with data as to time and number of the shows and a coarse screen portrait of Miss Tabaterro and winds up this way:

> You will miss a real "dandy" good one if you fail to see "Cinderella." Don't imagine this to be a children's play—it's the old fairy tale, but staged like grand opera and acted by stars.
> "Cinderella" is costing me quite a fancy price to show just now, wing to the heavy demand to ;t in larger cities. But I want you to see it before the films are old, scratched and mutilated, and while I feel sure you wouldn't "kick" if I raised the price of admission slightly, yet there's nothing "doin'" and the "tariff" remains the same—5 cents for children and 10 cents for the grown ups.

This brings out one point that most others have failed to see. The elig Cinderella is not a "kid" show, but is a straight play for grown ups well as children. "Staged like grand opera and acted by stars" is a ne good enough for the Selig company to take up.

A Chat on Cuts.

Do you know the difference between a 50 screen cut and the 150 screen? o you know why each is used? If you do you do not need this little lk, but there are lots of managers to whom screen talk is more or less f a mystery.

A half-tone cut is merely one that reproduces the half-tones between pure hite and solid black and these half-tones are obtained by cutting the surace of the cut into tiny squares. Put a cut under a powerful magnifying lass and you'll find that it is cut into squares like a checkerboard. This done by interposing a ruled glass screen between the photograph and he plate when the cut negative is being made, the glass being ruled by a iamond into from 50 to 200 lines to the inch. The finer the screen the loser the squares. With the quick printing on cheap paper, such as newsaper and rough circular work, a cut of 50 or 65 screen gives a better rinting surface than would a finer screen, since the coarse ink and the brous paper does not close up the lines and where a 120 screen would rint a black smudge under the same conditions the 50 screen gives brilant result. For newspaper and quick work order a 50 or 60 screen. For lower work on fairly good paper the 80 or 90 screen is better. A really ood job on coated paper will need a 120 screen, and the 140 or 150 is for low work on heavy plate paper. The 50 screen on plate paper gives too oarse an effect. If you will order your cuts to suit the job you'll get good ork, but if you want a generally effective cut, get about a 90 which will be ood on good paper and not so bad on poor paper, but it is better to get oth the 60 and 90 screens and use them as demand dictates.

Cut this paragraph out and paste it on your desk. You may need it in a urry some time.

Don't Be Personal.

We do not like the allusion to another house. It is never a good plan allude to a contemporary by name. Call attention to the fact that more eels are run than at neighboring houses, or that the same number of eels are run for less money. Make all the capital you want of the fact hat your reels are not the same as are seen at other houses. Say: "All f the pictures shown at the Imperial are new to Cleveland and have not een shown at any other house in town prior to their projection at the Imperial. Every picture is brand new." Why advertise the other fellow? Let him spend his own money making himself known.

Once there used to be a bad vaudeville actor—he isn't a good actor ven now, but he's a successful one—who spent half his salary for a mall advertisement that was the best he could afford. Instead of using he space to tell how good he was, as the others did, he told how bad he hought some of the more prosperous actors were. And every time he spent $10 to tell some actor with money how bad he was, the latter would spend fifty to spread the little actor's fame by saying things about him. After a time the managers began to believe that he must be worth while ince all the big fellows seemed to be trying to keep him down, and so he got a lot of jobs on the strength of the advertising his fellows gave him. They made him known—which was precisely what he was after—and they gave him more space than he could have afforded to pay for himself. It's the same way in any line. Every time you mention a competitor you advertise him. Let him foot his own advertising bills.

NATIONAL DISTRIBUTING COMPANY FEATURES.

A representative of The Moving Picture World was agreeably entertained for an hour or so at the offices of the National Film Distributing Company on 45th Street, New York, last Saturday evening. It was a rather late call, but President Kimball was in a communicative mood and insisted that we see some of the National pictures, and proceeded to trot out a few. Of the American subjects we were shown "An Indian Never Forgets" and "The Old Indian Mine." Both of these subjects were remarkably good in point of photographic quality and the stories were interesting. In both these pictures the feature is the good riding, horsemanship of an unusual quality is displayed by all the players. The scenic effects are good.

Of the pictures of foreign make, the Clarendon subject "Lieutenant Rose and the Stolen Battleship" and the Deutsches Biograph subject "The Tragedy of the Strike," are decided features. In the first-mentioned several novel features are introduced. Real battleships appear and there is an actual chase by an aeroplane. By a clever arrangement of effects a close view of Lieutenant Rose in the aeroplane is obtained. The action throughout this picture is swift and thrilling. In "The Tragedy of the Strike," the interior of a great electric power plant is shown with the powerful engines in operation. In this subject there are bits of acting that are not surpassed by the product of any manufacturer. In many respects this is a remarkable picture.

The National is bound to win a place for itself if it continues to release such pictures as the ones mentioned.

Have you noticed the increasing size of the Moving Picture World? 100 pages this week. More than twice its size this time a year ago.

OREGON LETTER.

Mr. C. Lawrence Fuller, special representative of the Vitagraph Company of America, accompanied by Melvin G. Winstock, General Manager of the Peoples Amusement Company, visited La Grande on Wednesday, and at both the afternoon and evening performances at the Arcade Theater, this city, delivered addresses. Mr. Winstock merely introduced Mr. Fuller, in a few well-chosen remarks, and Mr. Fuller, after discussing the growth and development of motion pictures in general, proceeded to unfold a picture entitled "When and How Vitagraph Life Portrayals Are Made," which proved of vast interest to three of the largest audiences ever gathered together in a La Grande Theater. The Mayor, the City Council, many of the clergymen, the railroad representatives and officials, in fact, every representative citizen of the community was in attendance.

There are two Licensed theaters in La Grande, the Arcade, operated by the Peoples, seating seven hundred, and the Isis, oprated by Mr. Sherwood, seating three hundred. Mr. Winstock and Mr. Fuller called on Mr. Sherwood and presented him with a roll of tickets by which they extended to him the courtesies of having every one of his patrons from the Isis Theater attend Mr. Fuller's lecture at the Arcade Theater, as the guests of the Vitagraph Co. and the Peoples Amusement Co. This was much appreciated and shows that the Licensed houses are working harmoniously together for the general advantage of the motion picture. Messrs. Fuller and Winstock returned to Portland on Thursday and that afternoon Mr. Fuller left for Seattle, Spokane and other cities on his route East.

On Monday, February 5th, Mr. Fuller gave this same lecture at the Peoples Theater, Portland, Oregon. Mr. Fuller was amazed at the character of the audience and the appreciation shown by them for the picture and his speech.

The Peoples Amusement Company is endeavoring to have Miss Florence Turner accept an invitation to be their guest at Portland. Having heard from the little lady, however, that her health will not at present permit it, but expressing the hope that she soon can come and as soon as possible will make her appearance at the Peoples Theater in a big "Vitagraph night."

A local man has written a scenario entitled "The Convict's Parole," based on the theory of the treatment being accorded convicts by the Honorable Oswald West, Governor of Oregon. This scenario has been submitted to the Governor and meets with his absolute approval. The author will attempt to get a production of his scenario by one of the Licensed film producers.

At Sunnyside, one of the largest residence districts of Portland, there is to be a well-arranged, up-to-date and modern photoplay theater installed shortly to seat five hundred people.

The Dreamland Theater, Albany, Oregon, will undergo extensive alterations shortly. It is understood that a new picture theater is about to be built there.

Efforts are being made to rush the location of a subsidiary plant for making motion pictures in Portland, Oregon. The conditions and surroundings are ripe. The ocean close at hand, the Barracks at Vancouver, Washington, the adjoining mountains and valleys, all make Portland an ideal spot for picture making.

H. C. Stevens, Jr., Manager of the General Film Company branch here, did everything in his power to make the stay of Mr. Fuller enjoyable while the latter was visiting this city.

The Peoples Amusement Company contemplates doubling the size of the Arcade Theater, located on the most prominent thoroughfare of the city and will spend thirty thousand dollars in making it absolutely up-to-date, comfortable and safe.

M. G. W.

HEINZ REPRESENTATIVE VISITS AMERICAN.

The H. J. Heinz Company "57 Varieties" are in the market for motion picture film for advertising purposes. It is said that the big food house expects to use about 25,000 feet of film during the present year for the exploitation of the many "varieties." Realizing the size of their undertaking and the chances of wasting a considerable amount of money in poor negatives, Colver Gordon, of the advertising department, was sent on a tour of inspection throughout motion picture houses all over America. Mr. Gordon was a guest of the American Film Manufacturing Company one day last week, while in Chicago, and was the guest of that company on a tour of inspection through the new factory.

Mr. Gordon expressed himself as much delighted with what he had seen of the motion picture business in various cities and was loud in his praise of the American's new factory. He was taken through the entire establishment and shown the many interesting processes through which the American's product passes until it is turned out a completed product.

Advertisers and contributors are requested to have copy in one day earlier next week on account of the holiday.

The SCENARIO WRITER

CONDUCTED BY EPES WINTHROP SARGENT

A Rave and Some Reason.

We are printing this appended partly because there is some reason at the bottom of the communication and in part to show why it is that a working society is impossible until the members get back to solid earth. The name of the writer is suppressed, but he is a Chicagoan—as may be guessed from section P. Here is the communication:

> 518 Fine Arts Bldg., Chicago, Jan. 22, 1912.
> Dear Sir:
>
> The scenario writers are now laboring under impossible conditions, due to the fact that the film makers pay so poorly. Already many letters have been sent to your office and printed in your notable paper, asking for protection. A Western magazine has sent a circular to the most prominent scenario writers asking for a charter and some suggestions on the subject. I beg that you again put this question before the public, and begin a campaign to that end. Here are my own ideas:
>
> (a) Have an organization of all scenario writers and try to found a company to protect the rights for each member against film makers that pay poorly.
> (b) This company of scenario writers to take charge of the selling of the manuscripts to the film makers, keeping for itself a percentage on each manuscript sold for the treasury of the company, which will serve as a fund for expenses of the company.
>
> (c) Each member-author to pay a membership fee of $20 for the first year, and $15 for each succeeding year.
>
> (d) To try to induce the film makers to pay a royalty of 60 cents per foot of films produced, as they do in Paris—Societé Cinematographique des Auteurs et Gens de Lettres—having a contract signed by the said society, acting as a medium between author and film maker.
>
> (e) Each member-author must have a record of the different scenarios that he sends to the "Cinematographic Authors' Society," and said society must acknowledge receipt of each scenario, with a reference number and the title submitted.
>
> (f) Try to agree with the film makers on a minimum price for each scenario—say $60 per scenario.
>
> (g) Each film to give the name of the author of its scenario, in order that the author may have due credit for his work, and to help make him popular.
>
> (h) Have agents to protect the ideas of the different authors, so that nothing may be stolen in Europe or in America; and to prosecute offenders by law.
>
> (i) Try to induce the film makers to come to the Cinematographic Authors' Society for scenarios, and make the feeling universal that each author ought to join the society.
>
> (j) In order to give every opportunity to the society to exist, have circulars printed with the foregoing suggestions attractively set forth, and send them to each cinematographic author you know, asking him to join and to send membership fee immediately.
>
> (k) The Cinematographic Authors' Society must have a personal signed card with photo of the member thereon, giving him the right of admission to any moving picture show, and serving, at the same time, as an identification card.
>
> (l) Have a convention of cinematographic authors every year, to submit and discuss further improvements.
> (m) If the film makers will not sanction this movement, constitute an independent society to produce the films, and embracing nearly all the other manufacturers' ideas—in producing better films, better scenarios, paying the authors better prices—and also to found a regular big cinematographic theater, with cinematographic plays written by well-known authors, such as Belasco, for instance, with a cast of the best theatrical stars—Gertrude Elliott, Maud Adams, Frances Starr, etc., and such men as Faversham, John Drew, Otis Skinner, and the like.
> (n) Incorporate a society with a big capital. This capital will be largely increased by membership fees, by royalties received on each film produced, and by the percentage to which the society is entitled on each scenario sold.
>
> (o) The organization of such a society will undoubtedly have every chance for success—with a theater in each important town. The price of admission will be such that rich and poor can afford to come, as in the regular theaters; for instance, from 10 cents to 75 cents for three hours' entertainment—two performances a day—matinee and evening; the program consisting of travel, educational, comedy and drama films, and closing with at least one photoplay with a cast of well-known actors, written by a well-known writer.

Personally, we believe that some combination of authors could be formed that would have a beneficial effect upon the entire business, but this proposition is foolish and is given here merely to start the discussion. Let's look at the proposition in detail:

Section a suggests that all scenario writers get together. How may this be done? There are literally hundreds who write one or two scripts and drop out. Shall they be required to join before they may make submission? And if the company (the word is the correspondent's) shall charge a commission on sales, what is the need for a $15 annual fee?

We fail utterly to get that "60 cents per foot of film produced." The S. C. A. G. L. gets no such price. We do not know the renumeration the authors of this product (more generally known as the Films d'A first marketed by Pathe, then by the Sales Company and now by the N tional), but we do know that the exactions of this society caused the Pat Freres to drop out and make their duration with the Sales Company br indeed. Sixty cents per foot for film that sells here for ten cents gr and which brings but eight cents abroad is an absurdity.

No less absurd is the minimum price of $60 per script. There are to had hundreds of scripts from which a single idea or situation is to gleaned which the editor or director may turn into a good story. The i as it stands is worth no more than $5 or $10. Are these to be barred favor of the $60 developed script at the behest of any society or compar

And no body of manufacturers will consent to make themselves the slav of the society. They are business men and will conduct their business they please. The idea is no more tenable than the blissful proposition th each member shall have free admission to all picture theaters. Who w give the card holder the "right." Who will return to the management t admission price, and who will profit by these admissions?

The rest of the stuff is unworthy of consideration, but it will serve purpose in showing how vague and idiotic are the ideas of some of tho who want a society. Lets hear from some of those with sane suggestion Make them brief and pointed.

That American Delay.

From R. R. Nehls, manager of the American Company, comes an e planation of the delay to which reference has already been made in the columns. Accidents will happen in the best regulated mail bags on t long overland journey. The letter is self-explanatory:

> An article in your column under the title, "Another American Story" has been referred to the writer and upon investigation, we find that on October 8 we received a scenario, "The King of the Range," from Mr. A. V. Powell, and on the same date we received a scenario, "His Big Brother Bill," from Mr. C. A. Frambers. Both of these, together with a number of others, were sent to our Western producer on October 8. In due course of time they were returned to us as unavailable, together with some thirty other scenarios, but, unfortunately, the package met some rough handling in the mails and became undone and the contents scattered. The condition of the package indicated that some of the scenarios were lost and we took the matter up with the United States Government, with the result that on December 20 we received from the postal authorities at Chicago a letter of which the following is a copy:
> "In reply to your inquiry of the 18th inst., you are informed that a number of unaddressed manuscripts, believed to be those inquired for were forwarded to the Division of Dead Letters, Washington, D. C., under date of December 18. A request for their return to you has been made under even date."
>
> In the course of several weeks we received the lost scenarios and promptly forwarded them to the authors, together with a letter of explanation.
>
> We desire to assure you that we endeavor to give all scenarios submitted to us as prompt consideration as we possibly can. Unfortunately, the consideration of scenarios is not the only branch of the business requiring attention and where extenuating circumstances, as in the present instant, give occasion for an apparently uncalled for delay, we are confident that on the whole we are giving authors as little vexation as possible.

What Lubin Wants.

Mrs. Lillian M. Rubenstein, editor for the Lubin Company, announce that the company needs at present strong society dramas with a big clima and strong heart interest. These are for the home companies and should be played in interiors as much as possible. Refined outdoor comedies ar desired for A. D. Hotaling's company in Jacksonville and for the Western company strong military dramas utilizing bodies of Indians, cowboys, etc It might be added that as Mr. Johnson and Miss Buckley head their own companies, it is no longer essential that photoplays should have strong parts for both leads. They may be written for either a man or woman star

Scenario Profits.

With real pleasure we print this letter from Ervin S. Hall, of Urbana Ill., because he touches upon a point that is important and states his case plainly and dispassionately. It is rather long, but we give it in full. He writes:

> For some time I have been reading your articles to the scenario writers in the "Moving Picture World" and have greatly enjoyed them. I trust the management of the periodical will keep you on the staff of writers for a long time to come. Your help to the writers cannot fail to be very great.
> There is one or two things about scenario writing that trouble me. One is the seeming oversupply of scenarios. Several companies, notably Thanhouser and St. Louis (Shamrock), and possibly some others are not in the market to buy anything. The Essanay Company want nothing but split reel comedies of an unusually brilliant nature. Melies Company are only buying a "very limited number" of good plots. Nearly one-half of the companies are maintaining studios in the South or on the Pacific coast and have a staff that does all their scenarios. Some time ago I wrote a scenario and in a few days got a card giving its number. A few days later I sent another one in and received a card back giving its number. By dividing the difference between the numbers by the number of days that had elapsed, I found that the firm has been receiving scenarios at the rate of sixteen a day. Some time after I sent another and divided as before and found that the number had risen to nineteen per day. As the company in question only produces five reels per week, it is clear that they are suffering from an oversupply of the stuff. I tried another of the big companies the same way and found that their average daily supply was twenty-one scenarios. In view of all this, do you not think it is wicked to encourage people to write photoplays as a means of a livelihood? I am not kicking because some of mine have been rejected, for I have doubtless succeeded as well as most writers; but when I see so many ads encouraging people to write, and know of the awful oversupply, I feel as though an injustice was being done to some good people. It seems to me that it would be better for the companies to be brutally frank and tell the aspiring new writers that there was no hope for them to make any money at the business, and that they must expect only an occasional acceptance with an accompanying ten dollar check, and that only for some really brilliant child of their brain that they had nourished and brought up in the most careful manner. It might also be wise to say that if they spent the same amount of time and gray matter at any ordinary occupation, it would bring them larger returns, unless they counted the honor of having their thought thrown upon the magic screen worth several thousand dollars. It would please me to know your thought on this question of oversupply, and the propriety of letting aspiring writers know that their chances are almost nothing; in fact, as a way of earning money in any appreciable quantities it is nothing.

r. Hall takes up a matter that was very pointedly discussed by Spect, in the Dramatic Mirror of a few weeks ago. The Mirror writer pted out that with the exception of the editor of this department not a sie one of the advertisers could be shown to be a person who knew the biness. He allowed that there might be scenario editors or others qualifi among the advertisers, but showed that none of those used their own ne in their enterprises. And this writer does not advertise for novices. e advertisements to which Mr. Hall, like the Mirror, takes exception, a those which appeal to the novice with such headlines as "Amazing pis paid for Motion Picture Plays," "Scenarios wanted. You can help sly them and earn big money," and "If you can think of only two gd ideas every week and if you sell them for only $25 each you will me $50 weekly."

his sort of thing is hurtful and misleading and it bleeds the novice of mey that he cannot always afford. IF you can write two stories a week a IF you can sell them for $25 each you'll be getting $50 a week, but the is not a man living who under the present conditions can write and se two stories a week. It is the general experience of scenario men that thpreparation of one decent script a week under contract is difficult.

e writer, with his large acquaintance among the successful scenario wers, knows but two persons who depend upon scenarios alone for their lihood, and these are among the stars of the profession, who have estashed themselves only after a year or more of heart-breaking effort. Wting the script is one thing; selling, even when the script is a good one, is vastly different thing.

r. Hall in his figures appears to have dealt with companies receiving rer less than the usual number of scripts. From 200 to 250 weekly is thaverage number received and of this between eighty and ninety per ce are utterly impossible and editors are hard put to get the required nber of scripts from the remaining ten to twenty per cent. As a broad position it may be stated that about two per cent. of the submissions to a studio will be found available by that studio, and about five per cent. w stand a general chance of eventual acceptance.

e scenario writers of to-day are not looking to the scenario as a means on independent livelihood. They are preparing for the time when the dand for real stories will bring a reward in from $75 to $150 each for scts. They are staying with the business in its formative period to be in reiness for the good times that are coming. At present payments range fr $10 to $35. It is very seldom that the latter figure is exceeded, and thaverage is more apt to be in the neighborhood of $20 per full reel.

e fact that literary skill is not required has brought many illiterate in the business and the glowing advertisements have tempted many more, bthese scripts merely clog the scenario offices. They cut no real figure ine results, though now and then a script is found that encourages revin. There is plenty of room for writers of real scenarios who have no ren to worry about the influx of the incompetent. The best scenario scol the writer knows is one of the leaflets to be had free of the Lubin, Emay or Melies companies—this page and experience. The Technique oie Photoplay, soon to come from the press in book form, will largely ast, but experience, after all, is what counts. It is a hard but successful teer.

Making It Easy.

st the other day a correspondent wrote us he had had twenty years' exrience as a newspaper man and we were impolite enough to tell him whought not, because a sample sheet of copy sent indicated that it had be clipped with a McGill fastener and we don't believe that anyone who habeen hanging around newspaper offices for twenty years would use any fo of fastener that bound the sheets together more or less permanently. is those little things that tell the editor whether or not the script is thwork of a novice or a veteran. Anyone who has been doing work for arlength of time comes to know that an editor likes to read loose sheets beuse they are easier to handle, and the alert author picks out a form of cl that may be slipped on and off the paper without leaving more of a m than is necessary. Not all editors are careful about putting the clip ba in the same place and these tell tale marks fairly shout of repeated rejeons. Use those light wire clips, use only one and put that either in thmiddle of the sheet or in the upper left hand corner and you'll be doing itght, but any clip that punctures the paper, or that may not be slipped ornd off with ease makes more work for the editor and assuredly does naid the acceptance of the script.

e proper clip and the proper place for the clip are small things, but the lit things count in the long run.

Don't Do Dialogue.

spite of all that has been said about not using dialogue, the question isised almost every week by some newcomer. Very possibly the persience of this belief is due to the fact that the players are seen to speak onhe screen, sometimes using phrases that through distinct enunciation arconveyed to the audience. The average actor can "vamp" or invent his lines on the spur of the moment and does not need printed directions to start back and say "My brother!" at the moment when he makes the interesting discovery that he is about to slaughter a blood relative. You tell your story in clear business and the actor and the director will collaborate on the lines to be spoken when lines are needed. There is only one exception to prove this rule. If by writing in a single phrase you can evade the writing of several lines of action and carry the meaning as clearly, you are justified in using the line, not as dialogue, but merely to convey the idea of the situation more briefly and yet more fully than can be done in stage directions. As a general thing, lines clog the action and should be avoided.

Inquiry Department

TOM.—We do not know that the Kalem Company would object to the explanation of the manner in which their tail-piece is done, but it's hard to draw the line exactly, and for this reason we bar from this department all explanations of tricks that those who ask trade secrets may not take offense. We understand that Max Linder has been ill, but have seen him named in some recent European releases. Mr. Bechtel was with the Biograph following Edison.

JOSE.—The name of the Vitagraph is given three syllables and the "i" is sounded as in "ice."

B. T.—This has been answered before. "Not available at present" means that the company doesn't want to make your picture. It may be because the script is bad, because they do not make that style of production, or because they are oversupplied with that style of story. What is not available in one company may be just what some other company wants now or what the rejecting company may want later. The term is too general to be given any specific definition.

B. M. S.—A list of addresses was recently published in this department or a list will be sent you if you will send a stamped and addressed envelope. You do not have to address the script to the editor by name, merely address it "Editor of Scenarios." Write Mr. Richardson about the projection matters. That is out of our province.

OHIO.—Sorry we had to wait your questions. Miss Baird is a new leading woman with the Vitagraph, but not "the" new leading woman. The Vitagraph still offers Miss Turner in photoplay, but she is taking things easy after several years of very hard work. There are half a dozen or more "leads" in the Vitagraph Company and Miss Baird is merely a new addition. The American Company states that Mr. Kerrigan is still with them.

J. A. M.—Winding up your inquiries, Jack Richardson was the horse thief and George Periolat the camp cook in American's "Duel of Candles." George Gebhardt was the outlaw in Bison's "Getting His Man."

OLYMPIC.—Miss Jane Fernley was the foster mother in Reliance's "The Empty Crib." Mace Greenleaf was the father.

E. D.—Essanay Western films are made under the direction of Gilbert M. Anderson, at San Rafael, Cal., and elsewhere on the Pacific coast as the needs of the script may require. A letter addressed to Mr. Anderson there will reach him. A. Mackley was the sheriff and Miss Edna Fisher Mr. Anderson's sweetheart in "The Sheepman's Escape."

MISS A. G.—You're a little mixed in your question. Jack J. Clark was "the handsome gentleman" who played the title role in Kalem's "The O'Neil" and the announcement slide did not say it was not. It said it was staged by Sydney Olcott, who is the director for that section of the Kalem Company. We have no advice as to Mardi Gras pictures, but presume that one or more companies will film the event.

G. T. R.—You are wrong in supposing that the Lubin studio burned down. It was the former studio, 926 Market Street, that was gutted by fire. For about fourteen months no pictures have been made there, the building being given over to the Philadelphia branch of the General Film Company. The Lubin plant is six miles from the scene of the fire.

FAN.—Miss Lawrence will not immediately engage in picture work. She has been resting in Philadelphia, but has sailed for Europe, to be gone an indefinite period.

QUIZZ.—The Thanhouser "Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde" follows the play rather than the book. The hopelessness of a play without a single woman in the cast appealed to the dramatist who made the Mansfield version and the love interest was written in.

M. D. S.—Write the company direct for the information you want.

S. W.—When a script is returned with the comment that it is too sketchy, the probabilities are that the Editor means to suggest that the plot itself lacks body rather than the development. If they do not accept half reel subjects send it to some company that does, but first be sure that you have a real story and not merely a half-framed idea.

C. J. T.—Two reel subjects are generally written in parts with a sort of climax to the first reel, but the Bison announces that it wishes two reel subjects written as one reel with scenes numbered consecutively, the break being marked in by the company.

F. T. W.—There is supposed to be an Edison field company up your way. Probably this is the company you saw. Watch for the pictures in six or eight weeks.

G. O.—Phillips Smalley was the Priest John in "The Parting of the Ways." It was a Rex production.

T. V. X.—Miss Dorothy Gibson is with the Eclair Company again, but was with the Lubin Company for a while. Miss May Buckley replaced Miss Lawrence. It is not probable that the latter will return to the Lubin studio.

I. M. P.—Matrimonial information is not supplied by this department.

ANXIOUS.—Miss Florence Turner is not dead, nor has she been in a railroad wreck.

R. T. E.—William Humphrey was the jester in Vitagraph's "The King's Jester." Miss Edith Storey was the princess.

GODFREY.—The "idea" of the Biograph's reel and a half release seems to be that it was too long for one reel and two short for two and the company did not care to spoil a serious subject by adding a comedy half reel. It's a good idea, at that.

A. D. R.—Adele De Garde and not Helen Costello was the Helen in Vitagraph's "A Doubly Desired Orphan."

AMATEUR.—We have not seen the Biograph Company working in the field, but we recall the effect you mention and think you can duplicate the lighting of the outdoor faces by experimenting with silvered paper reflectors. Work them close to the ground and you can throw enough light on a shaded face to offset the brim of the biggest picture hat.

L. B. D.—Miss Marguerite Snow, Harry Benham and the Thanhouser Kid had the leads in the Thanhouser "The Tomboy."

E. I. W.—We have no trace of Miss Gladys Fields. She has disappeared so completely that we are almost tempted to believe that she is with the nameless biographers. Miss Lottie Briscoe has recently joined the Lubin Company.

M. Y. V.—The Majestic Company is working in New York City. The occupancy of the Chicago studio was only temporary.

EVANS.—Write the Melies Company, Santa Paula, Cal., for a sample scenario. They will send it free for a stamped envelope. The Lubin and Essanay companies also send advice sheets.

"The Merchant Mayor."

High Cost of Living and the Campaign for Lower Prices by Mayor Shank of Indianapolis a Subject of Pictural Treatment.

If pictures have been found efficacious in instructing the public how to live, as instanced by the "Fly Pest" picture and the several subjects produced at the instance of the societies working against the "White Plague," and many other notable examples, is it not possible to bring to bear upon other problems, now aggravating the public mind, their enlightening influence? There are many abuses that cry to Heaven for correction, not the least of which is the present condition best expressed by the phrase "the high cost of living." The policy of powerful combinations to secure control of food products and force the prices thereon by various trade devices to unheard-of and, in many instances, unjustified and unreasonable figures, has aroused widespread condemnation and is now the subject of legislative inquiry. That the motion picture should contribute something to the investigation is proper. Hence, the Champion Film Company's subject, "The Merchant Mayor of Indianapolis," is a most suitable and timely one.

This picture is a close reproduction of the crusade of Mayor Shank, of Indianapolis, as could probably be devised, and the result is very satisfactory, insofar as the making of it is concerned. The Champion has attempted to show how prices are raised and what the effect upon the poor man is. In the picture the wife and daughter of the mayor are made to do some investigating, and they learn from a working man of large family about how far a man's wages goes when he is compelled to pay the upset prices for food now exacted by merchants and combinations. They report to the mayor, who decides to start something at once.

Accordingly, the provision dealers of the city are called into conference and told that their attempts to raise prices is wrong, and that if they do not stop, the mayor will go into the provision business himself. The merchants laugh at the mayor and leave him.

Then we see the mayor in action: He sends his agent out to buy produce from the farmers direct and soon he is fou at the opening of the municipal market where everything c be had at cost. This act brings the haughty merchants their senses and they are glad to sign a treaty of peace wi the merchant mayor.

A concluding scene shows a transformation in the con tion of the workingman, who is now able to live better reason of the more equitable prices of food.

Just at this time there is great need of this and simil illustrations of the peculiar forms of oppression that bu ness combinations have imposed upon the people. Cha pion seems to have blazed the way; possibly it may be e couraged to keep up the good work.

The First Birthday of Rex.

A Review of the First Year's Work by the Youngest of the Big Picture Firms. A Triumph of Quality Over Quantity, And a Fine Example of Business Enterprise.

REX is just a year old this month; that is to say, the Rex Film Mfg. Company. Considering its one year's existence, Rex is surely a prodigious infant. To be exact, Rex pictures first saw the light of day on February 16, 1911. At that time people in the film trade said to each other, "Who and what is this Rex that we are hearing about?" But there are no such questions as that being asked o-day. Everybody knows who Rex is and what Rex is and what Rex is doing. At the end of a year, we find Rex to be one of the argest film manufacturing establishments in the business, turning out a high class film that is well and favorably known all over the world. So far fifty-six Rex pictures have appeared. Upon these fifty-six pictures rests all the glory and fame that can rightfully belong to the Rex Company. Fifty-six pictures are not many, as far as film production goes, but they have been enough to place Rex in the first rank. There must be then some other reason for this aside from quantity. There is a reason and the reason is quality.

Our representative calling at the Rex to go over their year's work, as a preparation for this article, suggested that it would be a good plan for them to run off their first release and their last release in order to make a comparison of the work of a year ago and that of to-day. The suggestion was immediately deemed in good order and accordingly the first Rex release "The Heroine of '76" was projected on the screen, followed by the last Rex release at the time of writing, "The Bargain." There is a difference. The work shows improvement in some branches, but in other ways it would be hard to improve, even upon the first Rex picture. Technically, the first Rex release is perfect. The scenic effects and illumination of "The Heroine of '76" can hold their own with any picture that is now being made. The principal difference to be seen lies in the acting and in the scenarios. The acting is very much better in the last release, while the class of stories show a marked improvement. "The Heroine of '76" is a trifle too tragic for present-day needs; or at least it is possible to turn out equally as interesting dramas without recourse to scenes of bloodshed. The reason for this improvement is that the Rex Company have gone to the better class of writers for film stories. They are paying high prices for the work of recognized dramatists and there is no doubt that it shows in the work. They realize that "the play's the thing" and that the scenario is as much a part of the successful film as any other part of its make-up.

There is no need to expatiate at great length upon the Rex product—it is too well-known for that. Perhaps the best recommendation we could give would be to suggest that each and every exhibitor book for early exhibition the latest Rex release entitled, "The Bargain," and let that speak for itself. On second thought there is an improvement even in Rex technique, for nowhere do we remember ever having seen such a highly finished product of the film making art in all departments as in "The Bargain." While the scenic effects in "The Heroine of '76" contain all the qualities of art, they are simple and unambitious, but still artistic. In "The Bargain," we find scenic effects that are of the most complicated kind; vast depth of scene and infinite detail, arranged with cleverness and taste. The big scene in "The Bargain" represents a setting that only a fool or master would attempt to realize. "Fools rush in where angels fear to tread," is a saying that applies often in film making, but this scene in "The Bargain" represents years of experience and study on the part of its producer, Mr. Porter, a finished craftsman.

So much for comparison. Let us pass on to other things. Aside from one of two recent and untried entries, the Rex Company was the last to enter the field of standard producers, and at the end of the year stands in the front rank. Rex films have a drawing power in America and in European countries that is second to none. Their European business is phenomenal and is better represented on the other side than any other American picture firm. The principal European Rex office is at No. 5 New Compton St., London, W. It is not an agency, but a fully equipped storeroom, occupied exclusively by the Rex London staff. This office in London was established when the Rex concern was only five months' old. It was established on the Fourth of July, 1911. From it eight other branches on the continent are supplied with

A COMPARISON OF THE FIRST REX RELEASE WITH THEIR LATEST.

Rex films, posters, etc. Besides the London office there are Rex agencies in Berlin, Paris, Vienna, Moscow, Brussels, Copenhagen, Turin and Barcelona.

A word in regard to the Rex studios may be well at this point. When we first called at the Rex establishment at 573-79 Eleventh Ave., New York City, Rex was occupying the top floor and half of the floor below it in a large six-story building, operating with one studio equipment. This was perfect as far as it went, but there was a bareness which was the natural consequence of its being a brand-new concern. Aside from the bare office and studio equipment, there was not much in sight. The scenery and property rooms were far from being complete and it was quite evident that a world of expense still remained to be laid out for studio equipment. Last week when we went there we found great storerooms full of scenery and properties and two complete studios in operation, each studio with its separate producer and stock company, while a third studio was in course of preparation. We also found that instead of occupying a part of the building, the Rex Company is paying rent for the entire 90 x 150 six-story structure, which it occupies in full, and visitors to the Rex Company from now on will find it to be one of the largest of moving picture plants in operation.

It is well, in conclusion, to go over the list of Rex releases and mention some of the pictures that have helped to make Rex famous. One of their best offerings was "The Dagger and the Rose," a highly dramatic Spanish story enacted by only two people. "The Little Major," a highly successful juvenile comedy; "By t Light of the Moon," a fantastic silhouette comedy; "The Whit Red Man," a story of pioneer life, introducing a hazardous leap b one of the actors into a yawning chasm. Also "The Derelict and a number of others which are well remembered.

Rex is a lucky name. Within the past year there have bee christened in the United States, thirty-six Rex Theaters. This a wise move on the part of exhibitors; that of naming their the ters from a highly successful film. Naturally the patrons imagi that in exhibiting Rex films the exhibitors are showing their ov product and the idea will do no harm by any means. It is entire within the bounds of probability that no exhibitor would nan his theater after a poor make of film; therefore this wholesa naming of Rex theaters is one of the highest compliments that a film-making company could ever receive from exhibitors.

The Rex people are appreciative of this delicate complime and are doing all in their power to make it worth the while their namesakes. The Rex film titles are clear, original and arti tic. They have gone to considerable expense to have a four-col title plate made and sent to each of the Rex theaters to be us on printed programmes and the Rex houses are also plentiful supplied with cuts and printed matter. But better still are t beautiful Rex posters which are the finest examples of lithogra work sent out by any film concern. They are business getters a works of art. The enterprise of the Rex Company in one year time has founded a mighty structure and they well deserve t reward of prosperity that has been theirs.

What Rex is Going to Do.

Being a Brief Mention of the Personnel of the Company and an Outline of the Campaign They Have Mapped Out for themselves for the year of 1912.

Stanner E. V. Taylor,
Producer of the Sunday Rex.

IN another article we have been telling what the Rex Company have been doing during their first year's existence. It is our purpose under this heading to set forth some of the ideas the Rex Motion Picture Company have in mind for the coming year. The business will begin its second year under the same regime that has marked its first year's success. Its president is Mr. Wm. H. Swanson of Chicago. Mr. Edwin Porter will continue to be its technical and art director, having all to do with the production of film in its negative or positive state. Hustling Joe Engel, perhaps better known in the trade as Joe Rex, will still be the firm's commercial man. His work as heretofore will begin where Mr. Porter's work leaves off and will have to do entirely with the advertising and marketing of the Rex product.

By the time the first robin chirps his welcome note in the spring of 1912 there will be three fully equipped studios in daily operation at the immense Rex studio building in New York City. Tremendous investment is represented there and it is quite sure that the investment has been made for no idle purpose. Technically and artistically it would seem that the Rex product has gone about as far as it is possible. No one could ask for any improvement along those lines. Now that they have no more worlds to conquer in that respect, the Rex people are going to turn to bigger things. It is their intention during the coming year to go in for massive productions. Beginning soon, large two, three and five-reel productions will emanate at frequent intervals from the well-known Eleventh Avenue picture factory. Picture versions of the world's literary classics will be forthcoming, together with authentic historical and educational subjects. Now and then there will be something strong and unusual in the dramatic line from the pen of some noted writer, who will be handsomely repaid for his literary work. The usual two Rex releases per week will go on without interruption. With the regular Rex releases exhibitors are assured of one Marion Leonard picture each week. All of the pictures in whi Miss Leonard is to appear will be Sunday releases, produc under the personal direction of Mr. Stanner E. V. Taylo the well-known traveler and successful director of phot plays whose name is known and mentioned wherever fil men gather. By way of further assurance in this matter, might be well to state that already there are in the vaults the Rex Company twenty-three finished negatives ready f release in which Miss Leonard takes part. By this it will seen that the Rex promises for 1912 are already half fu filled. At this time it is too early to give the name of t producer and principal actors of the third Rex stock co pany as they have not yet been engaged.

Before the end of 1912 Rex will have a chain of branch extending around the world. They have decided to establish an office in Hong Kong, China, with their own manager and cameraman. In each of the Rex offices there will be a cameraman whose duty it will be to photograph important happenings within his sphere for a Rex weekly film of topical events, which will make its appearance in due time.

SOME OF THE PLAYERS WHO HAVE MADE REX PICTURES FAMOUS.

The object of the Rex Company is to be the largest and best film manufacturing company in the world. The studios are being enlarged to meet the great demand which they expect for their product. Since the first of the year a new fourteen-passenger omnibus has been added to the equipment. It is a large Sixty-six Pierce-Arrow presented by the Rex Company to themselves as a birthday present. It is quite certain that one or two more will be needed as soon as the frost gets out of the ground.

The Rex people sum their success up in three words: resolution, evolution and revolution. There is food for thought in those three words, all of which are truthfully embodied in the work of the Rex people. During their first year we have seen the combination work out successfully, and now for the coming year we have nothing but good wishes for this enterprising concern and hope that it will go forward with the momentum of their splendid start until Rex shall stand more than ever for what it means—King. Rex, king of films.

The Rex Director.

Mr. Edwin S. Porter, the Man Behind the Camera and the Product of the Rex Studios.

Mr. Edwin S. Porter,
Technical Director of the Rex and producer of the Thursday release.

A PRODUCER rarely gets the praise that he deserves. In the silent drama he is the most silent of all—so far as the outside world is concerned. Upon his shoulders rests success or failure. A painter of pictures he, who goes unhonored and unsung. In many cases the producer were better left unsung, for it is a well-known fact that the great prorucers of moving pictures can be counted on the fingers of one hand, and Edwin Porter is one of these. In truth he may be considered as the first of the great producers by virtue of the fact that he has been making pictures for at least fifteen years, or since the very beginning of cinematography. He may be rightfully considered the dean of all producers. His work to-day—the work of an artist and mechanical genius—is by no means a matter of inspiration, but the result of long experience in a profession to which many are called, but few are chosen. To be a great producer in these days a man must first be born an artist. Whether or not he be a trained artist, the essence of art must be born with him. There never has been a training school for motion picture art and the successful producers in that line have been obliged to train themselves in the school of experience. A great producer must also be a born mechanic in order to successfully cope with the marvels of photography and the engineering ability required for great scenic conceptions.

In Mr. Porter we find both the artist and the mechanic, by nature endowed, and entirely self-taught in the infinite ramifications of his work. It is safe to say that there is no living man who knows as much about the making of a moving picture as Edwin Porter. Through the medium of Rex pictures we know of his artistic ability. He is capable of preparing a first-class film picture in the manuscript. With his story in hand he undertakes the scenic arrangements and rehearsals with the absolute confidence of a master. With his familiar cry of "stand-by" he takes his place at the camera and turns the handle while directing the play. He knows his camera inside and out; in fact, he builds them himself. He knows electricity and stage lighting to the ultimate of perfection. When the negative has been exposed Mr. Porter becomes a photographer and follows it through the developing process and there is none who knows this work better than he. He is the absolute master of his trade from beginning to end and is perhaps the best qualified man to be in charge of a motion picture studio that there has ever been.

Mr. Porter began his career as a camera operator, away back in the pioneer days, somewhere about 1896. These were rough days and he roughed about a good deal here and there in various parts of the world. He began taking scenics in 1896 in California with the original Viascope camera and drifted about various parts of North and South America for more than a year. In 1897 he returned to New York and engaged in the business of manufacturing cameras, perforators, etc., and exhibiting moving pictures at odd times. These exhibitions were given at the Eden Museeum New York City with a projection machine that was built by himself. For a time he attended important topical events, recording in film, prize fights, political gatherings, disasters, etc., until 1900 when he joined the Edison Company. With that concern he continued his ramblings and at various times was occupied in designing and building projection machines, cameras, etc. Eventually he assumed charge of the production of negatives and continued in that work until the latter part of 1909. During his services with the Edison Company he supervised the making of all the pictures, the building of machinery, wrote the greater part of scenarios produced, staging the productions while operating the camera. In short, he handled every department until the film was produced on the screen. The present Edison studio was designed and supervised by Mr. Porter. After leaving the Edison Company, Mr. Porter spent the better part of a year in collaboration with Mr. Frank Cannock in the invention of the now well-known Simplex projection machine, and for which invention he is entitled to fifty per cent. of the credit.

In his first fifteen years in the motion picture business Mr. Porter had amassed a tidy fortune. In the fall of 1910 the opportunity came to him to establish his own business and with others he founded the Rex Motion Picture Company of America, which has trebled itself in size within a period of a year, with no telling how large it may be a year hence. Personally Mr. Porter is what Theodore Roosevelt might term a "corking" good fellow. He has none of the eccentricities of genius, but rather resembles a breezy business man, but one who is never to busy to wave his hand in friendly greeting as he hustles about in his big workshop or while flying through the revolving door of some big office building in New York City. He is very hard on revolving doors and they all spin around like a top when he goes through. The fastest elevators are too slow for him and trolley cars are simply in his way. His full, round face resembles a harvest moon; especially when he gets hold of a good cigar, the clouds of smoke resemble an approaching storm through which the moon smiles benignly. We never asked him his age, but we will take a chance on putting it down as forty-two. If he is any older he surely doesn't look it. When the barber shaves Ed Porter he certainly earns his money, because it is some work to curry that expansive smile once a day.

Saxe's Orpheum Theatre

eater Beautiful of St. Joseph, Mo., That Has Become One of the Most Popular Picture Houses of the West.

AXE'S ORPHEUM, surnamed the Theater Beautiful, in St. Joseph, Mo., is located at 5th and Edmond Streets, right in the heart of the city and on the best corner there. e building site is 50 feet wide and 100 feet deep. The ilding located thereon formerly belonged to the Schlitz ewery and was used as a large palm garden, being prac-ally a theater before the Saxe Brothers included it among ir enterprises. It cost $40,000 to remodel it.

The seating capacity is 1,000, there being 750 seats on the ound floor, 150 seats in the balcony and 100 chairs in the ges, extending to the stage around the balcony. Ladies n sit in these loges with their hats on without incon-niencing anybody. The floor is corked throughout the ilding to deaden the sound of late arrrivals, after the pre-itation has begun. An excellent ventilating system has en installed. Fresh air is brought direct from the outside, ing piped through the basement and coming through the or, while the foul air is drawn out by four 36-inch suction ns on the roof, drawing the air through the ceiling. These iling openings are about 6 feet apart. This system has en pronounced the best yet installed in any theater, by ex-rts who have wide knowledge of ventilation.

The inner foyer is illuminated by indirect lights. The alls are ornamented with large portraits of 16 leading otoplay actors and actresses, in large gold frames. The ilings are extremely high and the floor is of mosaic tile th a high wainscoting of marble. Inside the foyer, huge airways, one on each side, lead to the balcony, giving an posing and handsome appearance. All doors leading into e theater open directly to the aisles. The theater is so hted that one can read a newspaper in any part of the use while the picture is being shown.

The operator's room, which is built of concrete, is very roomy. Two machines are set in it, and two operators to a shift work during the day. The length of the throw is about 87 feet, and the size of the picture 14¼ by 18¼ feet. The screen is 15 by 18½ feet.

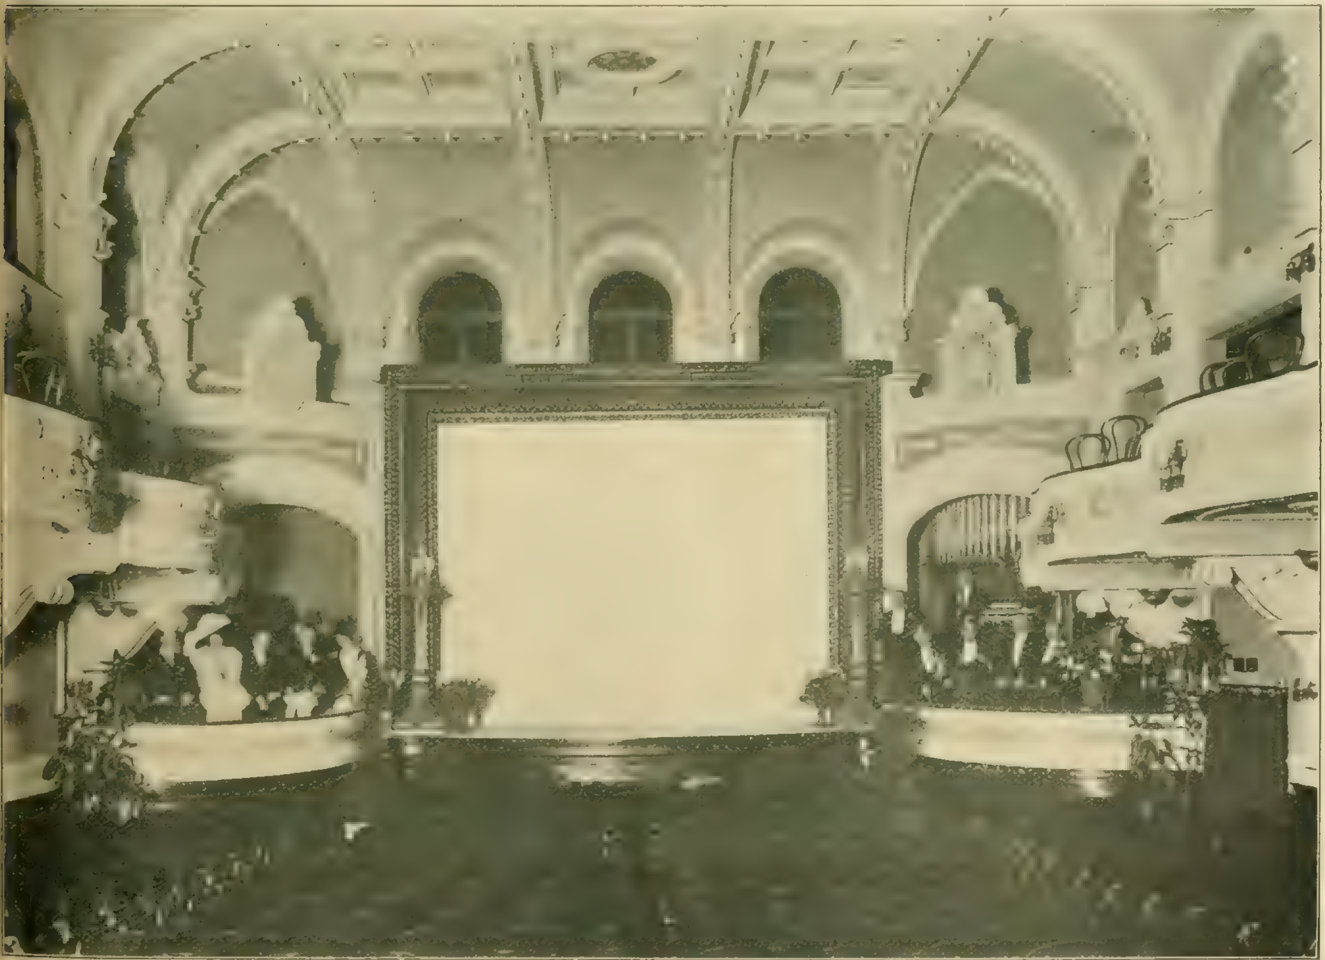
There are four exits from the balcony and four from the ground floor, all of which are independent of the entrances, which makes it exceedingly easy to handle crowds.

The color scheme used in the decoration of the interior is light old rose on the ceiling, which shades into a darker old rose on the walls, and this is set off with light green.

A unique idea has been carried out in seating arrangements and otherwise for musicians and entertainers. The accompanying illustration shows that the musicians are in front of the audience and in full view at all times. Six musicians and five entertainers are employed. The large pipe organ, which cost $5,000, can be seen in the illustration. Mr. Thomas Saxe was fortunate enough to secure Mr. Rowley, of Seattle, a well-known and thoroughly accomplished organist, for his orchestral force. A baby grand is placed on the left, for the entertainers, and an upright piano on the right, for the musicians, so that music is given continuously while the picture is being shown. At the right of the orchestra is an exit leading to a large rest room for the entertainers and musicians; off from this, on one side, is the ladies' rest room, on the opposite side is the gentlemen's smoking room, and back of that is the organ room, 15 by 15 feet.

Daily performances begin at noon and run continuously until 11:15 p. m. Mr. Thomas Saxe states that he cannot speak too highly of this house, as he has used all his past experience in building moving picture theaters to make this one of the most attractive and exclusive moving picture houses in the country. He is proud of it and confidently states that there is not another in the United States equal to it.

The Orpheum was opened up December 15, by Mr. E. P. Clyton, Mayor of St. Joseph, who stated in his opening address that he had traveled from coast to coast, but had not seen a better or a safer moving picture theater anywhere in the country.



Interior of Saxe's Orpheum Theater, St. Joseph, Mo.

The Orpheum gets its film service from the Kansas City branch of the General Film Company. Three reels are used to a program—one first run, one second run, and one eight days old. The program is changed four times a week—on Sunday, Monday, Wednesday and Friday.

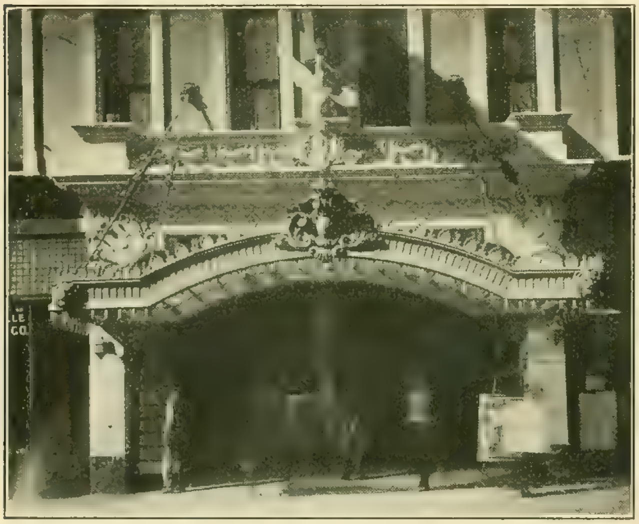
The admission is 10 cents for any seat in the house. The seats are very finely upholstered, each costing $4.50.

Mr. Thomas Saxe states that the people of St. Joseph have shown their appreciation by very liberal patronage, and that his business up to the present has been far beyond expectations.

NOVELTY THEATER.

Louisville, Ky's Newest Picture Theater a Model in Point of Construction and Equipment.

The newest, one of the largest and one of the most magnificent moving picture theaters in the entire South, was opened recently in Louisville, Ky., in the heart of the retail shopping district. The new showhouse is called The Novelty. The house is extremely novel from an architectural standpoint. The dimensions of the structure permit of its being a real theater. Its capacious lobby and commodious auditorium are richly furnished. The auditorium is a marvel of novelty. Comfortable seats, spaced well apart, broad aisles, and an interior that is as bright as day even while the pictures are being shown, combine to make the Novelty interior emblematic of the name of the house in the highest degree.



Novelty Theater, Louisville, Ky.

The theater's equipment is also expressive of the last word in novelties. From the imposing doorkeeper, standing exactly 7 feet tall, to the seven-piece orchestra, including some unusually novel instruments, the keynote of house equipment has been the establishment of the institution as something that will stick in the public mind because it is "so different." A ladies' retiring-room, neatly and luxuriously furnished, is a great convenience. After you have left Broadway three or four blocks behind you will discover a handsome stained glass canopy swung over a wide frontage of sidewalk on the west side of the avenue just south of Green Street. You hear no sound of blatant music, and you eventually are struck with the impression that this is a photoplay house, with admission of but 10 cents and such luxurious accommodations that you have to look again.

The front of the Novelty figuratively "hits you in the eye" because it is entirely different from that of most picture houses. The lobby is spacious. A dazzling array of ceiling lights is scintillatingly reflected from the polished surfaces of the marble walls and floor, and the six-foot wainscoting of plate mirror which extends around the vestibule. Passing from a 41 by 40 foot lobby you enter through the right hand door into an auditorium 41 by 120 feet in dimension. The treasurer behind the box office wicket is a jolly personage arrayed in a picturesque Turkish costume, and the ticket chopper is a 7-foot Hercules dressed in Russian Cossack garb.

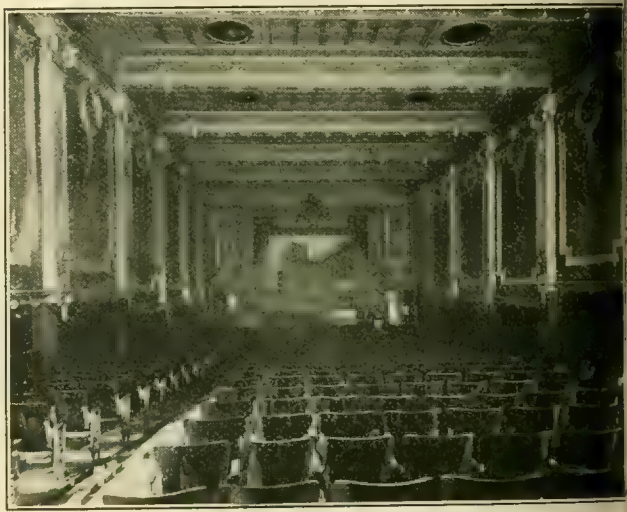
The interior of the house is clearly lighted by a range of shaded wall drops, each containing a 100-c. p. tungsten, while the show is going on. An attractive Bluegrass maiden in Russian soldier garb shows you to a seat. The chair is upholstered four inches with soft material covered by smooth green leather, and the seat is not only of ample width, but is also spaced with 33 inches of knee room between it and the sligh lower chair in front.

The interior of the Novelty is beautifully decorated in old rc a dark rich red and gold. The walls, paneled, are finished old rose with gold stripes and borders picked out in dark r The shades of nearly 500 interior lamps, counter-sunk in ceiling, are also red. High up near the ceiling in the 30-f inside wall there are eighteen 24-inch vents, nine on each si equpped with exhaust fans which keep the interior fresh. ample system of steam heating warms the interior. At extreme western wall, set twelve feet above the floor, there a big mirror screen, 14 by 20 feet, which is the largest plate its kind ever installed in a Southern theater. The screen is h an inch thick, finished with satin silver. The screen was made the F. M. Rainbusch Mirror Screen Company, of Shelbyvi Ind., and was shipped to Louisville in a specially arranged with a slot for the mirror that nearly touched the railroad t in order to provide clearance for the upper edge of the pi from tunnel roofs and bridges.

At the eastern end of the house, 120 feet distant from screen, a commodious balcony has been erected just above entrance and exit doors which open into the lobby. The balcc contains the operating room, a big concrete apartment which unusual in that it affords not only plenty of space but act comfort for the operators. The equipment of the room is tirely of steel, including film racks, holders and machines, t motiographs being used in projecting the pictures.

The Novelty program consists of three reels of Licens films, a vocal solo, a vocal trio and an organ recital. There i pipe organ of size, an electric piano with violin attachme a set of electric bells, a drummer and a couple of string instruments, with three vocalists forming the trio, and soloist.

M. Switow is the photoplay magnate owning the Novel as well as other houses in the three Falls Cities, Louisville, K and New Albany and Jeffersonville, Ind. In addition to Novelty, in the Bluegrass metropolis, Mr. Switow is owner the Crystal, on Market Street near Third Avenue, the Dre Theater and the Airdome in Jeffersonville, Ind., and the Victo and Crystal houses in New Albany, Ind. He gained his init start in the moving picture world seven years ago while operati a small confectionery business in Shelbyville, Ind., a f miles from Louisville.



Novelty Theater, Louisville, Ky.

The new Louisville theater cost approximately $40,000, a Mr. Switow is now at work upon improvements and enlarg ments of his Jeffersonville and New Albany properties, wh will extend the amount he has invested in amusements for Fall Cities to about $100,000. Through several years' experier and the adoption of the most approved methods of business former Shelbyville confectioner has become one of the leadi moving picture show authorities in the Ohio valley.

Associated with Mr. Switow in the management of Falls C holdings is C. E. Hampson, one of the most expert and practi picture showmen in the South. Mr. Hampson is a veter newspaper man, having held a position on the editorial st of the Cincinnati Inquirer during his early business life. Ha Gero, an experienced theater manager who has been associat with the Switow houses for years, has been appointed ho manager at the Novelty.

COLONIAL THEATER, WICHITA, KAN.

Typical of many of the Western photoplay theaters is the Colonial, of Wichita. This is a $35,000 house, which stands upon a ground area of 25 by 140 feet. It is not difficult to alize that this theater was erected at a cost of $35,000 hen one glances at the accompanying illustrations and otes the elaborate decorative and construction work in all arts of it. The seating capacity is 900, of which 250 seats are in the balcony. There are several large exits in the house and the ventilating and cooling system is operated by the same plant which furnishes the heat in winter. The Colonial is owned by Mr. A. P. Mackay, of Denver, Col., who is also interested in several large photo theaters there. The ceiling of the Colonial is unusually high, which makes for pure air. In general the conditions at the Colonial have been such that there has never been any fear of violating fire, police and sanitary laws. The operating room is exceptionally large and complete, and considered by some of the inspectors to be the best in the State.

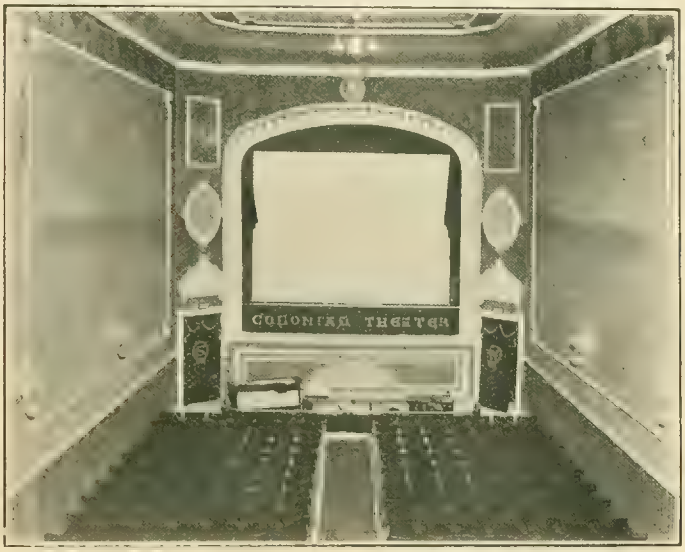
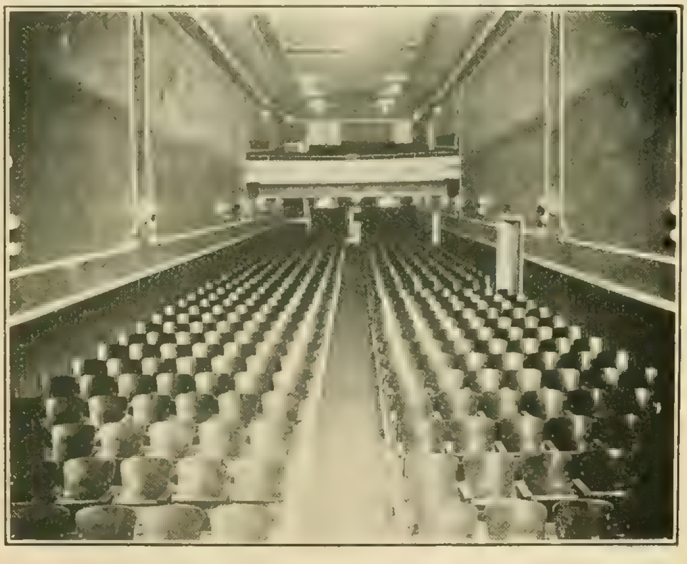
A Full House at the Colonial.

The Motiograph is the favored machine in this house and there are resistance devices of numerous kinds to take care of both alternating and direct current which enters the building. A mirror screen is one of the assets of the house. It is large enough to accommodate a picture 11 feet 6 inches by 15 feet 4 inches.



Colonial Interior—Looking Toward Sheet.

Musical features are furnished by piano and drummer with the assistance of a soundagraph, which is a combination cabinet containing many natural sound effects. The Colonial adheres to the sensible plan of changing its program twice weekly, on Mondays and Thursdays, there being no Sunday shows in Wichita. Located in the heart of the Wichita business district, the Colonial enjoys a heavy patronage from the opening time at noon until midnight.



Colonial Interior—Looking Toward Lobby.

We are indebted for the data of this sketch to Mr. Seth E. Barnes, the operator at the Colonial, whom we know to be one of the foremost in the movement for good projection. He has a wealth of good projection machinery at his disposal and the results obtained by him are said to be about the best there are to be found anywhere.

Butler Theater, Los Angeles, Cal.

The Butler Theater, located at 608 South Hill Street, Los Angeles, Cal., is one of the prettiest five-cent houses in that city. It runs licensed pictures, changing the programme three times a week. The seating capacity of the house is 250. The latest model Powers No. 6 machine is used, with a Mercury Arc Rectifier attachment. The throw is eighty feet and a picture [illegible] x 12 is projected.

NEW ORPHEUM THEATER, ALBUQUERQUE, N. M.

The New Orpheum Theater, which for several months has been under course of construction at the corner of Coal Avenue and Second Street, Albuquerque, N. Mex., is practically completed and has thrown open [illegible] doors to the public to receive many new patrons.

Its proprietor, Mr. W. V. Futrelle, of Futrelle & Company, real estate magnates, had the new house established for the purpose of extending to the residents in Albuquerque a high class theater, which will exhibit nothing but photopla of the best standard and high class vaudeville performanc

This theater is fireproof, having cement floors and a thc ough steel construction. The only wood about it is on t doors and windows. When the summer season again arriv this theater can easily be converted into an amphitheat at a very small cost. The stage is a most commodious or having an opening of 21 x 14 feet, and a depth of 25 fe and a total width of 50 feet. The best decorator and d signer obtainable painted the scenery and decorated t theater's interior and exterior. The opera chairs have be furnished by the Hardesty Manufacturing Company, of Can Dover, Ohio.

It is predicted that a good future is before this new ente prise, due to the excellent location on which this theat has been built, being the busiest section of the city.

Mr. David Clifford, who has much experience as manag of various picture theaters in this vicinity, is the manag Mr. Clifford claims in a recent letter to us that he receiv The Moving Picture World regularly and thinks there nothing like it.

The Isis Theater, Kellogg, Idaho.

When talking about the wild and wooly West, Kellogg, Idaho, is almost the last word. Nevertheless it has its picture theater, although there are no more than 2,000 people to draw from in that region. The Isis Theater was the first house opened in Kellogg, which event occurred on August 15, 1911. It seats 260 people and will accommodate a few more standing. if all the people shown in this illustration patronize the house regularly it ought to do some business. "Doc" S. S. Taylor is the proprietor. He started with a pianist and now has an orchestra of seven pieces, claiming that the music is as good a drawing card as the pictures, and also states that it is his experience that good music is more satisfactory than cheap "ham and egg" vaudeville.

The accompanying illustration shows the entrance to the Pearl Theater, of Albany, N. Y. This is one of the cozy little neighborhood houses located at 307 Central Avenue. It has a capacity of 500 persons and is well equipped for convenience of its patrons. Two Powers machines are used at the Pearl, projecting a fine picture. An addition has recently been built to his house, affording a complete stage with ample dressing rooms. It is doing a fine business.

Elwyn Simons will open a picture theater in the Stebbins Building, which is now being reconstructed for that purpose. A seating capacity of 450 will be provided for and the equipment will be of the very best. The admission will be five cents to any part of the house and the opening is scheduled for March 1st.

THE NEW SAVOY, EVANSVILLE, IND.

The New Savoy Theater, Evansville, Ind., which was being the most up-to-date moving picture theater in the Hoosier State. J. R. Brannan, the pioneer moving picture manager of Evansville, is the owner.

The foundation is of solid concrete and every provision and precaution possible has been made against fire. The entire rear of the house is a fire escape, with concrete steps leading out of the building, and two large exits in front. The walls of the house are unusually high and special attention has been given to ventilation, which is such that the air is changed every minute and a half. For the convenience of ladies and children an attractive rest room has been built near the entrance, and a retiring room for men has been placed on the balcony. The interior decorations are very artistic and an up-to-date lighting system has been installed.

The New Savoy Theater, Evansville, Ind.

A mirror screen, said to be the largest in Indiana, and, in fact, the largest ever made, is used for projection.

Two reels are used daily, the films being furnished by the General Film Co.'s branch, at 117 N. Dearborn Street, Chicago. First run films are used, and the Savoy in its presentations gives the first run of any Licensed films used in the city.

The Savoy seats over 500 people and the seats installed are comfortable and commodious. The accompanying illustration, giving a view of the front, scarcely does credit to this really modern and up-to-date house.

We notice that the new Savoy has a pleasing and artistic electric sign hung directly across the sidewalk. Such a sign gives a suggestion to the passer that promises an inviting interior. Between two houses, the one with the artistic sign, hung out across the way, is likely to get the best of the trade.

If the exterior of the theater is an indication of what may be seen inside, we fancy that the Orpheum is quite a handsome photoplay house. We also commend the display posters, especially the placing of the big poster high up where it can hardly escape the notice of everyone who chances to pass, whether he be on the street or on either sidewalk.

PICTURES OF SPECIAL INTEREST.

Gettysburg (Lubin).—At this season of the year this is a very timely picture, its historical importance makes it welcome anytime, while as a school picture it will be a constant illustrator of one of the most important events in American history. Guided by its sub-titles it forms a complete lesson at once attractive and instructive. A small party of visitors is seen being conducted over the battlefield and among the many monuments, so that it almost seems as though one were also in that party and actually visiting with them every point of interest. The most important monuments are shown in detail, while others are classified. The space alloted to the "unknown dead" is singularly impressive in its silent, uniform appearance. The single Confederate monument is also shown, and perhaps the actual relics of the war are most interesting. The gun which fired the first shot, an unexploded shell embedded in a cherry tree, and the marks of shot and shell upon buildings, will prove of more than ordinary interest to those now in school, who will have the advantage of seeing this film while learning the history of this eventful battle of the Civil War.

Across the Polar Seas (Pathe).—This is a voyage of a most unusual character and is more instructive than either attractive or picturesque, making it a highly educational film. A very realistic conception of the enormous floating icebergs is presented, making clear the nature of these natural enemies of the mariner in the northern seas. The coast line of Spitzenbergen Islands and Francis-Joseph Land is shown, also the toilsomeness of travel among and across the "fields of ice." A view of the Midnight Sun is the only relief from the cold monotony of the whole, and is, of course, an unusual picture. The film is a valuable addition to the geographical series.

New Year in Japan (C. G. P. C.).—As an illustrator of the customs and observances of this unique country and people, this is both an instructive and entertaining film. That the Japanese believe in prolonged festivities is gathered from the fact that the New Year celebrations begin fifteen days in advance. The houses decorated with green bamboo, and the streets festooned with banners, are the especial features of the holiday time; strolling actors go from house to house, besides giving exhibitions on the streets. The street of theaters is not much unlike the exterior of any show places in any country so far as the "poster" method of attractions are concerned. Commercial use of the occasion is made by the fact that merchants have samples of their productions paraded through the streets, evidently they believe "samples" are better than advertisements. The film is a welcome addition to "manners and customs in foreign countries."

Flowers for the "400" (Kalem).—This film is evidently intended as an industrial, one showing the cultivation of special and expensive or out-of-season flowers for the "400." It is a good attempt, but unfortunately falls short of any especial use on account of its ambiguity, being colorless one has to guess the kind of flowers which are growing, and seen gathered in bunches. The fact that they are not colored should not have been any disadvantage to the subject, a few sub-titles would have sufficed; the carelessness of these omissions makes the film valueless from any educational standpoint. It is, strange to say, the first picture of its kind which the writer has seen devoid of any indication as to its nature and purpose. The old saying of "losing the ship for lack of a coat of tar," is exemplified here: an uncolored flower garden is as a field of weeds if no explanations are given.

The Test (Selig).—This film is noticed here because its evident purpose is intended to show that criminolgy is controlled by environment. This is a scientifically debatable field. In this instance heredity is entirely ignored, and a criminal is reformed by being placed amid surroundings superior to his former lot, appealing to his manhood and ambitions. Of course, the experiment is successful and the man stands firm under "the test," an unusual development, however, is introduced in that the former criminal captures one of his earlier associates who commits a burglary in the house in which he himself is being tested.

The lesson is a good and practical one and doubtless possesses much truth in its principles, that environment of a right kind means reformation.

His Daughter (Edison).—This is a strong moral story. A father leaves home on account of an uncongenial wife, later years finds him a waiter in a New York restaurant. The daughter, too, unable to bear with her mother's faultfinding, is allured by the stage attractions to follow a traveling actor to the great city Under promise of marriage he takes her to a restaurant for a pre-nuptial dinner and sends for an actor friend to impersonate a clergyman and join him in mock marriage to the girl. The waiter, who is the girl's father, recognizes her, and not only intercepts the note arranging for the mock marriage, but prevents his daughter from taking her first dangerous drink. Of course, there is a scene, but the girl is saved and ultimately the family reunited, father, mother and daughter each discovering their own foolish mistakes. The suggestions to avoid home quarrels, the allurements of the stage and city, the foolish infatuation for actors, the pitfalls and deceits are all portrayed with a truthfulness that should help many a foolish girl to beware of a like experience, and save many a home from the unnecessary pain of quarrelsomeness.

Her Boys (Essanay).—A poor woman left alone with two boys, victims of direst poverty which breaks up the home, is in after years reunited to her boys by means of their Sunday-school Bibles. A fitting drama of life in which a religious principle is successfully involved. One boy leaves home to relieve his mother of the cost of keeping him; the other is placed in a "home," and later adopted by a judge.

After twenty years the older one rescues an old lady from the insults of a drunkard and is falsely accused of robbery, the old lady engages a lawyer to defend her rescuer and he is acquitted. In a natural series of explanations, the principles of the Sunday-school Bibles are explained. The original Bibles are produced, with the boys' names, showing them as brothers and sons of the old lady.

The story will bear telling anywhere and is of a proper character to include in Sunday-schools, as at least an evidence of applied education, and as such is commended.

EDISON ACTIVITIES.

Edison players are going some these days. While there are two companies working at top speed at the Bronx studios, one company under the direction of Mr. J. Searle Dawley is working in Bermuda and another, under the direction of Mr. Oscar C. Apfel, is working in the vicinity of Waterville, Me. The operations of the Waterville company has been attracting no little attention among the natives of that region and one of the local papers records a narrow escape from drowning experienced by Miss Miriam Nesbitt, the leading lady. The company was getting some pictures of the ice harvest on the Kennebec River when Miss Nesbitt drove the sleigh upon which she was riding into the icy waters of the river. Both horse and player were rescued, but the incident created great excitement in the village. From reports received from Waterville the Edison players will bring back a quantity of interesting negatives.

SPECIAL FEATURE FILM COMPANY WANT EDUCATIONAL PICTURES.

The Special Feature Film Company, with offices at 5 West 14th Street, and who, by the way, were the first regular dealers in ex clusive feature film service in New York City, report a growing demand for educational and historical subjects by the school boards of the various cities throughout the country. Mr. Robert Dreher, treasurer of the company, claims the American manufacturer is losing out to his competitor across the sea in thi branch of the industry, which appears very strange on accoun of the abundance of natural resources in this country adapte for subjects of this kind. If the manufacturer releasing two o more reels a week, would make one educational or historical pi ture to fill this growing want, there is no doubt that the increas in sales would more than offset the extra cost of production.

S. S. Hutchinson, president The American Film Manufacturing Company, spent a large part of last week in New York City, following his return from the Western studio at La Mesa, Cal.

MONTGOMERY LIKES MISS RUSSELL.

For some time Miss Martha Russell, a former Essanay player, has been lecturing on motion pictures. Among other heaters she has visited is Montgomery's house in Jacksonville, Fla. Mr. Montgomery is a good judge of a theater attraction and he was favorably impressed with Miss Rusell's work, of which he writes as follows:

"I consider Miss Martha Russell one of the cleverest lady ecturers that it has been my good pleasure to hear. She makes a very fine appearance, is a cultured lady, has familiarzed herself with the moving picture business, and through her great enthusiasm compels attention of every person in her audience. She tells them what they would like to know of the moving picture business in a manner that proves most pleasing. Her hearers become so interested that at imes the many questions they propound to her cause her to have to work overtime; but this she seems to find pleasure in. I consider that she has done the Essanay Company more good than an advertising campaign for which they might have spent thousands of dollars. She not only does good or the Essanay Company, but she attracts an enormous rowd of the best people of each city in which she appears, thereby making her engagement profitable for herself and he theater management. I think she stimulates an interest n the business and creates more favorable talk than anything or any person for which I have spent my money in this connection. She is deserving of recognition through your columns, and should be appreciated by the moving picture business in general."

GEM THEATER, HOUSTON, TEXAS.

Wicks & Co., who are operating the Star and Vaudette picture houses, have recently secured a central location (one door south of Star Theater) for the establishment of the Gem Theater. Extensive improvements, approximating $10,000, are now being made. Its seating capacity will be 65. Mr. A. J. Exitious, its manager, is sparing no expense o make this new show house in every way up to the minute. t will open March 1st.

"GETTING A HIRED GIRL" (Essanay).

Reviewed by Jas. S. McQuade.

FARCE comedy, of the rough house type, abounds in "Getting a Hired Girl," which will be released by Essanay on March 7. It is by the Eastern company, and Harry Cashman carries off the lion's share of the honors in the role of Bridget, the husky domestic servant, whose antics in the Budd household remind one of the havoc wrought by a bull in a china shop.

There would be a charge of insanity were one to take this laughable medley of situations seriously at any stage. The atmosphere of bedlam prevails throughout and it is only when the two evil spirits, in the form of housemaids, depart that we breathe freely and thank Heaven for the riddance.

That scene in a public dining room, where the new hired girl shows the effects of the refreshments partaken of by squirting the contents of a syphon bottle in the faces of guests is neither edifying nor amusing. It is horse play that exceeds even the ultra limits of farce comedy. The film, however, will be highly relished, as a whole, as being a forceful satirical skit on the hardships and difficulties experienced by home owners throughout the United States, in securing desirable domestic help of the feminine gender.

Mr. and Mrs. Budd are the victims of the story. The lattel tells Bridget, the new housemaid, to make herself at home. This the servant begins to do in the bedroom of her mistress, by helping herself to sweetmeats, powder and puff and perfume.

The venerable Mr. Budd gets acquainted with Bridget's dusting powers in the parlor, from which he escapes through a cloud of dust. Hearing a crash, he rushes back and finds that Bridget has upset the large table lamp. He attempts to give her a lecture, but is put to flight by the contents of the dust pan, which he receives full in the face. Seeking refuge in the library, he has regained his composure, when he is startled by the fall of bric-à-brac and art ware behind him. Again it is the fiendish Bridget, who has climbed on a chair to dust the articles. On this occasion he is again forced to flee, barely escaping the impact of a valuable art vase, which has been used as a missile. Other indignities are suffered by the master and mistress at the hands of the servant, until the climax is reached, and then Mr. Budd determines to go to town and hire a girl himself.

The experiences of Mr. Budd, while on this quest, are many and varied. Suffice it to say that when a friend, whom he chances to meet, offers the services of his housemaid until his return from Europe, Mr. Budd fairly falls on his shoulder and weeps. But the blow that fairly killed Budd comes a little later. On his arrival home, with his newly found treasure, he is presenting the girl to Mrs. Budd, with his face wreathed in smiles, when Bridget passes through the hall. Each girl looks at the other and Bridget cries, "My long-lost sister." Then they embrace and with indignant glances at the hapless Mr. Budd depart arm in arm. Meanwhile Budd falls backwards in the arms of his wife in a dead faint.

WASHINGTON NOTABLES IN PICTURE.

The Capital City was recently filmed by the Feature Film Company to accompany the lecture of Mr. Barry Bulkley entitled "The City of Washington." The first presentation of this was at the dinner given at the Cosmos Club in honor of Dr. Harvey W. Wiley, the national pure food man. The great chemist is shown under a number of circumstances and with several of the prominent men of the city. Aside from the national buildings of Washington and its parks and avenues, a feature that brought forth much applause was Great Falls in snow and ice. While this was secured under intense cold, no static effects hindered the clearness of the picture. Another unusual scene was a fight between two sea lions in the zoo. Among the men of prominence that appear on the film are Mr. L. O. Howard, entomologist of the Department of Agriculture; Congressman Davis, John Foord, of the American Asiatic Monthly; Willis L. Moore, chief of the Weather Bureau; Chas. E. Munroe, dean of George Washington University; Rev. Rolland Cotton Smith, pastor of All Souls Church; the Commissions of the District of Columbia, and A. S. Cushman, of the Institute of Industrial Research. As an intimate filming of the people and places of the national capital, this reel is exceptionally interesting, and Mr. Bulkley anticipates using it in other cities.

"THE BETTER MAN" (Reliance).

A picture of good old-fashioned country life in winter s dear to the heart of every picture fan. Many a business m in the crowded city in viewing "The Better Man" will e transported back to his boyhood days with reminiscent ple ure. With such men it will open up a train of fond recoll tion which will probably be the cause of their keeping th seats to see the picture a second time. There is no deny g the fact that there is always something charming abou a rural story that appeals to all classes, whether they be c folks or rural citizens.

Such a picture is "The Better Man." It has the breath f country life in it. Country life in winter time, with its h and affairs. The action of the piece for the most part tal s place at an old-fashioned kitchen dance at the home o a prosperous farmer. It made the present scribe a trifle vious to observe the guests arriving in a body, sitting n straw upon the platform of a large two-horse sledge w their feet hanging over the edge. One could almost h r sleigh bells in the air, and the peals of merry laughter as e young folks piled out of the sledge and crowded into e farmhouse. They were welcomed into a great big kitchen y the old folks, and the merrymaking was good to look up . They danced old-fashioned figures and tapped the cider b rel frequently. The girls played a joke on the boys and h their faces washed with snow for taking such liberties wh the young men. After the party they all went home in e way that they had come, over the glistening snow, in the g bob-sled, while the folks at the farmhouse waved good-b .

Of course, there is a story running throughout the pict e —a story of love and jealousy—but it is not allowed to tract from the general happy vein of the story. It appe s rather as an undercurrent until the guests have depart , when it arrives at a culmination and finishes the picture. Te farmer's daughter selects one of two men as "The Bet r Man." He happens to be the young man who at the beg ning of the picture did not have as good a chance as his ri .

Projection Department

Edited by F. H. RICHARDSON.

Continuing our talk to managers concerning the picture on the screen: e manager should learn to recognize the slightest discoloration in the ht. This is the first, prime requisite in the judging of projection; also is the hardest thing to learn. It is a matter which must be studied. ce in a while the film itself will give the effect of light discoloration, t one learns, if one makes a study of it, to tell pretty accurately whether trouble lies in the light or the film. The manager who is "on the job" l study and learn these things, and learn them well.

Modern projection machinery has finally reached a state of perfection ere it is possible to project a perfect film absolutely rock-steady. In s connection, however, it must be noted that none but the Pathe company s, to date, reached the point of putting out a perfect film—perfect in rforation, I mean; though some of the other manufacturers are a very se second. Many are still far from the goal. It is not always possible to tect, by looking at the picture, whether the jump is due to poor perforan or the machine. A fairly correct idea may be formed, however. As a le, movement of the picture due to bad perforation will manifest itself in more or less unevenly spaced jump and the jump will usually be conlerable. Movement due to the machine will, as a general thing, either be rhythmic, steady movement up and down or sidewise, or else a constant, ady vibration. Remember that these rules are by no means infallible. there is a steady, rhythmic movement up and down, four times to every rn of the machine crank, it means that (a) the intermittent sprocket is t true; (b) the intermittent sprocket shaft is not true; (c) dirt on the ermittent sprocket. If the picture simply vibrates on the screen, and es so constantly, it may be due to (a) lost motion in intermittent movent; (b) tension springs too loose. If the whole picture move sidewise ery time the machine crank goes around, the machine is not properly chored down and is swaying from side to side slightly. I am not atmpting to cover this subject fully, by any manner of means. I simply ant to call the attention of managers to certain faults, which are too ten glaring, and indicate where they lie. I am not trying to make erators out of managers. If managers ever learn what real excellence a picture consists of, they certainly will demand it, and that means tter projection. I am perfectly willing to force, if necessary, the operator deliver perfect projection, but I fully realize that in literally thousands instances managers themselves know so very little about the possibilities projection, and have such slight knowledge of the difference between a od picture and a poor one, that they actually will not permit the operator do his best work. You may be certain that such managers will have to ake up and get busy or else be eliminated in the not distant future. The blic is learning, if they are not. Shadowy, jump pictures will not be ry much longer tolerated and unless the manager puts them out of his siness, they will put him out of business. My next talk will be on the l-important subject of speed.

EDISON MACHINE.—Meaford, Ont., writes: "In January 6th and ebruary 3rd issues, I note complete instructions of the Power's and andard machines. I am using an Edison Model B and would very much e to see it explained as clearly as were the other machines. I have cerinly learned a great deal through instructions which have appeared and in y opinion they will be a great benefit to operators. I thought I knew all out a machine, but found that I can still learn. Along the line of films I ve run the 'Colleen Bawn' and 'Arrah-na-Pogue.' These subjects took fine, d, if we could get such pictures, together with the proper advertising, ore frequently, we could, in my opinion, afford to pay a somewhat ineased price for film service. Why not encourage the manufacturers to rnish film exchanges with heralds, so that we could get them with each m. What is needed is some lucid explanation of each subject."

The Edison Model B machine instructions are now in course of preparan. The Simplex will be published next, followed by the Edison and Mograph. As stated before, these instructions are being run in the order in hich I am able to get them completed. As to "heralds," I presume you ean small hand-bills, to be used in advertising the subject. It might be actical to do this on special subjects for which there is a large demand. can readily understand, however, that it would not be practical with dinary films. The manufacturer might have 100,000 heralds printed coving one film and only dispose of one-tenth of that number, whereas, the ry next subject released might take twice that number, and still the deand not be nearly supplied.

BUNCH OF QUESTIONS.—Chicago, Ill., propounds the following: (1) Is there an eccentric bushing in all machines? (2) In case of emerncy can a water rheostat be used? (3) Kindly give me the amperage of 110 V adjustable Bell & Howell compensarc. (4) Should there be a sizng sound in the compensarc? (5) What causes upper loop on Motiograph increase? (6) What causes terminals to burn out? (7) What causes m to pump once in a while? Have tried adjusting Idlers and tension ws but without result."

(1) There are eccentric bushings on all except "finger feed" machines.) It can. (3) My recollection is the amperage is 40, 55 and 60. Call the Kleine Optical Co., Chicago, or Bell & Howell, either one. They can ll you. Why you should write to New York for information of this nd, when you can step to a telephone booth and find out in three inutes, I don't exactly understand. (4) When the line switch is closed d the arc not operating there will be a very faint hum in the primary ils, also, probably, when the arc is in operation there may be a faint und, but it should not be audible except when you place your ear close to e transformer. Perhaps the "sizzing" sound is in the carbons and not in the transformer, the same being due to vibration of the carbons. (5) The probability is the intermittent idler roller is not in perfect adjustment. (6) Presumably you mean the lamp leads. They might be caused by several things, such as poor contact, coupled with excessive heating in the lamp house. If you are using a heavy amperage the lamp leads should be cut off at least once a week at the back of the lamp house and the part inside the lamp house thrown away. (7) You will have to describe that jump a little more clearly. You speak of tension "jaws." There is no such thing on a machine. I would strongly advise you to do some good hard studying; also that you procure one of the Handbooks. You evidently still have considerable to learn.

MOTOR DRIVE.—Guthrie, Okla., sends in a sketch of motor drive which he says he has not tried out. Says he is going on the road and I will probably hear from him often. Sends in, also, a sketch of a threading device attached on the front of the machine and opposite magazine.

In the first place, Guthrie, we shall be glad to hear from you at any time. In the second place, space is so limited that we cannot consume it with the publication of the motor drive device until such time as you have tried the scheme out in actual practice. Frankly, I do not think very much of it, for the reason that high speed worm gear contacts would not, in my judgment, prove satisfactory under such conditions. As to the threading-in-frame device, you would find that an inspector would immediately condemn it for the very simple reason that they would not allow any electrical wires or fixtures in contact with the machine magazine. In this they are quite right, too.

GHOSTLY GHOST.—Chicago, Ills., writes: "Have not been able to remove a blue ghost which made its appearance a few days ago. Have a Motiograph machine and lamphouse. Using 40 amperes on 110 V. A.C. current. Condensers are 6½ and 7½, the latter in front. Tried every possible way to remove it and have moved the lamphouse backward and forward."

If the ghost only made its appearance a few days ago I think very likely you changed one of the condensers about then. Presumably the new lens is of the same focal length as the old one, but unfortunately cheap condensening lenses are not accurate. You have not told me the size of the picture and the throw. Of course I have only guessed at the above solution, but the probability is I have given the correct answer, unless you have changed something else. Haven't altered your method of setting your carbons, have you?

MORE ABOUT COMMUTATORS.—Chicago, Ills., writes: "I note requests for information concerning cleaning of motor commutators in January 27th issue. New York City, who asks for advice, does not state his reason for using emery cloth on commutator. Presumably it was to stop sparking at the brushes. If so, then he has taken the quickest method to start sparking, rather than the right method to stop it, or, if already started, to make it much worse. Commutator sparking is caused by (a) brushes being loose. (b) Brushes badly burned or broken, therefore making poor contact with the commutator. (c) Brushes welded to holder and thus not working thoroughly on the commutator surface. (d) Commutator badly worn and in need of renewal. (e) Commutator may have a flat bar projecting above the general surface. (f) Flame at the commutator may be caused by broken lead wire or coil, which produces a greenish flame and burns two bars diameterically opposite to each other. If motor is not immediately shut off the bar will be badly burned, as will also the insulation. (g) A short circuit at the field coil, or a field circuit improperly connected will produce flare at the commutator. However, brushes improperly set are the cause of ninety per cent. of commutator trouble. Brushes on a motor must usually be set back of the neutral point, or with a 'backward lead.' This tends to demagnetize the fields and as weakening the fields of the motor tends to increase the speed, and as increase of load on a shunt wound motor tends to prevent the speed falling, the shunt motor is very nearly self regulating. The best type of motor is built so that the armature shaft oscillates back and forth a very short distance, thus causing even wear on the commutator and preventing the cutting of grooves in the same. I have handled some very large, as well as small D.C. motors. I find that the less 'dope' such as oils, vaseline and compounds one uses, the better, also the less emery cloth, sand-paper, etc., the better. If the commutator is handled properly at the start, and the brushes kept in perfect adjustment, the commutator will soon obtain a high polish; after which about the only care necessary is wiping dust off same with a soft lint rag. If commutator is worn, sand-paper may be used by tacking same on a smooth level block of wood and holding same rigidly against the commutator, after which the fine particles of copper dust must be removed from along armature or fields where they have fallen. They can usually be blown out by an electric fan. This treatment, however, is recommended only when the commutator becomes quite badly worn."

Chicago is perfectly right in most of his conclusions. However, my own experience has been that a very slight application of a good compound occasionally, helps considerably. The great trouble is that many men who use compounds, use them altogether too freely. "A little bit goes a long way," is the rule to follow when using such things. The grinding down of the commutator of a motor is hardly practical, as there is no way of revolving it, except by its own power, and running a motor under its own power while grinding down the commutator would not be a good proposition at all. I have ground down the commutator of a large Edison three-wire generator by using a block of wood turned out to fit the commutator about ¼ of its circumference, and lining the groove with sand-paper. I [illegible] course I had an engine to run the [illegible] pretty well [illegible]

[illegible] I want to say that lead [illegible] and the [illegible] batteries with [illegible] amperes [illegible] why the plan would not work on a larger scale for heavier currents without heating, al- [illegible] expected [illegible] the Department. I have studied the proposition not a little, just for my own individual satisfaction. I believe that theoretically the thing is impossible, but practically it is made possible by the introduction of resistance due to heating of conductors and contacts. Especially is this true in small machines where the heating backs up, even to the brush contacts, and into the armature conductors. This, of course, is injurious to the generator, although it be [illegible] facts make it possible to operate without resistance, it still requires very close and skill- [illegible] in the course of our discussion. I [illegible] A.C. generator. As soon as I can get hold of any kind of a hand feed arc lamp I intend to try the experiment of using short and heavy leads and eliminating all the resistance I possibly can. (Good night if you are going to cut all resistance out of that [illegible] Editor.) By using a machine of this size in which the heating of conductors will not occur so readily I shall be very much surprised if I am able to maintain an arc at all."

My dear boy, so shall I. That is to say an arc supplying projection light. If you try to operate an arc lamp without resistance on a 100 ampere A.C. generator, I would advise you to do it along about Christmas time, remembering as I do, that the fireworks occur at Christmas time in- [illegible] South. If the machine were a shunt wound D.C. generator the shock occurring in starting the arc will merely drop the voltage of the machine. However, I think you have the wrong dope on this thing all the way through. I have published your letter, not because I think you are right, but because the error into which you have fallen may cause others to learn considerable in the process of correcting your error.

INTERMITTENT SPROCKET.—St. Louis, Mo., writes asking if I do not think the rims of intermittent sprockets are made too light; also asks if there is any reason why heavy sprockets, such as are used for upper and lower feed sprockets, would not be suitable for intermittent.

Most decidedly, St. Louis, they would not. If you would stop and think for a moment, considering the fact that the intermittent sprocket starts and stops at the rate of, approximately, sixteen times per second, you would certainly see that the heavier the rim the greater would be the inertia to be overcome, both in starting and stopping, hence, the heavier would be the wear on both star and cam pin. As a matter of fact the lighter the intermittent sprocket is made, so long as there remains ample metal to render it rigid and firmly support the teeth, the better. Every bit of weight that can be eliminated from the intermittent sprocket is just that much [illegible] intermittent movement.

STOCKTON TROUBLES.—Stockton, Cal., writes: "You are doing a great good work, and your efforts are bound to bring good results in placing the profession on a higher plane, where it should be. The country is overrun with would-be-operators, rightly called crank turners. I have been operating since 1904 and I don't know it all yet. The profession is prac- [illegible] all learn more of the finer points of projection. The question I will put to you is one of vital importance to me, and, I believe, it will be, or has been, a question which has confronted a great many who are capable operators. WHAT CAN I DO? [illegible] this part of the country. I came here about a year and a half ago. This was the first opportunity I ever had to connect with an organization. The first thing I found out when I asked for a position was that the operators had a union. Being a man [illegible] immediately [illegible] up some of the members of the union, and told them that I would like to join them in their efforts to build up the profession. I was greeted with open arms, furnished an application blank, and proceeded to affiliate with the brothers of my profession, or rather try to. The initiation fee at that time was $10.00. I filed my application, together with $5.00 which they required. My application hung there for six weeks. All this time I was not working. Finally I went to them and asked why I had not heard from my application. I was told [illegible] there was no position open. How- [illegible] crank turner, which [illegible] getting. [illegible] was only a union man. A week later I received a letter from the union stating that I had been [illegible]. They did not state in the letter why I had been rejected. I went at once to the secretary of the [illegible] that [illegible] thought I [illegible] another member and asked him why. He said they had all the men they wanted in the union. Still another asserted they did not believe I knew enough about [illegible] I went to work for this man who had a would-be-operator who was anything but satisfactory. I received a better salary than he paid the other man. Of course the proprietor of the theater expected to be called to account by the Central Labor Council. The committee from the council investigated all sides of the matter and reported to the council, with the result that the Operators' Union was instructed by the Council to either take me into the union or leave me alone. They then did not bother either myself nor the theater for months. At last I left and a local union man was put in, who proved [illegible] admitted to the proprietor [illegible] the [illegible] understand a [illegible] from San Francisco. He didn't [illegible] imported another. He was [illegible] he proved to be O. K. But the [illegible] which paid him better, so then they put the secretary of the Local Union in. He was very short in [illegible] P. M. and at 9 P. M. called the proprietor up and t him he could not handle the machine. The proprietor sent for me to co back at an increase in salary. I started to work, made another appl tion to join the union and was assured by several members that I wo be admitted. Meanwhile the initiation fee had been raised from $10.00 $50.00. I never kicked. Posted $25.00 with my application and finally called up for examination. You should have seen that exami tion. I have not got it at present or I would send you a copy. Th were twenty-four questions, some of them very simple and all right, some of them were entirely out of place. One that amused me was: 'W is an Ohm Sifter?' The next day after the examination I received a let together with a check for $25.00, stating that I had failed to pass 7 of the questions. But they have never bothered me nor the house si That was some four months ago. Instead of being rejected, this tim failed to pass the examination. The first time I was given no examinati The present members were all charter members and no examination ever required. The managers were compelled to hire them or suffe boycott. The union scale is 63 hours a week, or 9 hours a day. I kn for a fact that I am getting $5.00 a week more salary than any o operator in town, simply because I get the results on the screen. Bu have no union card and I feel I am entitled to the protection which ganization gives to the laboring man. I have as good a boss as one co desire. My employer also is entitled to all the business he can get, there is bound to be an under current where such things are brought I am entitled to a union card, but how am I going to get it, under s circumstances? I come to you for advice. Would the International Ope tors' Union stand for any such condition of affairs? I don't know. I kn that I have taken up considerable of your time, but I wanted to lay case before you so that you would understand it. As for projection of it, I have no troubles, but I might have to call upon you at any ti I have ordered one of your Hand Books, so you see I am still looking information. I have a well ventilated operating room, 10 x 10 x small, but handy. 1910 Motiograph with a Butler Formastat made in Francisco; the best I ever have seen. 110 volts A.C.; throw, 65 f picture 15 feet. Everybody says the best picture in town. But that k of talk does not do me much good. I want to get into the union. If can advise me, I assure you it will be highly appreciated. I am enti in the dark as to what recourse I have, but there must be some."

I have given your letter space, except that portion which deals w hearsay and which reflected upon the ability of certain Stockton operat for the reason that it has the ring of truth. The labor movement, a all other things, stands for, and must stand for justice as between man man. That is the very genus of the movement. If the Stockton Operat Union has treated you in the manner set forth, then the Stockton Operat Union certainly is at fault—and very much at fault. If the organizat is composed of capable high-class men, and if all the positions in Stock are filled with such men, the same being members of the organizat then following the usual procedure in such matters, they would have right to say to you that you, being a stranger, could not come in and take place of one of their own men. This sounds unjust and I am not pared to say that I agree with the procedure, but it, nevertheless, is plan usually followed by organizations of stage employees and operat It might be noted, however, that so far as I know, it is not the plan lowed by any other labor organization. It is rather a difficult proposit to say to a man "you cannot earn your living in this town by follow your profession." The Stockton operators should certainly, however, h put it on that basis instead of keeping you waiting six weeks while t "considered" your application. Believing in calling a spade a s that certainly was an outrage, provided, of course, it occurred as you h related it. I do not want to say more at this time. Certainly the other has the right to be heard. I am almost 3,000 miles away and don't w to make many comments, except in a general way, until I have both si of the matter. I must repeat, however, that your letter sounds like truth, else it would not have received space. It is not pleasant for me be compelled to write thus concerning the acts of a union, but the act of the labor council seems to bear out your claims of wrong, and a wr committed by a union is just as bad as a wrong done by anybody els yes, even worse, since unionism, as I said, stands for justice and right

NEW UNION.—Connecticut (name of town suppressed), writes: the correspondence column of February 10th issue, I see the Pitts Mass., operators have organized and joined the Moving Picture Operat Union of America. I had supposed there was only one way to becom union operator, viz: joining the I. A. T. S. E. At present I am t to organize an auxiliary to the I. A. T. S. E. here. I had rather se operators affiliated with the above named union, provided it is affil with the American Federation of Labor. Will you kindly let me k which is the best of the two organizations from the operator's standpoi I have always believed it would be a good thing for the operators to h an international union of their own. There are plenty of them to s a charter from the A. F. of L."

I think, Connecticut, whoever sent in the paragraph telling of the ganization of Pittsfield operators, did not know the right name of the ganization, and wrote in a title that sounded good to him. So far know there is no such organization. Under present conditions the I. A S. E. is the only proper affiliation for the operator, though I am incli to agree with you that a separate international union would be, perhap better proposition for the operators.

POWER'S NO. 6 TROUBLE.—Noblesville, Ind., writes: "Hav received and am more than pleased with it, thought I am unable to the remedy for a present trouble, viz: when I raise the framing leve my Power's No. 6 clear up, the machine runs hard and the film tea two. When the lever is clear down, the machine runs hard but the does not break. The mechanism runs very nicely when the framing leve central."

I am inclined to think your carriage frames down too far and strikes lower sprocket idler bracket, in which case you should loosen one of upright separate rods upon which the framing carriage slides up and do the same being held by two screws, one above and one below. Pull rod out from below. Get a piece of small pipe which will just fit ove With a hack saw cut off a piece of this just long enough to prevent arriage from coming down far enough to strike the idler sprocket. Before u do this, however, set the carriage clear down, and, removing the front te of the machine, measure the distance from the bottom of the car- ge to the casting beside the rod you propose to take out. From the fact t the machine runs hard when framed clear-up, I am inclined to think t connecting link (682, plate 7, page 37, January 6 issue) is loose in its ys. If so, loosen screws, 745, and tighten set screws (two of them) , until the lost motion or play in connecting link 782 is eliminated. All s deals with plate 7, January 6 issue. If neither of the above eliminates trouble, then you will have to describe the matter more in detail.

NOT A BOOB.—El Centro, Cal., writes, ordering a Handbook and s: "The question I asked concerning condensers some time ago was nply to prove a bet with one of the operators here in the valley. I am t the boob you tried to call me."

The letter referred to and my reply appears on page 124, January 13 ue. Just how you manage to construe my reply thus I must confess I at a loss to understand.

LIGHT.—Enid, Okla, writes: "We have extended our theater 22 feet, king 102 feet throw. Throw before was 80 feet. We always had the ghtest picture in this part of the country at 80 feet; but now at 102 the ture is far from clear. The picture is 15 feet. We use a 6 inch E. F. s and two 6½ condensers, same being 14 inches from the aperture. ve tried 7½ and 8½; two 7½'s; 6½ and 7½; also, 7½ and 6½, but n do better with two 6½ lenses. Also tried moving the lamphouse back 18 inches, but it won't do. Current is 104 volt A.C., 60 cycle. Use amperes through an economizer. Power's No. 5 machine. Picture seems focus pretty fairly, but am not quite satisfied, as we do not seem to t light enough on the screen. At 80 feet we used 40 amperes and at 102 are using 60. We have your Hand Book and find it to be of great lue."

What the exact trouble is in this case, I don't know, but this much I n tell you flatly, viz.: the added distance will have practically no effect, far as the matter of curtain illumination is concerned. However, in der to get any good results with that kind of a combination, viz.: two 6½ ndensers and a 6 inch E. F. projection lens, your lamp would have to be etty close to the condensers, which would mean considerable loss of light rough reflection from the surface of the back lens, with increased liability condenser breakage. Of course, when you changed the throw you anged your projection lens, and it seems likely that the trouble must lie in e new lens. With a 6-inch projection lens, if everything is as it should be, u should not have less than two 7½ condensers. Of course, there is some ss of light by reason of the fact that a 6-inch lens sets further away from e aperture than does one of shorter focal length. However, owing to the ncentration of light by the condensers, this, I believe, does not amount to uch. The experience of operators, including myself, has been that with ual amperage as good or better picture is had at 100 feet than at a shorter row. If you will stop and think a moment, common sense will tell you at there could be no possible material depreciation through an additional feet of travel, unless the air were exceedingly hazy, smoky or dusty. Are ur condensers clear pure white or have they a yellowish tinge? Of late ere has been a great deal of complaint of imperfection in the cheaper ndensers. The lens which shows discoloration of any kind, when looked rough edgewise, is not fit for projection work. I would suggest that you ve the exchange send you another projection lens for trial, being sure is of as large diameter as your original lens used on the 80 foot throw. indly advise me as to what the trouble proved to be when it has been finally cated.

KINEMACOLOR.—Jacksonville, Fla., writes: "There has been some dif- rence of opinion in the General Electrical Experimental Department as to e principle involved in the use of kinemacolor color screens. Has your epartment any help to offer in back numbers or in future issues?"

On page 1406, December 17, 1910, issue you will find instructions on the inemacolor projection machine, though not much is said concerning the lor screen principle involved. In fact, that is, to some extent, I believe, ie of the secrets of the process. However, as I understand the matter, in king the Kinemacolor films, a red and green revolving screen, approxi- ately the same as is on the projector, is used in front of the lens. The lors come before the lens alternately and remove all but the red rays from ie picture and all but the green rays from the next one, etc., so that the ctures are really taken with practically nothing but red and green rays. ith, I believe, a very little violet added. When the film is projected the me color scheme is used and it is projected, practically, entirely by red id green rays, the combination of which forms the other colors on the reen. Now I don't state all this as fact, but simply as my understanding the matter. Possibly the Kinemacolor Company of America, 145 W. th Street, New York City, would give you further light on the subject— so, possibly they would not.

LOS ANGELES.—Los Angeles, Cal., writes: "I arrived here three onths ago direct from Gotham. Am a member of Auxiliary Local No. 35, . Y. City, and, knowing you to be a brother member, will attempt to give ou some data such as you requested in January 27th issue. Also, I wish let off a little steam. Everything in the operating room (there are a lot f coops here, but you object to that name) is installed in accordance with ie national electrical code with no changes whatever, and no motor driven iachines. Board of Fire Underwriters of the Pacific Coast is located at 316 ecurity Building, Los Angeles. The local rules emanate from the city elec- ician's office in the City Hall. In all moving picture houses two sets of ed wires must be installed; one for the machine and one for the house, its and other lights. There are about one hundred moving picture theaters ere in winter and something like fifty in summer. More than four hun- red operators' licenses have been issued, and there are fully two operators or every job. Union scale is $21 per week, 8 hours per day. Relief work 7½ cents per hour. Operator's license cost $5 per annum. Moving pic- ire theater license $20 per quarter. Operator's city examination is easy. Vorking hours here are rather bad in most houses, 10 a. m. to 1 p. m. and 30 p. m. to 10.30 p. m. Relief work from 1 p. m. to 5.30 p. m. pays about 10.50 per week. Projection on the same plane as it was in New York (and ill is, Ed.), and you know what that was. In winter there are many ourists' who are willing to work for just enough to live on until winter is ver. This makes it almost impossible to get a job at anything, and se- uring a steady position at operating is a joke. I would, therefore, advise perators to keep away from Los Angeles. The Union here has treated me hite, but they have all they can do to keep their own members working; due to the aforesaid 'tourists,' and also to the fact that almost anyone can get a license, provided he be eighteen years of age. I guess the city needs the 'V.' Now here's the steam part of it: I find that the most owners and managers are from the Middle West, as are also quite a number of operators, so that when an operator from their home town blows in, they take him in and leave you out. This has happened to me twice and the same thing has kept me from other positions. But I am a sticker, and two can play at the game of 'freeze-out.'"

I am glad to hear you say that the Los Angeles Union used you right. That is as it should be. The conditions you describe are not the best by any means, still the man who works in tourist towns is always more or less at the mercy of the man who starts traveling with small financial means, figuring to "work his passage." Denver used to be, and still is, to some extent, cursed with the consumptive plague. That is to say, the Eastern man who goes to Denver for his health, being sick and unable to do much, is willing to work for practically his board. He cannot, of course, be blamed much under the circumstances. Still he works a tremendous hardship on the mechanics and laborers of that city. There is, however, less excuse for the tourist. In order to satisfy his own pleasure in traveling he beats down the conditions of men in the towns he infests. The employment of the "home town man" which you speak of, in preference to others, is perhaps natural.

CONSTABLE! HELP!—Seattle, Wash., writes: "Here is something I do not know: how many degrees Fahrenheit is necessary to ignite gun cotton, also gun powder, in one second?"

My dear boy, I am not an expert in the matter of explosives, though I pretty near explode sometimes at some of the questions sprung on me. In the matter of gun powder, I presume the degrees of heat would depend on the kind and quality of the gun powder. You must understand there are a great many different kinds of gun powder. As to gun cotton, my recollection is, that it does not explode through heat, but through concussion.

CARBON CLAMP RESISTANCE.—Los Angeles, Cal., writes: "Am using A. C. 110 V, 60 cycle through a Bell-Howell economizer. A couple of weeks ago I got a new pair of clamps for my lamp, not the regular Power's clamps but a heavier pair, and where I had been using 50 amperes with the old clamps, I couldn't use it with the new ones. I had to cut it down to 45, and I got just as good light. It was that way for a couple of days, and then I could use 50 or 60 amps. just the same as before. By not being able to use 50 amperes I mean the arc would sputter and raise the very dickens when I would put it up on 50. Kindly let me know what the trouble was. Thought it was my connections getting dirty, but I cleaned them and it didn't make any difference. I am using a Power's No. 6. Got about 96 foot throw; picture is about 13 x 16. Am getting a swell picture, too; clear and steady as a rock. The man I am working for knows what a good picture is, and when I need anything I don't have to wait two or three weeks, like some poor fellows do, before I get it."

Apparently, if you have described matters rightly, your trouble is due to resistance in the carbon clamps. The resistance of the new pair of clamps would be considerably less than after they had been subjected to the mechanical heat of the arc for a short time. However, these clamps have such large cross section that the added resistance should have no appreciable effect. Did you not cut off the end of your lamp leads when you installed those new clamps? If so, it would explain the whole matter. The lamp leads inside the lamp house being subjected to mechanical, as well as electrical, heat oxidize quite rapidly, and their resistance raises in proportion. If you are using 60 amperes or even 50, you will do well to amputate the asbestos wire where it comes out of the lamphouse at least once a week, throwing the part inside the lamphouse away. You will find this matter dealt with to some extent on page 62 of the Handbook, a copy of which I presume you have. Try the experiment of cutting these wires off and see if your light does not immediately improve.

LEAD-ALUMINUM RECTIFIER.—Princeton, N. J., sends in matter concerning the lead-aluminum rectifier, together with sketches. While we appreciate the trouble Princeton has taken, still we do not feel disposed to consume more space on the proposition, as we do not consider such a rectifier as of any practical use for the rectification of current for the projection arc. For charging storage batteries and similar work it might be O. K.

MOTOR-GENERATORS.—Washington, D. C., writes: "There have been several letters in your Department questioning motor-generators and the use of oil on armatures, I will therefore give you my experience with them. I am supervisor of the electrical and operating room equipment for several local theaters and test out everything as far as possible before installing. We have had in use, for a period of fifteen months, five Fort Wayne motor-generator direct current sets, 220-50 volt known as "compensarcs." They have given perfect satisfaction. They are constant current, compound wound generators, and the required current variation upon different service is obtained by means of a rheostat (adjustable) in the generator field. We all know that excessive use of oil on commutators will eventually break down the mica insulation, but the Fort Wayne representative instructed us to clean commutators regularly with a rag moistened with some thin oil, not mineral oil. We use three-in-one. We have done this with all small motors, including fans, and the oil has never caused trouble. Of course a little bit of common sense has to be mixed with everything, particularly in the operating room. Wish to add that I know of about a half-dozen other houses in this city that have used the above sets with satisfaction. In fact, all the direct current houses, with the exception of about two, use this type of machine as we were compelled to go on the 220 volt line without arcs nearly two years ago and we experimented with everything on the market and took that which gave the greatest degree of satisfaction."

The correspondent, Mr. A. J. Bachrach, is in general charge of the operating rooms of seven of the Washington theaters. His experience is certainly of value, and I am more than pleased to hear his good report on the D. C. Compensarc. I will take the liberty of asking a little more detailed information as to the modus operandi of handling these machines. I would particularly ask the brother to express his opinion as to whether or not the operator of moderate ability would have serious difficulty in handling either the motor-generator or light. I would like to know how many hours a day the sets have run, on an average, the cost of upkeep and the number, if any, of breakdowns during the eighteen months. In fact, please furnish, if you will, as complete information as possible concerning these sets and their operation. I have noticed that the Fort Wayne people advise the use of a rag moistened with very thin oil on the commutator. Doubtless, my opinion is not to be considered as against theirs, but all the same I still hold to the "compound" idea, provided it is used in moderation. Would be glad to hear from any other men handling such sets.

A QUESTION IN PROJECTION.—Washington (name of town suppressed), asks: "My lens will be 22 ft. above the ground floor. Center of picture, which is 14 ft. wide, will be 7 ft. from stage floor. Throw will be 45 feet; operating room to be in ceiling. Seating space will be 74 ft. long, with a five foot drop from back to front. Will I be able to project a good picture at this angle?"

You have not said whether the lens will be 22 ft. from ground floor at front or rear, and this might make a possible difference of 5 ft. in the angle. Assuming it to be at point of operating room location, that would be midway of the floor pitch, or 2½ feet above the front row of seats. This would mean, assuming the stage to be four feet above the floor at the front of the house, the lens would be 1½ ft. + 5¼ ft. = 6¾ ft., and 22 — 6¾ = 15¼ ft. drop in 45 feet of projection. This would not render the projection of a good picture difficult, were the throw longer, though there will be the inverted keystone effect unless a special aperture plate be had. However, it is always rather difficult to get a first class picture of that size at such short throw under the best conditions. I should say that by very careful selection of a lens you may be able to get fair results, but I certainly would locate the operating room further back if it is possible to do so. With careful selection of lenses it is possible to project a really fine picture with very heavy drop on a throw of 75 feet or more. It is the short throw which makes the matter more difficult.

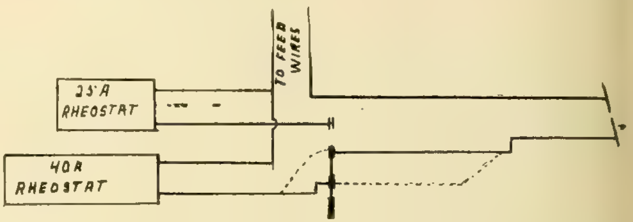
LIGHT TROUBLE.—New Franklin, Mo., writes: "We are in a small town where there is no current. Are using tank gas. Have a Motiograph machine, 1909 model, No. 2 projection lens, 6½ x 7½ condensing lens; first named next the light. Throw 43½ ft., picture 11 ft. Trouble is poor light on the screen. About one foot all around the picture is dark, and picture on this part of screen is not sharp and clear. Use ruled mica for focusing. Can get excellent focus in center, but not on margin. The latter is always out of focus. Have tried moving lamphouse back and forth. Now have condenser 12½ inches from film. Have also tried two 6½ condensers without improved result. Light cuts corner of aperture good, except at bottom; seems to be much light wasted there. Have raised and lowered light but without improvement in result. If the waste of light is not at bottom it is at top. Have never been able to get light to cut all corners of aperture equally. Have no trouble with stereopticon projection. It is excellent. Room is small and ceiling low—only 12 feet. Top of picture is only 3 inches from ceiling. Have machine elevated. Lens is only 3 feet from ceiling. This does not give much angle to the projection. It is needless to inform you that we are beginners, but we are anxious to learn."

It seems plain that you have too large a spot. It also seems equally plain that the only thing necessary is to move the lamp further away from the condenser. The explanation of your trouble, as you have set it forth, is so very simple that I fear it is not the right one. Set your burner in such position that the spot is exactly central on aperture, then move the burner back from the condenser until light just covers aperture fully. As to the "out of focus" effect at margin of picture, first be very certain your projection lens is perfectly clean. See page 68 of Handbook. Either your lens is imperfect or else it is dirty around its edges. Should you take the lens apart, remember that, in replacing same, the convex (bulge) side of all lenses goes toward the screen. If this does not remedy matters have your exchange loan you another lens for trial. Your stationery is certainly classy for a new, small house, using gas.

ISOLATED LIGHT PLANT.—Mr. R. E. Spraker, Spraker Amusement Company, Rich Hill, Mo., writes: "I am very much interested in the discussion regarding the different kinds of generators used in private plants for projection purposes. I am going to erect a new moving picture theater here in the near future. The local electric light plant furnishes 220 volts for street arcs only and that on the 'moonlight schedule,' too. This condition of things necessitates the installation of a plant of my own. Had decided that one of the 60-volt outfits so extensively advertised at present would meet the requirements. But your comment on the letter from Winnipeg sets me to thinking. Am I to understand that you think it inadvisable for anyone other than a thorough electrician to attempt the operation of a theater with such a plant? While being more or less familiar with the operation of small 110-volt outfits I am wondering if I am capable of handling the lower voltage in the proper manner. Do you think it impractical to try to operate the incandescent house lights and the projector arc on the same 60-volt generator? The ads and literature published by the firms having these outfits for sale give one the impression that this would all be smooth sailing. But their business is to sell light plants. There is also the possibility that they have not thoroughly investigated the subject. I will certainly appreciate any advice you may see fit to offer me."

I see that Neighbor Spraker has misconstrued my remarks. However, I guess I am to blame for that. I did not put the matter right. Winnipeg's letter was in line with the present discussion of a no-resistance generator for the arc light, but his argument dealt with something else, as I understood it. However, instead of saying: "This could be done with a 110-volt machine," I should have said: "This could be done with a machine of higher voltage than the arc, using resistance for balance." No, I did not mean to say that one must necessarily be a thorough electrician to operate such a plant, but I do mean that such a one will have better success, with less trouble. However, I think I would use a little higher voltage than 60 if I were in your place. Seventy volts would be better I think. Also get the generator of larger capacity than barely sufficient to generate the current you will use. If it were myself and I proposed using a total of 40 amperes I would get a generator large enough to supply fifty to sixty amperes. It costs more in the first place, but is better in the end, and cheaper also. Will our friends who are operating their own plants kindly favor us by writing Friend Spraker, setting forth their experience?

SOAKING MOTOR BRUSHES.—La Harpe, Ill., writes: "Have had considerable experience on motors ranging from ⅛ to 150 H. P. My experience is that each case of trouble must be treated as a separate proposition. The armature of a motor should have a little end play. This is essential to its proper operation. For the prevention of sparking I recommend the following: remove the brushes and clean them thoroughly; also clean the commutator. Place the brushes in a small can and melt enough pure parafine to cover them. Boil the brushes in the parafine for 15 or 20 minutes, then drain them while they are hot. Brushes treated thus will be so well lubricated that it will be only necessary to wipe off the commutator clean each day while the motor is running. I have found this scheme to be highly satisfactory and to very materially prolong the life of the commutator. Enclosed you will find rough sketch of how I have my machine wired in order to use two rheostats of different capacity. I must join in with your army of readers in praise of the Projection Department, as well as of the whole paper."



Boiling the brushes in parafine is a new one on the Editor. I pass it along to our readers for their experiment and report. As to the rheostat, you were pretty careless when you made that sketch. The dotted line shows how you had it connected. I have, as you see, changed it. The scheme is not at all a bad one. The single throw double pole switch can be located within easy reach of the operator.

BUTTINSKY.—Columbus, Ohio, writes, setting forth the following facts: "He had a manager who was new at the business. He, the correspondent, was very careful in his work, looking over his machine every day. Picture steady as a rock, focused sharp, usually changing focus for different scenes. Felt he was getting paid for good work and gave the best he could. Results were a packed house every evening and two competitors put out of business, or practically so. Audience kept telling manager the pictures were splendid and backed the assertion by coming every evening. Manager sent to exchange and they sent a man claiming to be representative of the manufacturer and this fellow monkeyed with the machine and got it all out of adjustment. Correspondent kept machine covered with oil on account of dampness in the operating room, as inside of operating room is rusty, also upper and lower magazines. The 'Manufacturer's Representative' called correspondent down in front of manager for not taking proper care of the mechanism. After he left a film was put on and the picture jumped, film buckled and shutter was out. Manager ordered correspondent to readjust machine and he refused. Told him to get the aforesaid 'representative' to do it. Also gave manager notice and when time was up quit. Wants to know if he did right. Also wants to know if the machine manufacturer in question sends men around to knock a man trying to do his duty and make a living."

In the first place, if you were doing as you say you were, you are a very careful, painstaking operator. In the second place, I do not believe the man represented the machine manufacturer at all. I don't think that company has a representative in your city. I have sent your letter to the manufacturer. I know exactly how you felt. Very likely I would have done just as you did, still it was wholly a matter of personal pride. Very likely had you remained there would have been no further trouble as certainly the manager must have learned a lesson when the "representative" put things to the bad. There is no question of right or wrong involved. You had the right to give proper notice, which you did, and quit, if you did not wish to remain. I think you probably are very much the same disposition as myself, where such things are involved. I take pride in my work, or did, as an operator, and if the manager is not satisfied and calls in some one else to find out whether or not I knew my business he can go plumb to the Sandwich Islands.

LAID OVER.—I have a most excellent letter from Mr. J. H. Hallberg. It is too long to be printed this issue, therefore is laid over till next week.

QUICK ACTION ON GAUMONT WEEKLY.

Arrangements have been perfected by the Gaumont Company for the speedy dispatch of the Gaumont Weekly to the West and South. This will make this graphic "publication" available all over the continent within five or six days of the release date. With the Gaumont Company's highly improved equipment it will be possible to present "last minute" pictures, thus giving the Weekly a timeliness so frequently lacking in motion pictures. All the foreign pictures, of which there will be three or four hundred feet in each issue, will be contributed by the French Gaumont company and these, like the American views, will be of the latest possible date. The foreign film will be shown here the week following its appearance in Paris. "We have every reason to expect," said Mr. Blaché, manager of the Gaumont Company, recently, "that the Gaumont Weekly will find instant favor with the American public and that its appearance will soon be as eagerly looked for as is that of any of the illustrated newspapers." The first release of the Gaumont Weekly will be on Thursday, February 22nd.

Comments on the Films

"AN ANTIQUE RING" (Lubin), February 10.—A thoroughgoing melodrama of political life in which Mr. Arthur Johnson plays the part of a candidate for the governorship. The opposition bribes his secretary to make up a scandal about him on the eve of election. The man's wife, an antique ring, the stenographer in the candidate's office are used by the secretary to bring about this scandal. The plot is fairly well handled and holds attention; but the ending is not very strong for a melodrama and the whole is old fashioned. The photographs and the acting are very good. It is not a sure feature; but will make a good filler.

"THE DEPUTY AND THE GIRL" (Essanay), February 10.—An interesting study of a woman's heart that is fresh, convincing and commendable. Some one is putting good, hard thought in these Essanay pictures. There is something in them beside the mere struggle. They show sympathy with life and fresh observation and give the spectator something to think about, something for his money. The photographs are fair. Not all of the story is as interesting as its principal situation (the encounter between the deputy and the girl); but the action doesn't drag very noticeably. Mr. Anderson and Miss Fisher play the leads. It is a good feature picture.

"PLAYMATES" (Vitagraph), February 10.—An unusually strong picture for the humanity that it shows. The idea has been used before in "The Little Major," but that story isn't, in externals, anything like this which is wholly fresh. The chief value of the picture comes from the humanity of its scenes. That scene in the parlor, when the little boy comes down in his nightie, pleased the audience very much. Miss Julia Swayne Gordon plays an emotional role as the mother of the little boy, who is played by Flo Foley very well indeed. Miss Mason, in the role of the child's nurse, gives a realistic and highly competent interpretation. Perhaps it is the feature of the week; surely it is a picture to recommend to exhibitors who cater to human beings.

"THE CITY OF DENVER" (Edison), February 10.—A first-class scenic, instructive, well photographed and worth while. It is 575 feet.

"VON WEBER'S LAST WALTZ" (Edison), February 10.—On the same reel with the scenic is this pretty and well acted picture of sentiment. The story is of two lovers who quarreled. Just before the falling out they had heard a piece of music. This music and an old kindly music seller are the means of bringing them together again. The music seller (something of his story is thrown in by double-exposure, dream-pictures) is especially pleasing. The mechanical work is all well done, the story is pleasant and wholesome, the picture with the scenic on the reel will be a desirable and welcome addition to any bill. It is a story for churches, private entertainments, etc.

"HER BOY" (Vitagraph), February 9.—A very tragic picture of Kentucky mountain folk, moonshiners, and of a conflict with excise men. Miss Julia Swayne Gordon plays the lead as the old mother of a son (Mr. Delany) and of a daughter (Miss Gardner). The plot, showing how the son came to be arrested for murder and how the old mother killed him with a rifle bullet to keep him from being hung, is very well knit and loses no time with unimportant things. The incident has happened more than once and is typical of the mountain folk. It is very well presented and is a sure feature. It should be billed as Miss Julia Swayne Gordon's picture.

"THE VAGABONDS" (Kalem), February 9.—A dandy picture of Irish glamour set in typically Irish scenes and played by first-class players. It is a poetic picture of a fascinating vagabond girl and an Irish lad who has a true and loyal sweetheart who saves him. The photographs are good enough and it is a sure and safe feature picture. Miss Gauntier plays the vagabond girl who is wandering about the country with her old father. It should be advertised as a poetic, Irish picture, taken in Ireland.

"HER BOYS" (Essanay), February 9.—There are two distinct parts to this picture—when the poor mother's boys were children and twenty years later. The first part isn't so interesting as the second, which is played by good and experienced players and is much more convincing. The mother is parted from both her boys, because of poverty. Each of them has a Bible inscribed by the same minister and, in later years, in a court room scene, these are the means of bringing the mother and her boys together again. There is sentiment in the picture and sentimentality also; it isn't a great picture, or a feature, but it will serve as a filler.

"THE HORSESHOE" (Selig), February 8.—A melodramatic picture dealing with office life. It shows us a pretty stenographer, an unmarried employer and a clerk in the office. He loves her. She won't love him. To get revenge he tries to play her a mean trick. A horseshoe that she had picked up is utilized in a fresh and satisfying way to bring the story to its climax. The picture makes good entertainment and spectators will be pleased to see it. The photographs are only so so.

"A SISTER'S LOVE" (Biograph), February 8.—An interesting picture of a sister's devotion to a younger sister. The man she loved wanted her to marry him, but she refused because her sister needed her care. It was hard to show in a moving picture all the complicated reasons why she had to refuse this man's offer. In matters like this the short story has as much advantage over the moving picture as the moving picture has the advantage when showing action and dramatic situations. The Biograph Company seems to be experimenting in scene relationship. The scenes as arranged in this picture carry it forward very speedily, perhaps a little too quickly for the mind, which has to keep up with it. It is a good picture, not so original as some recent Biographs, but substantial and with plenty of fresh interest. It is a picture to help give a bill dignity.

"THE MELODY OF LOVE" (Essanay), February 8.—For review see page 401, Feb. 3, 1912.

"DODGING THE SHERIFF" (Melies), February 8.—See page 210, January 20, 1912.

"THE CORSICAN BROTHERS" (Edison), February 9.—See page 192, January 20.

"A TERRIBLE LESSON" (Solax), February 16. For review see page 491, issue of February 10, 1912.

"THE TABLES TURNED" (Imp), February 17. See page 491, issue of February 10, 1912.

"BRONCHO BILLY AND THE SCHOOLMISTRESS" (Essanay), February 3. Another good Snakeville story in which Broncho Billey (Anderson) plays a very human heart. In outline, it looks like other Western love stories in which a new schoolmistress and two rival cowboys figure; but it is very well acted throughout. Essany stories are so human of recent weeks that they permit good acting. The photographs also are good and the picture plainly pleased the audience. It can be featured on ordinary occasions.

"CAPTURED BY WIRELESS" (Eclipse), February 7.—A story of a French banker who absconded with a gripful of money and caught a ship to America, but was arrested by the great detective who used wireless in making arrangements to capture him. It is a picture with some very interesting scenes, a big liner, a wireless station, etc. It will serve as a fair filler.

"A BIRD'S-EYE VIEW OF ROTTERDAM" (Eclipse), February 7.—This excellent scenic is so short that it is off the screen before one fairly realizes it. In quality is very praiseworthy and, short as it is, well worth seeing.

"TRICKED INTO HAPPINESS" (Lubin), February 7.—An old-fashioned melodrama by the Lubin premier company; but so inartistic, both in construction and in its lack of humanity, that it seemed quite unworthy of the distinguished talent that presented it. It tells a story that could hardly be acted and it gets no real grip on the emotions. When, in this picture, the younger sister's fiance goes blind, she runs away with another man. Older sister, out of pity, takes her place, marries the man and has a baby by him, he still thinking her his old fiancée. But what follows is worse. Younger sister is unhappy with her drunken husband and arrives home at the time of the operation that saves the man's sight. Man sees younger sister as bandage is removed and holds out his arms. Younger sister runs past crib, where the older sister stands near the baby, and falls into man's arms. (Audience laughs generally.) Mother presents evidence that "shows up" younger sister and older sister brings baby forward and places it in husband's arms. Final pretty scene. At the end six or seven applauded.

"A CURE FOR JEALOUSY" (Lubin), February 5.—A comedy that in its first part is a little heavy and hardly comes up to the best Lubin spirit, which is sparkling and thoroughly delightful. In the last part, however, it wakes up and is brighter. The audience enjoyed the ending scenes. Mr. Johnson plays in it the role of jealous husband who gets his trusted friend to make love to his wife to find out whether she is true or not. His wife overhears the plot. In the end he becomes jealous of his friend until his friend's wife appears. It is well photographed and set and will serve as a filler.
